Dear Mr. Hammons:-

I wish to congratulate you upon securing the "Message of Emil Coue" as I believe this will be one of the outstanding attractions for the theatres. The public are apparently more wrapt up in this subject than anything that has happened in many years.

We are so thoroughly impressed with the box office value of this attraction that we have broken established precedent and booked this attraction day and date in all of our theatres. In addition to this, we are appropriating a good deal of extra money for special advertising.

Tuesday, despite severe snow-storm, did well; Wednesday very big. Look for a big week. Patrons were all pleased with acting, direction and photography, all of which were excellent. Author, title and cast, if played up big, will prove of big box-office value to any theatre.

-KAISER EXILE!

Presented by Fred E. Hamlin

Here is the answer, graphically and realistically flashed on the screen, to the great question:

You see in this film the aged, broken and helpless man who deluged Europe in blood that his towering vanity might triumph for a moment in history.

What Did the War Accomplish?

He paces his twenty-acre, barbed-wire enclosed prison like a caged lion, but with none of the lion's dignity. His companions are a pair of dachshunds!

This is the only motion picture ever taken of the ex-Kaiser in exile. It was obtained by a former school-mate of the ex-Crown Prince, who smuggled a specially constructed motion-picture camera into the estate at Doorn, and caught the one-time "war lord" at close range under the pretext of photographing landscapes and flower gardens.

Many of its moments are startling. Hanford MacNider, former head of the American Legion says:

"It appears to me as an epoch-making event in the screen industry, in that it gives a most faithful and realistic description of how the once all-powerful German War Lord is forced to end his declining years, isolated and alone, a pitiful figure in the world of affairs."

Book it now, while newspapers are giving pages of publicity to this sensational film.

The Editor's Views

The Brass Band Review — The Uniform Contract and the Unanimous Apathy — What's a Good Title?

WE have just read a letter from an exhibitor on the subject of trade paper reviews.

No—you're wrong—he isn't lambasting us for not panning poor pictures with sufficient severity. He has a few words to say on that point, but they are incidental.

His real complaint is that trade papers do not achieve the proper pitch of enthusiasm on the worth-while productions—the rare pictures that stand far above even those rated as "pretty good."

As a case in evidence he cites "Grandma's Boy."

"Here is a picture on which you could have used every adjective in the dictionary. It would have meant additional money to me and to every exhibitor who played this special to have been aroused to even greater enthusiasm before his showing."

We glanced over the reviews on "Grandma's Boy." They were unanimous in praise, overflowing in superlative.

But this is apparently not enough for this particular feature, and for a half dozen others that arrive in the course of a film year.

There is logic in this exhibitor's position. We can see it and appreciate it.

For our part we are going to call out the brass bands the next time we see a "hundred per cent. plus" attraction. The trumpets will blare and the sirens screech.

We'll let you know, Friend Exhibitor.

After that announcement we will have to watch our step to be sure we don't send in a false alarm the first time we ring the bells.

THERE are rotten pictures, poor pictures, ordinary pictures, fair pictures, good pictures, very good pictures, wonderful pictures, and —er, er, knockouts, whales, sure-fire pictures, whatever YOUR particular adjective is for the rarities.

The reviewer's troubles increase as the picture steps up in the classification.

This is strange, but true. The ones that rank as "rotten" usually succeed in escaping to the "sticks" without the christening of a trade paper review.

The "poor" picture is easily enough recognized, labelled as such, and very rarely is a word of complaint heard from any source.

But when it comes to that picture that falls somewhere between the "good" and the "knockout" levels—there's the rub.

And there, it must be said, is where exhibitors also differ widely and emphatically.

The difference is that the individual exhibitor is set and firm in his view. If HE says the picture is a knockout—it is; if HE says it is ordinary—so it must be.

The reviewer finds a temptation to distrust himself. "I think it's great," he murmurs, "but I wonder if I am allowing my personal enthusiasm to carry me away?"

The advertising pages show that almost any kind of review can be clipped "somewhere" for almost any kind of picture.

WE talked with a circuit owner this week who is trying to look twelve months ahead for the purpose of deciding whether to build an apartment house or a theatre on a valuable site he now controls.

His principle worry is, of course, a purely local one—concerned with the first-run situation in his city and its possible effect on his ability to secure certain product.

But he has other worries.

"Where are rentals going to?" he said. "I don't mean prices on 'extraordinary specials.' They don't worry me. When a picture is 'there' one hundred per cent. two business men never have any trouble getting together.

"But I use one hundred and four pictures a year—and it's the hundred that keep me guessing. Funny how the prices on that hundred keep edging up, and up, and up—until you find that this year's hundred rate at almost the same price as last year's four.

"Well," he closed. "I suppose it's all in the game. They've got some great sales brains down here in New York now. And it seems to be a drawn battle between that sales brains and the exhibitor.

"Somewhere there must be a limit. But I dunno!"

With Adolph Zukor calling for an art conference and Carl Laemmle establishing scholarships we are surely "breaking into society."

TWO trade paper editors sat at a luncheon table. Said Editor Number One:

"How many letters have you had from exhibitors on the Uniform Contract?"

"Not a one. And you?"

"Same here. How do you account for it?"

"Is an accounting necessary?"

"Surely! Such apathy in the face of the greatest, most important, epochal happening of——"

Oh, rats! It may be all that to the industry and still it isn't anything that hits home to the exhibitor with the force necessary to start letters coming in.

"The contracts of the past merely as contracts have never worried the exhibitor. His grouch was born by the things that happened aside from contracts.

"If he went to a distributor to book a big special and was told he had to take four lemons to get it—that was a grievance. But it had nothing to do with the contract.

"If his print shows up battered and patched—that's a crime. But he doesn't work off his peeve on the contract.

"If he plays out a contract and accidentally has an unused deposit with the exchange which he can't get without booking a picture he doesn't want—he calls the manager a highway robber and distributors a bunch of crooks and lets it go at that. He never expects a contract to change this phase of film life.

"No, contracts have never meant anything—so you can't expect any storm of interest and pro and con discussion as we close the chapter on the old form and start with a new one. Let's wait a year and see what developments this chapter brings."

The fellow who uncovered King Tut's tomb had nothing on the Federal Trade Commission for reviving interest in Ancient History.

AN exhibitor who writes to endorse our recently expressed views on the subject of box office titles also brings up another point that at first thought would seem to lie at the directly opposite pole in the discussion.

"I agree with you," he declares, "that many pictures carry titles that seem to give no consideration to the box office. But I also wish that distributors would not go to the other extreme in the matter of seeking pulling titles.

"The small town theatre deserves some thought in the matter. And the small town theatre is not pandering to the people who read Sex Stories and such rot.

"I don't believe the wise, big city man is, either. But I won't argue that point.

"What I do know positively is that the owner of a theatre in a middle-sized community is working hard, day in and day out, to gain the confidence of the better people in his section, the good will of the local clergy and others who influence Main Street life.

"This is a long, heart-breaking job. And the least setback calls for a lot of additional work and worry.

"If you don't believe that ask a dozen small town men what the lifting of the ban on Arbuckle cost them in prestige and esteem.

"Now if this manager, in order to give his patrons good pictures, has to take titles every now and then that scream of the underworld and sex, you can see what he is up against.

"I think this industry sometimes forgets that we are selling to the great American Home, the Saturday Evening Post readers, not the Sex Story buyers. One class numbers several million—the other a few hundred thousand."

Something worth thinking about there.

Robert E. Welsh

Hearing Soon on Bills Introduced in Effort to End N. Y. Censorship

FOLLOWING the introduction of two more bills in the New York State Legislature, four in all, calling for the immediate repeal of motion picture censorship in this state, a public hearing will be held before the Assembly Ways and Means Committee at the State Capitol probably on March 6, rather than on February 27, as originally planned, Senator Walker desiring the later date. Assemblyman Joseph McGinnies will preside. The hearing will probably get under way about 2 o'clock. The hour, however, depends entirely on how quickly the Legislature transacts the usual day's grist of business.

No bills yet introduced in the New York State Legislature this year have commanded as much attention as the four seeking the elimination of motion picture censorship. During the past week Senator James J. Walker and Assemblyman John J. O'Connor, both New York City lawyers, introduced bills identical with those of Assemblyman Louis A. Cuvillier and Assemblyman Frank Miller. It is claimed that Messrs. Cuvillier and Miller rushed early to introduce these bills in order to "steal the thunder" that is rightfully that of Senator Walker, who fought long and valiantly in an effort to prevent censorship in New York State.

The Walker and the O'Connor bills will be given recognition during the future to the extent that they will be reported out of committee following the hearing.

Preparations are already being made by those in charge of the third floor of the State Capitol for a record-breaking crowd at the coming hearing. If the Assembly Ways and Means room proves inadequate for the crowds, the hearing will be held in either the Assembly or the Senate chambers.

At Albany it is expected that all three members of the New York State Motion Picture Commission will be on hand at the hearing, and that Joseph Levenson, secretary of the commission, will speak for that body in seeking to justify its existence. There is no question but that the forces seeking to continue censorship in New York State will be on hand in large numbers. Already word has gone forth to the churches to send large delegations. Rev. O. R. Miller, who has had been prominent in years past in the move to bring about censorship, has already started at work in an endeavor to round up his forces. It is understood also that the Catholic churches of Albany and Rensselaer will again have representatives present, who will speak in favor of censorship.

Just who will speak in favor of the bills calling for the repeal of the law is not known at the present time. Senator James J. Walker, owing to his knowledge of legislative procedure, and on account of the many clear-cut arguments which he has presented at various times, will appear at the meeting.

After the bill is reported out of committee, which should occur some time the fore part of March, there will come one of the biggest fights of the year in the Legislature to bring about its passage. In the Senate, the bill will no doubt pass, as that body is this year Democratic by one.

The fight itself will be staged in the Assembly, which has a Republican majority of five. The Speaker of the Assembly also comes from the same city as the chairman of the commission, but whether or not the Republicans of the Assembly opposing the bill as a party measure will be able to control the Republican Assemblymen from some of the larger cities is a question that time alone will answer. The whole situation is a ticklish one. Too many of the Assemblymen were returned this year by the scantiest of majorities. If their constituents back home, and particularly if that "back home" includes the smaller places and the country districts, generally favorable to censorship, instruct their Assemblymen that they feel that the law should not be repealed, then the abolishment of motion picture censorship in this state is doubtful. Many Republican Assemblymen are frank in expressing their opinion these days that the bills will not pass.

Censorship Downed

"Little Congress" at Washington Doesn't Even Vote After Debate

Federal censorship of motion pictures has been killed in Washington. It met a decisive defeat by the "little congress," made up of secretaries of senators and congressmen, about a week ago. The four-hour debate and the bill proved to be one of the most interesting and exciting of the session, and when the final vote was taken the "no's" were in such a majority that the advocates of the bill did not even ask for a roll call.

This organization has a membership of nearly 300, and many members of the present congress receive much of their training in the little congress. Weekly meetings are held and the rules of congress are strictly enforced. The speaker selects a subject of national interest each week to be debated upon and assigns two members to speak on each side. Each speaker is allowed thirty minutes and this is followed by the general debate under the five-minute rule.

The heartfelt sympathy of the members of the Chalmers Publishing Company and the staff of Moving Picture World is extended to their co-worker, James W. Donaldson, on the death of his wife, occurring Monday, February 19th.

Words are hushed and the spirit must speak in expressing the depth of feeling towards a valued and popular colleague in his great loss.

Miss West Finds Styles Taken from American Production

"The American motion picture has become virtually the dictator of the world's fashions," said Clare West, costume designer for Cecil B. DeMille's productions, who has just returned from Europe where she has been purchasing materials for the costuming of Mr. DeMille's forth-coming Paramount production of the Ten Commandments.

"I am more proud than ever of our own United States," said Miss West. "Our designers, especially those whose work is reflected on our screen, are months ahead of those of Paris and London, and the Europeans very evidently realize it. Every advance trade showing of a big American production is a mecca for European designers and it won't be long before the leaders of the profession abroad will be sending their representatives over here to attend our American premieres."

Given Long Term Contract with Goldwyn After Competition

The Screen Opportunity contest which was conducted jointly by Goldwyn Pictures Company and Photoplay Magazine, has brought another promising actress into the fold of Goldwyn Players. A long-term contract has just been signed with Jean Haskell, of Seattle, Wash., as a result of that search for new screen faces.

Miss Haskell was the winner in the contest which was opened February 1 and ran to July 1.

The contest was open to any woman seventeen years of age or over who was not a professional actress and to the winner was promised a contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Goldwyn Signs Walsh

Popular Screen Player Placed Under Long-Term Contract

Goldwyn has added another popular screen player to its growing roster of film notables. George Walsh has just been placed under a long-term contract and will be featured in some of Goldwyn's forthcoming big productions.

This contract was given to Mr. Walsh because of the very excellent work which he has done as Rawdon Crawley in Hugo Ballin's production of "Vanity Fair," soon to be released by Goldwyn. Production officials at the studio were unanimous in their choice of Mr. Walsh as a player to be signed up for a term of years.

No announcement has been made as to what his first Goldwyn picture will be, but its identity will undoubtedly be made known in a short time as the production of "Vanity Fair" has been completed.

Jackie Coogan's Tour of the East Series of Triumphal Receptions

JACKIE COOGAN'S ten days in the East—ten days filled with receptions, interviews, entertainments and meetings with public celebrities, including Mayors, Governors of States and the President of the United States—have proven a triumphal procession for the youthful screen star.

From his first reception on Tuesday, February 6, when 10,000 persons greeted the little star at the Grand Central Station, New York, to his trip to Boston February 16 under the auspices of the Boston Post it was captivation, enthusiasm, warm-heartedness everywhere for the youngster who came out of the West with his parents to attend conferences with his new employer, Marcus Loew, and the Metro organization.

Upon the day of his arrival Jackie, after being greeted at the station by "Big Bill" Edwards, a detachment of Naval Reserves, a police escort, and the Catholic Protectory band, had an informal luncheon with Governor Al Smith and his family in their suite at the Biltmore. In the party were the Governor, Mrs. Smith, Miss Emily Smith, Jackie's father, John Coogan; Mr. and Mrs. Glynn, William Reardon, Police Inspector Lahey and Adjutant General Berry. There was much good-natured chaffing between Inspector Lahey and Jackie, the Inspector asking Jackie where he found the big stones he threw in "The Kid."

"If I had seen you run away from that policeman," said the Inspector, threateningly,—

"He wouldn't have done a thing," the Governor interrupted.

This was followed up in the afternoon by meetings with newspaper interviewers, photographers, magazine writers, curiosity seekers, and a shower of invitations from all sorts of individuals and organizations, all of whom wanted to entertain the Metro star and hold testimonial meetings for him.

The following day was spent indoors, the idea being to give Jackie's constitution a chance to get rid of the cold which he acquired in Chicago on his trip eastward. At the Coogan suite in the Biltmore he received a stream of callers,—it seemed as if all the writing men in New York were gathered there.

Jackie's schedule of the next eight days was crowded with event, variety and color.

Chaplin's First Serious Picture Is "Public Opinion" in 10 Reels

FOLLOWING the receipt of its copyright registration in play form, Charles Chaplin announced that the title of his first serious production will be "Public Opinion." The production will be released by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, the subsidiary of United Artists.

The production, which is already well under way and which was temporarily called "Destiny," will be in ten reels, and though written and directed by Chaplin himself, it will star Edna Purviance in the leading role.

"Public Opinion" marks a new departure in most every element that goes to make up motion pictures. In story structure, in acting and in theme the production promises to be revolutionary and Chaplin himself is very emphatic in saying that it is by far his most important contribution to the screen.

There runs through it a new form of acting and a new type of construction dealing with the basics and fundamentals of life with a viewpoint that is more of understanding than of preachment. According to the company's announcement, it presents a problem and comments upon it in interesting fashion rather than solving it, and throughout the action, which vibrates with humor, pathos, tragedy and beauty, there is painted an exquisite portrait of a woman's soul naked in its sincerity though clothed in individuality.

The theme is a startling one, made more so because of utter simplicity and warmth of feeling that permeates it, and it marks Chaplin's own first attempt at serious drama.

"I believe that 'Public Opinion' will be the most important work of my career, and no one realizes more than I what a revolutionary step I am taking in adhering to the original style of construction which I am using," said Charlie Chaplin in speaking of the picture. "And I have the utmost confidence in the public. I have never, nor shall I ever try to talk down to the public or up to the public. The public doesn't need such questionable consideration.

"I am trying to portray, as far as my ability will permit, an intelligent and sincere story, and if I succeed in keeping faith with myself, I have no fears as to the reception of the public. Whether this will be a great picture or just as great a failure, there will be originality in story treatment and acting.

"There will be no armies, no huge acts and no elaborate mechanical effects, but through it all will run a poignant note of human suffering, joy, tragedy and humor.

"There have been a number of queries as to whether I intend to act in the picture or not. I am not going to act in it, not from any policy but because in the story as I truthfully see it there is no place for my character."

Playing opposite Edna Purviance is Adolphe Menjou, while other important members of the cast include Carl Miller, Lydia Knott, Harry Northrup, Malvina Polo and a number of others well known in the picture world.

The staff on the production end of the picture includes Alfred Reeves, general manager; Eddie Sutherland, assistant to Mr. Chaplin, while Arthur Stibolt is technical and art director. Harry D'Arrast and Jean de Limur are aiding in the picture as advisories on details of the manners and customs of France, where the scenes in the production are laid. Roland Totherch is handling the photography, assisted by Jack Wilson.

Schenck Denies Rumor

Joseph M. Schenck, the producer, has issued a statement denying alleged rumors that his organization contemplated working "contrary to the efforts of Will H. Hays."

"I am a member of the Hays organization," he says, "and a firm believer in his work. I have the utmost confidence, respect and admiration for his achievements."

Theatre Owners Meet and Discuss Uniform Contract

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania held their regular monthly luncheon-meeting at the General Forbes Hotel, Pittsburgh, at noon last Friday, February 16. Thirty members of the organization were present, but the slim attendance can probably be blamed on the extremely cold weather.

The main issue of the meeting was to decide on a place to hold the third annual convention of this organization on April 16, 17 and 18 of this year, and it was definitely settled that the convention is to be held in the General Forbes Hotel on these days. The various committees to prepare plans for the annual meeting are now being formed and will be announced in the near future. Secretary Herrington is adding a large number of new names to the list of members, and his work, coupled with Treasurer Hyman Goldberg's, has been a source of much gratification to local exhibitors of late. Accordingly they are looking forward to a lively and productive convention two months hence.

Announcement was made that on the first of March the local headquarters of the organization will be moved from their present location in Room 520 of the State Theatre Building to Room 320 in the same building. This change may be only temporary, as a large number of the members prefer a location in closer proximity to the Forbes Street film section.

The Uniform Contract came up for discussion. At a meeting on February 3 in New York City the M. P. P. D. A., committees representing the New York State Exhibitors' League and the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce joined with the producers-distributors in ratifying the contract. The local organization expressed their disapproval of the contract in its entirety. Michael Rosenbloom, of the Majestic Theatre, Charleroi, one of the most active members of the organization, made an address condemning the contract, saying that it contains nothing whatsoever to favor the exhibitor. Said "Mike": "Any man that signs that contract will be tied hand and foot by the exchange. It will be impossible for him to wiggle out of any part of that contract. Don't sign it if you value your business interests." Mr. Rosenbloom also put in a good word for the independent exchanges, urging his brother exhibitors to support them as much as possible.

A Rev. Hallowell made an address asking that the theatre owners open up their houses to speakers to raise funds for the Near East Relief. He was answered by D. A. Harris, who told him that the M. P. T. O. had a resolution which prohibits speakers of any kind in its members' theatres, stating that this move was necessary to protect themselves, in view of the fact that there have been so many requests for this privilege in the picture theatres, that if all were granted there would not be any time left to show the pictures. He assured Rev. Hallowell that if the organization gets a written request from the President of the United States or one of the Cabinet members to throw open their theatres to speakers for the Near East Relief the members would be glad to co-operate in the work.

President Jerome Casper presided at the meeting, and is to be congratulated for the speedy and efficient manner in which he conducted the meeting, allowing the men to get to their theatres as soon as possible.

Storms Delay Canada Film Service

Big storms have played havoc with booking schedules and film shipping arrangements in various parts of Canada during the past month. Not only did the snow pile up but extreme cold prevailed steadily for several weeks without any sign of letup. In the Maritime Provinces and also in the Prairie Provinces of the Middle West train services were greatly curtailed and great difficulty was experienced in trying to keep all exhibitors supplied with films as contracted.

Theatres in a number of outlying centres were compelled to close for indefinite periods because of the non-arrival of film shipments. For two whole weeks no express packages could be shipped to the Province of Prince Edward Island.

Theatres in the main cities kept going in spite of the weather, the snow, handicapped train services, scarcity of coal and other problems. In the large cities there was little indication that sub-zero weather was keeping patrons at home, because the temperature apparently made little effect in the matter of attendance.

Minister's Sermon in Theatre Based on Film Shown at Time

GEORGE J. SCHADE, owner and manager of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, has discovered a new way of fighting censorship and those who are opposed to Sunday opening of picture theatres. He has invited the Rev. N. H. R. Moore, rector of Grace Episcopal Church to deliver a short sermon each Sunday as part of his picture program. The Rev. Mr. Moore is interested in pictures and believes that he can fight for better screen entertainment by co-operating with the exhibitor than he can by making a stand against picture houses.

During his second "sermonette" on pictures, the Schade Theatre was showing Anita Stewart in "Rose of the Sea," a First National attraction and the minister used part of this story to show that if picture goers thought a little more of the purposes of the pictures instead of just wanting to be amused they would soon force theatre managers to show on the screen only those pictures that contributed to the betterment of civilization.

The Rev. Mr. Moore said in part: "I am glad to meet you as motion picture fans for, in my opinion, motion pictures are doing a great work in the interest of broader enlightenment, loftier educational ideals and higher moral tones. But they can be made better and you are the ones to make them better.

"I don't have to tell you that there are good pictures and bad pictures. I believe that the trend is toward good pictures. Some of you don't think deeply enough. You allow the good and the bad pictures to come and go without advertising the fact that this picture is good and that one bad. If you do this the good pictures will be rewarded and the bad ones won't get patronage, and even for selfish reasons you will profit because you will force cleaner and better screen entertainment."

The Rev. Mr. Moore then talked on the sermon he deduced from the story of "Rose of the Sea," declaring that it showed that love and right doing always brought just rewards, that it conquered pride and misunderstandings.

The "sermonette" made a great hit with the Schade audience.

To Distribute Trailers

Paramount has made arrangements with the National Screen Service, whose offices are at 126 West Forty-sixth Street, New York, and 732 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, for the distribution of the de luxe trailers on its big productions, similar to those which were issued on "Blood and Sand," "Fool's Paradise" and other pictures.

Lloyd Weds Mildred Davis

A telegram to Pathe from the Hal Roach Studios confirms the newspaper report that Harold Lloyd has married Mildred Davis, leading lady in all his comedies released in the last three years. St. Johns Episcopal Church, Los Angeles, was the scene of a quiet wedding on February 10, the Rev. Dr. Davidson performing the ceremony. Lloyd's brother, Gaylord Lloyd, and Jane Thompson were the only witnesses. The bridal couple went direct from the church on a short honeymoon trip to San Diego and San Francisco.

To Hold Celebration

Arrangements have been completed by the Caribbean Film Company of Havana, for a Paramount week celebration the week of April 8, in honor of the fifth anniversary of the company. Advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, indicate that Cuba's first Paramount week will be a record-breaking celebration for the motion picture industry in the island.

Signed by Paramount

Wesley Ruggles, who directed Walter Hiers in his first starring picture for Paramount, has been signed for a long-term contract as a permanent addition to the Paramount West Coast studio, according to an announcement just made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Wisconsin Bill Rouses Exhibitors

CHILDREN under sixteen would be prohibited from viewing motion pictures not approved either by the national board of censors or a local censor board, unless accompanied by parents or guardians, under a bill introduced in the Wisconsin Senate by Senator Howard Teasdale.

The provisions of the bill would exempt educational historical and current event films. In cases where a picture has not been passed by the national board, the bill provides that a local board of three members shall be appointed by the city, town or village board.

First violations would call for a fine of not more than $25, to be paid by the exhibitor. A second offense would carry with it a fine of $100 and a ninety-day sentence in jail.

With bills such as these to contend with, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, through Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary, has called upon the F. I. L. M. Club of Wisconsin to aid in the fight against obnoxious legislation. As a result, George L. Levine, president of the film men, has announced that he will appoint a legislative committee to work with the exhibitors.

A letter sent by Mr. Baumann to the film organization calls attention to the fact that the organization must unite to defeat efforts to throttle the industry. The letter follows:

"We are again on the eve of a legislative battle, as you may well know.

"This office is in receipt of information that a very drastic censorship bill is liable to be proposed some time during the session of the present State Legislature. This is only one of the measures that we have heard it rumored is coming up.

"It therefore becomes necessary that the Joint Legislative Committee, which has been dormant for approximately a year and a half, again become active, and I would suggest that at the next regular meeting of your organization a committee be appointed with full powers to act on a joint legislative committee similar to the one that functioned at the last session of the Legislature."

Adopts Integral System of Production for Preferred

B. P. SCHULBERG, who is making Preferred Pictures for Al Lichtman release, has inaugurated at the Schulberg Studios in Los Angeles a complete system of picture production on an integral basis as opposed to the unit plan generally employed. Under the unit plan each director has an organization of his own, whereas the integral system worked out by Schulberg involves the operation of the entire studio under one head, aided by experts in charge of each department of production.

It is Schulberg's belief that better results can be obtained by the use of the biggest men and women in their respective fields than by hiring several less capable persons to do similar work with each of four or five companies. If one man heads each department and, by means of a well organized machine, succeeds in spreading his genius over half a dozen companies, the plan is far more practical.

An initial move toward its perfection was the splitting up of what has been known heretofore as the scenario department into two separate working units—the department of adaptations and the department of story producing. Olga Printzlau, for many years scenarist for William de Mille, has signed a long term contract to head the former. She will have complete charge of all scenarios before they are turned over to the directors.

Eve Unsell and a number of literary assistants will comprise the department of story producing. It is their duty to follow the story from the first crank of the camera to the last stages of editing and titling.

This plan of production was put in effect just before the "shooting" of "April Showers" and "Mothers-in-Law," the stories now in the making at the Schulberg Studios under Directors Tom Forman and Gasnier, respectively. Victor L. Schertzinger will also begin directing special productions for Al Lichtman release in the near future.

Felix Orman Resigns

Felix Orman has discontinued his work as literary, casting and publicity director of the J. Stuart Blackton Photoplays, London, England, which he has held for two years.

Carlos Leaves Fox

Well Known Film Man Plans to Launch Independent Activities

Abe Carlos, for many years affiliated with the Fox Film Corporation, has severed his connection with that firm under circumstances of the most friendly nature, for the purpose of embarking upon activities of a nature which he expects soon to announce.

Mr. Carlos is a figure in filmdom, known for his executive ability and business acumen. From the days when, in 1907, he started with a chain of the small theatres then called Nickelodens, when he became the first secretary of the first exhibitors' league, he has been active in his efforts to treat sympathetically the problems of producer and exhibitor.

During his long and pleasant association with Mr. Fox, Abe Carlos has made himself prominent through his organization of the Fox West Coast studios in 1916, his activities in Jamaica in expediting the production of "The Daughter of the Gods," and in the establishing of Fox exchanges throughout Europe.

Mr. Carlos' most recent activity was the extensive tour made of the Central Empires, Czecho-Slovaika, Poland and other countries. Two weeks ago he decided to enter into independent activities, severing his connection with the Fox organization with the friendliest parting.

Mr. Carlos is not ready to announce his future plans, but expects to put them into practice very shortly. Temporarily he has offices with Export & Import Film Company.

Buys Bijou Theatre

New England Theatres, Inc., has sold the Bijou Theatre, at Barre, Vt., to Margaret McKenna, of that city.

Cosmopolitan Now Ally of Goldwyn

In the future Goldwyn instead of Paramount will distribute the Cosmopolitan productions made by the International Film Corporation, of which William Randolph Hearst is head. Thus it develops that one of the most interesting rumors of recent date had its origin in fact, for Frank J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn, has confirmed it. He said that Cosmopolitan's contract with Paramount has been completed so that all future Cosmopolitan productions can go through Goldwyn. It is announced that this is merely a distributing arrangement, having no bearing on the production of films by either Goldwyn or Cosmopolitan. None of the companies involved would discuss the reasons for the change.

Order Criticism Cut

Ohio Censors Eliminate Remarks on Censorship from Film

Pathe has received notice that the Ohio Board of Censors has ordered the following eliminated from Topics of the Day, No. 4:

"Dissatisfaction with the operation of censorship laws, as with the principle underlying them, is becoming more and more apparent. Every community has general laws adequately prohibiting exhibition of the indecent. These are drastic enough to take care of any situation that might arise. People do not need censorship."

There are other censors, says Pathe, whose official acts show that they are opposed to permitting the screen to censure the censors. Recently the Daily Tribune-Republican of Greeley, Col., printed a sharp editorial criticism of the act of Mrs. Elfie Tew, the local motion picture censor, in refusing to permit an issue of Topics of the Day to be screened in a local theatre until a similar criticism of the principle of censorship had been cut out of it. The Tribune-Republican editorial contained this comment:

"The removal of the above editorial comment from Topics of the Day epitomized more than anything ever brought to the attention of the writer the inherent evil of motion picture censorship. It's not 'protect the public,' but 'protect my job.'

Signs New Producer

Gable to Film Balzac's Novel "Magic Skin" for Goldwyn

Goldwyn has made arrangements for the handling of another great novel upon the screen. A contract has been signed with Gilbert Gable, a new producer, to make for it, through Achievement Films, Inc., a big special production of "The Magic Skin," one of Honore de Balzac's earlier and most successful novels.

The production is to be a notable one in its treatment, its cast and in its pictorial qualities. The opportunities for magnificent pictorial treatment are unlimited in this novel, and that they will be realized is indicated by the fact that Charles Whittaker has been engaged to adapt the story.

Says Rentals Have Greatly Increased

Largely increased rentals have been brought about by the organized producers and distributors under the leadership of the organization headed by Will Hays, said Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State, in an address before the A. M. P. A. Wednesday. He placed the increase at 25 per cent.

Despite his statements regarding the increased rentals, however, O'Reilly gave much praise to Will Hays. Speaking of the uniform contract, he stated that it is a big advance for the benefit of exhibitors over the present form of contract. He said that only "film politicians" and their followers objected to the "fancied wrongs" in the contract.

Ontario to Censor Advertising Copy

FORMAL notice has been served on the moving picture exchanges and theatres in Ontario that censorship will be imposed immediately on all advertising copy for use in connection with the presentation of any moving picture production in the Province of Ontario. Announcement to this effect was served on February 12 to the Toronto film distributors by Major Hamilton, chairman of the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, the official notification pointing out that all advertising matter, including newspaper copy, must be submitted to the advertising department of the Board of Censors, 34 Richmond Street West, Toronto, before it can be used in any way in Ontario.

For some time past, the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors has had power, by virtue of an order-in-council sanctioning the regulation, to censor all forms of moving picture advertising, including bill boards, newspaper displays, newspaper readers, periodical publications, lantern slides, banners, heralds, painted signs, etc. Announcement was made about one year ago that the regulations would be put into effect, but the law was never enforced, largely because many of the newspapers in cities outside of Toronto pointed to the impracticability of sending local theatre advertisements for censorship before it was used.

"There never has been a legal opinion as to whether the film exchanges can be held responsible for theatre advertising," declared Mr. J. A. Cooper, Toronto representative of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association. "It will be impossible to handle newspaper advertising if it has to be censored by the Board of Censors."

Mr. Cooper formally asked for a stay of proceedings immediately after notice was received from the Government regarding the advertising censorship to enable the exchange managers to discuss the situation with a view to offering suggestions to the Government in the matter.

Inviolability of Contracts Sustained in Court Decision

A DECISION of the most importance to both distributor and exhibitor has just been handed down by a California court. In effect it sustains the inviolability of contracts regardless of whether the pictures mentioned in the contract have been played, and follows closly a recent decision of the Massachusetts courts in a similar case. The Boston decision established a precedent which has now been made doubly secure by the decision of th California courts.

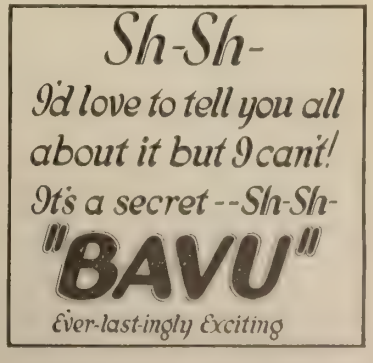
As in the Boston case, the suit brought in California was instituted by Vitagraph. The action was brought against the Liberty Theatre Corporation, which owned picture theatres in Fresno and San Jose. Vitagraph alleged that the defendant contracted for several Larry Semon comedies for both of its theatres, but later transferred its interest in the Fresno Theatre to Kehrlein Bros., who played one comedy, but in paying attempted to deduct the amount of the deposit on the contract and cancel the contract, asserting that the price was too high.

The Liberty Theatre Corporation, which completed its contract so far as the San Jose theatre was concerned, and renewed it under the same terms, was then sued by Vitagraph for $1,200 damages, representing the contract value of the unplayed pictures in Fresno.

The defense offered by the Liberty Theatre Corporation was entirely different than that offered in the Boston case, although the same issue, the inviolability of the contract, was involved. The California defendants attacked the legality of the contract for lack of mutuality and in abatement of damages sought to prove that Vitagraph played the comedies involved in towns surrounding Fresno after the contract had been cancelled, asserting that the first run gave them protection in those nearby towns. The court decided otherwise and rendered a verdict for Vitagraph for the full amount with interest and costs.

Lawrence Baratte Dies

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, received a telegram a few days ago advising him of the death in Salt Lake City of Lawrence J. Baratte, Associated's branch sales manager in the Utah capital. Mr. Baratte was ill several months and spent some time in the Mayo institution at Rochester, Minn. When he returned to Salt Lake City a few months ago his friends believed he was well on the road to recovery and the news of his death came as a severe shock.



Opens New Department

Goldwyn Studio Has Fully Equipped Research Branch

Consistent with its increased activity in all lines, the Goldwyn studio has inaugurated a complete and fully equipped library and research department in charge of Harriet Morris, who, besides being a graduate of Smith College and special worker in drama courses at University of California, has had five years of motion picture experience with D. W. Griffith, Famous Players-Lasky and others.

Miss Morris will organize the department under supervision of June Mathis, editorial director, along broad lines which will fit it to give advice on matters of costume, properties, customs, modes of life; in fact, any question which might arise in connection with any period. The library will consist not alone of books, but will include hundreds, and finally thousands, of filed and indexed pictures of all sorts.

The studio has had, from the beginning, a fine technical library, and, with this addition, it will yield to none in its facilities for research in matters of history and archaeology. The library will contain all the classic and standard fiction, and the best work of the contemporary authors and artists.

Finds Business Good

Associated Exhibitors Official Finds Optimism in Middle West

Roy Crawford, vice-president and treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, returned this week from Topeka, his former home, where he went on business connected with his large theatrical interests in Kansas and Missouri. Mr. Crawford stopped also in Chicago and Kansas City, where he conferred with a number of exhibitors, theatrical and other business men, as well as the branch sales managers of Associated Exhibitors.

"In Chicago, I was told by James Wingfield, who books attractions for an extensive circuit of theatres in the Central Western states, that the road show has 'come back' in great shape. He has never known greater activity in booking of this class of films.

"That a steady improvement in the picture industry is under way is unmistakable. H. W. Willard, the Associated Exhibitors branch sales manager in Chicago, and D. L. Martin, our branch sales manager in Kansas City, both spoke most optimistically of conditions in their respective territories, and the records being made by these and other branches justify their enthusiasm. My trip resulted in encouraging revelations."

"This is truly a picture of life and has for its main theme, the consolation of faith. Taken from the standpoint of artistry and technique. 'The Stream of Life' is indeed worth while. It is a picture of real life, with the humor and pathos mingled as we find it along the way. The realistic bits of child life and especially the rural settings are bound to please."

Will Make Big Specials

Schertzinger to Produce for Preferred Pictures

B. P. Schulberg has signed Victor L. Schertzinger to make special productions for Preferred Pictures to be released through the Al Lichtman Corporation. He will head a unit to operate in addition to those now functioning under Tom Forman and Gasnier.

His contract with Preferred Pictures to direct Lichtman attractions is a result of the increased activities of that organization. The Preferred production program has been augmented considerably since their first announcement of eight pictures a year and it was found that although Gasnier and Forman have worked continually at top speed, they were not sufficient to carry the completion of features along at the rate desired.

Each director at the Preferred Studio now will have his specialty. Schertzinger will be given stories with a maximum of heart interest, Forman will do only typical American plays with Kenneth Harlan assigned to him as a featured player, while Gasnier will make only society dramas and will have Gaston Glass permanently assigned to his unit.

Copyright Decision

Sets Precedent, Howell Claims, After Winning Suit From Goldwyn

A decision likely to influence strongly future litigation concerning infringement of copyright in motion pictures was rendered by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Southern District of New York recently.

Howells Sales Company, having purchased abroad the picture, "Vendetta," starring Pola Negri, it was shown in the Strand Theatre, New York, about December, 1921. About the time of the showing the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation finished a picture based on the story, "Mr. Barnes of New York," of which they owned sole and exclusive motion picture rights.

The latter corporation brought an injunction. The Howells organization claimed that they were innocent parties in the matter, not knowing that their picture was based on or had any similarity to the story owned by Goldwyn, and on appeal, through their attorneys, raised the novel point that even though Goldwyn owned the exclusive motion picture right to the story, they were a mere licensee and could not stop an infringement. The court sustained this point, vacating the injunction.

Goldwyn then joined Stephens, owner of the copyright with them, and obtained a second injunction. Points previously raised were again advanced, with the addition that inasmuch as Stephens had assigned all of his rights to damages for an infringement to Goldwyn the injunction could not stand. The court, in its decision, vacated the injunction and dismissed the complaint against Howells, stating that Goldwyn as a licensee could not bring the suit and adding Stephens could not inasmuch as he had assigned all rights to damages to Goldwyn.

Anita Stewart Signs

Anita Stewart has signed a contract to be featured by Cosmopolitan Productions and left immediately for Los Angeles to begin work.

The first picture in which Miss Stewart will appear is "The Love Piker" by Frank R. Adams, which originally appeared as a story in Cosmopolitan Magazine. The screen adaptation was made by Frances Marion, and will be directed by E. Mason Hopper.

Goldwyn Buys "R. U. R."

Gets Screen Rights to Guild's Production of Capek's Play

To Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has fallen the screen rights to one of the outstanding theatrical offerings of the century —the theatre guild's production of Karel Capek's most striking and novel play, "R. U. R."—in other words "Rossom's Universal Robots."

No play which has been produced on Broadway in years has aroused so much attention for its unusualness. It is entirely out of the beaten path of theatrical offerings. It has had as big a success in Europe as it is having in New York. The play was written by Karel Capek, a young Czecho-Slovakian who, with his brother, wrote "The World We Live In" (called in the original "The Insect Comedy") which William A. Brady presented in New York this season. Both plays were so unusual in conception and treatment that they have been classed among the outstanding events of a theatrical season which has had an unusually big number of successes.

"From Manger to Cross"

Impersonator of Christ in the Famous Kalem Film Tells His Interesting Story of Its Making

One of the most remarkable contributions to the literature of the films, and one which will keenly interest the studios, is "From Manger to Cross," in which Capt. R. Henderson Bland, who played Christ in the Kalem story of "The Passion," tells the story of the making of the film and more particularly deals with his own emotions while portraying the most trying role ever given any player in the pictures. It is a vital study in self relevation, and while not so intended, does much to explain the wonderful performance he gave.

Captain Bland tells simply of his earlier years and how his studies and reading shaped his thoughts to fit him, as few men are equipped, to interpret the great character, and this in connection with his recital of the actual making of the film will interest a host of those who take small interest in pictures in general. It is an amazingly interesting book, generously illustrated with pictures from the stills of the Kalem story.

It is published by Hodder & Stoughton, London, apparently in connection with the English revival of the production shortly before Christmas, when the English rights passed to new and more energetic management.

"From the Manger to the Cross" in its film form has been seen very little in the United States in the past few years and a new generation of picture-goers know nothing of this story filmed by Kalem in and about Jerusalem, one of the first productions to be made in authentic locations.

Kane on Vacation

When the mercury in New York last Saturday was hovering near a record low point for January, Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, packed his baggage and his golf sticks and climbed aboard the Florida Limited, bound for Palm Beach. Mrs. Kane accompanied him. Arthur S. Kane, Jr., preceded his parents by several days to see that the Florida links were in readiness and the family car had been shipped South well in advance. It is Mr. Kane's first vacation since the summer of 1921 and, besides Palm Beach, Miami, Tampa and Bellair, in Florida, he expects to visit Havana, Cuba.

Government Alleges Combination in Industry Is Hindering Trade

AN amended complaint has been issued by the Federal Trade Commission in its case against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Realart Pictures Corporation,the Stanley Company of America, Stanley Booking Corporation, Black New England Theatres, Inc., Southern Enterprises, Inc., Saenger Amusement Company, Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky,Jules Mastbaum, Alfred S. Black, Stephen A. Lynch and Ernest V. Richards, Jr.

Since the filing of the complaint the theatres of the Alfred S. Black circuit have been bought by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and also those of the Southern Enterprises. Some of the latter, however, were then re-sold by Famous Players.

The complaint goes into considerable detail regarding the method in which moving pictures are produced to show that it is interstate traffic and, as such, subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. In Paragraph 5, it is charged that the respondents Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have conspired and confederated together with the respondents Jules Mastbaum, Alfred S. Black, Stephen A. Lynch and Ernest V. Richards, Jr., and Realart Pictures Corporation, The Stanley Company of America, Stanley Booking Corporation, Black New England Theatres, Inc., Southern Enterprises, Inc., and Saenger Amusement Company to unduly hinder competition in the production of motion picture films in interstate and foreign commerce and to control, dominate, monopolize or attempt to monopolize the motion picture industry. For the purpose of carrying out this alleged conspiracy, it is charged, Famous Players acquired the Paramount Pictures Corporation, Artcraft Pictures Corporation and Realart Pictures Corporation, the last named of which, it is charged, was formed by Famous Players, ostensibly as a separate and independent organization, the connection of which to Famous Players was not divulged to the public.

The complaint further charges that: "To further carry out and consummate the object of the conspiracy charged in Paragraph Five hereof, and as a part thereof, in the years 1918 and 1919 the respondents Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, together with the respondents Jules Mastbaum, Alfred S. Black, Stephen A. Lynch and Ernest V. Richards, Jr., the Stanley Company of America, Stanley Booking Corporation, Black New England Theatres, Inc., Southern Enterprises, Inc., and Saenger Amusement Company, each with the knowledge of the object of the conspiracy theretofore conceived by Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, entered into a progressive program which they have consistently adhered to ever since, of acquiring or controlling, by purchase or otherwise, motion picture theatres throughout the United States, and more particularly first-run theatres, and of compelling and coercing exhibitors throughout the United States to book and exhibit all the motion picture films produced or distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; and of inducing and compelling such exhibitors to book a substantial number or 'block' of films by refusing to lease a given film or films, unless the exhibitors also book a substantial number or 'block' of other films, the exhibition of all of which will take up either the whole or a large portion of their available exhibiting time and close their theatres to the films of producers or distributors who are competitors of said Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; and the respondents, Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation procured millions of dollars to put said program in successful operation.

"As a result of the carrying out of said progressive program of acquiring or controlling first run theatres and compelling exhibitors to book all or a substantial 'block' of its product, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has unduly hindered and is unduly hindering competitors, in that competitor producers and distributors are unable to procure the first run showings for their product that are essential to the financially successful motion picture producer as heretofore alleged; and by and through all of the acts hereinbefore alleged said Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have built up and now possess and exercise a dominating control over the Motion Picture Industry that has a dangerous tendency to give them a complete monopoly therein.

"As a further result thereof Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the largest theatre owner in the world, and in one week in the year 1920 more than 6,000 American theatres, or approximately one-third of all the motion picture theatres in the United States, showed nothing but Paramount pictures, and about 67 cents of every dollar that was paid to enter motion picture theatres was paid to enter those theatres which displayed Paramount pictures.

"In acquiring or controlling, and in attempting to acquire or control, motion picture theatres, the respondent conspirators have coerced and intimidated and attempted to coerce and intimidate motion picture theatre owners or exhibitors by divers means and methods among which were the following, to-wit:

(a) Threatening to build or lease and/or operate theatres in competition with exhibitors who refused to sell or lease their houses;

(b) Threatening to cut off or interfere with the film service of such exhibitors who refused to so sell or lease their theatres;

(c) Secretly offering higher rentals, effective upon expiration of leases held by exhibitors who refused to sell or lease such theatres;

(d) Temporarily reducing the price of admission charged by theatres owned or controlled by the respondents, below that charged by exhibitors who refused to sell or lease their theatres.

"In compelling or attempting to compel independent exhibitors to book and exhibit the motion picture films produced or distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, these respondent conspirators have coerced and intimidated, and attempted to coerce and intimidate, exhibitors by various means and methods, among which are the following, to wit:

(a) Threatening to build or lease and/or operate theatres in competition with independent exhibitors who refused to book and exhibit such films;

(b) Interfering with the film service of such independent exhibitors and causing the cancellation of contracts for service between such exhibitors and producers;

(c) Disparaging independent exhibitors who refused to exhibit such pictures, by means of advertisements placed in newspapers circulated throughout the territory in which such independent exhibitors' theatres were located;

(d) Inducing, and seeking to induce, independent exhibitors who had contracts of release for the exhibition of motion picture films produced by competitor producers, to cancel such contracts or refuse to make such contracts, by offering to give and giving such exhibitors, motion picture films produced and distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for nominal sums of money, or free of charge.

"And in furthering and carrying out the aforesaid conspiracy, said respondents have used various other fraudulent and unfair methods to exclude competitors from producing, distributing or exhibiting their motion picture films."

The companies and persons named as respondents in the case are required to file an answer to the charges with the commission within 30 days, and it is announced that a hearing will then be set.

New Head for "U" City

Bernheim Made Director General and Boushey Production Manager

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has appointed two new executives to conduct the affairs of Universal City, the big studio plant of that concern. One is a veteran of many years' experience in the motion picture business and the other is a young man of great promise in film circles. The latter, Julius Bernheim, is to be the new director-general of Universal City. The former, Homer A. Boushey, is to be production manager.

Bernheim's appointment comes as a result of the resignation of Irving G. Thalberg, former director-general, who recently left the Universal forces to go with Louis B. Mayer.

Two years ago Bernheim went to Universal City and entered the business office of the studio. During the past twelve months he has been business manager there.

Homer A. Boushey is one of the veteran production experts of the film world. He was production manager for the old Essanay Company, retaining that position until the concern quit producing.

Since Essanay quit producing Boushey has been associated with George K. Spoor in the Spoor-Thompson Machine Company of Chicago a concern handling projection appliances.

Tully to Picturize Novels and Stage Plays for First National

A STATEMENT has been issued by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., setting straight the status of Richard Walton Tully's connection with that firm and correcting erroneous rumors and stories which have been current for some little time past.

Referring to the matter, Richard A. Rowland, Associated First National's general manager, explained that Mr. Tully is to produce two pictures for Associated First National release, the first of which will be "Trilby," in which the young and beautiful French cinema artist, discovered by Mr. Tully on his recent European trip, will play De Maurier's famous barefoot heroine of the Paris Latin Quarter. While in Paris, Mr. Tully shot a number of scenes for the picture. It has been reported that "Trilby" will be directed by James Young. Wilfred Buckland will be the art director. Mr. Tully's relations to the company will be much the same as those of other independent producers releasing through Associated First National insofar as his own productions are concerned.

Hudson to Be Business Manager

Mr. Tully will also become production manager of two new companies which will make several pictures from popular novels and stage successes for First National release next season. Earl J. Hudson, long a member of the executive staff of First National's New York office, will be associated with Mr. Tully as business manager of the two new units.

During his brief career as a motion picture producer, Mr. Tully has given the screen "The Masquerader" and "Omar the Tentmaker," both of which were popular stage successes starring Guy Bates Post.

"It was the success of his first two pictures and the remarkable insight and capability of adapating his long experience as a producer of stage successes to motion picture production, that is responsible for his new contract for two more Richard Walton Tully productions and our decision to invite Mr. Tully to head two new producing units," said Mr. Rowland.

"In all my experience with production I have never seen a stage producer who so readily adapted himself to screen necessities. And he brings a fresh mind to the screen. Considered from a technical viewpoint, both 'Omar the Tentmaker' and 'The Masquerader' are exceptionally good pictures. If Tully is capable of making two such pictures as his initial efforts we have all kinds of confidence in what he will do as he progresses as a producer. It must be remembered that his stage career is remarkable in many ways. He is the author of many successful plays. He has always been his own producer and business manager."

Mr. Tully left New York for Los Angeles last week, accompanied by his daughter, Maya. Mrs. Tully, who is recuperating from a serious illness, will follow him in about a month. Also making the journey to Los Angeles will be Philip V. Kroha, Tully's production manager, and E. Ray Coffin, his publicity director.

Mr. Tully's activities will in no manner affect the other independent producers distributing through Associated First National.

Virginia Censors Firm on Listing of Rejected Films

EFFORTS on the part of the Washington Film Board of Trade to have the Virginia board of censors change its methods, so as to remove the disadvantage under which the local exchanges labor in endeavoring to place films originally rejected by the board but afterwards passed, have been unsuccessful, the board standing firm in its intention of listing rejected films even though the causes of rejection may be removed and the films afterwards passed.

The matter was originally brought up before the board by Sidney Lust. It was pointed out that the Virginia censors issue a bi-weekly bulletin in which they list the rejected pictures. At the time of rejection, however, they notify the exchange of the parts on which their action is based, and extend the privilege of altering the picture and again submitting it, official O. K. being given if the objectionable parts have been removed.

It has been found, however, that once the news of a picture's rejection is circulated among the exhibitors they evince a marked disinclination to show it. Many exhibitors believe that once rejected a film is damned forever, so far as this territory is concerned, while others are afraid to take a chance on a film that has been turned down by the censors, and still others express the opinion that in order to get the film passed the exchange has torn it to pieces.

The film board, following consideration of the matter, appointed Walter Price, of Goldwyn, to take it up personally with the censors, and he requested the censors to adopt the policy of withholding announcement of rejection until the eliminations recommended had been made and the film again offered. If the film was rejected again, he pointed out, it would be proper for the board to list it, but if, as is usually the case, it was passed, the exchange would be saved much difficulty if no publication of rejection the first time had been made.

The only concession the censors would make, however, would be to indictae in their bulletin that a film rejected had the privilege of resubmission.

Two Lenten Films

"A Maker of Men" and "The Stream of Life" Widely Endorsed

Exhibitors, clergymen, news and trade papers have all concurred in their praise of two pictures handled by Plymouth Film Corporation, "The Stream of Life" and "A Maker of Men," as particularly suited to the season prior to Easter.

Both productions have been stamped with the approval of ministers throughout the country, whose praise is unstinted. The pictures are of such a type that they have been shown repeatedly in churches, and their exhibition has won many converts to the screen as an adjunct to other forms of religious teaching.

"The Stream of life," which is styled "A life drama of faith reclaimed," is acclaimed as one of the best religious pictures ever made, combining a story of heart appeal and of tense interest with its lesson of faith. The story is by James K. Sheilds.

"A Maker of Men," which is from the same pen, is strongly endorsed for its entertainment value, combined with a moral that is conveyed "without being sissified," as one minister states.

Accessories, such as one, three and six sheets, tack cards and heralds, slides and photo cards, are supplied, and the film can be secured in both standard and narrow gauge. One of the most valuable assets is the fact that the Plymouth Corporation is able to offer the exhibitor booking these pictures direct co-operation in securing the aid of the local clergy and leading social interests. Exhibitors are urged to get in touch with Plymouth and avail themselves of the opportunities for unusual co-operation.

Conspiracy Charge Made

New Jersey Exhibitor Sues Will Hays, M. P. D. A. and Many Individuals

Will H. Hays, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which he is head, more than thirty film companies and exchanges and about twenty individuals are defendants in a suit for a permanent injunction and $150,000 damages filed in the Supreme Court by Sidney E. Samuelson, Newton, N. J., exhibitor.

The complaint includes sixty clauses. The film companies, distributors and producers are accused of conspiracy to gain control of the industry and to drive out of business all independent exhibitors. Mr. Samuelson also alleges that he is the victim of a conspiracy to work his financial ruin.

He wants damages to cover losses he alleges he has sustained since encountering difficulties with local distributors last year, and asks that the defendants be restrained from an alleged conspiracy in which they refuse him films in accordance with contract.

The specific contract about which the action revolves, according to the complaint, was for the film version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," which Mr. Samuelson says he engaged through the Arrow Exchange, Inc., April 20, 1922. Four days later, he alleges, arrangements for the film were revoked, and later the exchange attempted to make him pay for the film.

Changes in Managers

Goldwyn announces three changes in managers of its branch exchanges as follows:

Effective February 26, P. M. Desbon assumes charge of the New Orleans office, succeeding J. W. Pope, Jr.

Beginning February 19 H. W. Starrett took charge of the Atlanta exchange, succeeding J. L. Marentette. Mr. Starrett was promoted to the resident managership in Atlanta from the Cleveland branch exchange.

Pre-view of "Othello"

Notable Gathering Sees Presentation of Film on Century Roof

The Century roof, recently, was the scene of one of the most notable gatherings that ever assembled to view a motion picture. Ben Blumenthal, who, in conjunction with David P. Howells will present the Shakespearian screen classic, "Othello," at the Criterion Theatre beginning February 25, gave a pre-view of this continental spectacle to a selected company of friends. World famous stage and screen artists attended as did the leading dramatic and motion picture critics of the metropolitan papers.

"Othello" was produced in Germany recently by Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howells. Dimitri Buchowetzki, the noted Russian, directed the spectacle.

Emil Jannings, already famous for his dramatic performances of "Othello" on the speaking stage and who became one of the ranking screen players because of his splendid portrayals in "Passion" and "Henry the Eighth," plays the title role in the new film.

Ica Lenkeffy, said to be the most beautiful woman in Europe, was engaged to play the role of Desdemona.

Posing as Stewart

Man Said to Be Using Checks Forged With Star's Name

In a statement wired east by Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, warning is issued against a man reported operating in the vicinity of Washington, D. C., who poses as Roy Stewart, the Universal star, and attempts to cash checks signed with Roy Stewart's name. Stewart is at Universal City and has been there for many months working in Universal serials and short dramas.

Kosloff in New York

Theodore Kosloff, Paramount character actor and dancer, has arrived in New York to spend two weeks with his brother, Alexis Kosloff, also famous as a dance pantomimist.

The former expects to view the theatrical productions of the season with particular attention to the Russian novelties which have proven so successful this year and of which "La Chauve Souris'" is an example.

To Aid Development

To aid in the artistic development of the motion picture industry, and to attempt to prevent what they term is an attempt by certain combinations to dwarf it, an informal organization has been formed by Mary Pickford, Constance Talmadge, Norma Talmadge, David Wark Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, Harold Lloyd and Charles Chaplin.

This organization was completed in Los Angeles at a conference which ended February 22. It was declared that the organization was necessary to protect the independent producer and the independent exhibitor against commercial combinations, and enable those in the organization to keep faith with the public in the production of worthy pictures.

To Film Paramount Scenes in Palestine

Cecil B. DeMille will probably go to Palestine with a company of Paramount players to film some of the more important scenes of "The Ten Commandments," it was announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Al Kaufman, who has recently been in charge of the company's European production, left New York recently for Los Angeles to confer with Mr. DeMille about the arrangements for the trip. Mr. Kaufman will also go to the Holy Land.

Miss Jeanie Macpherson, who has written all of Mr. DeMille's recent continuities, is on her way to Los Angeles after spending a month in the East at work on the script for the dramatic story of the "Ten Commandments."

Already on the way to the Holy Land is Mrs. Florence Meehan, whom Mr. DeMille dispatched to the Biblical country for authentic data for use in the production. Mrs. Meehan is a much-travelled authority on ancient peoples and customs.

Crandall to Represent District Exhibitors on Arbitration Body

HARRY M. CRANDALL, head of a string of theatres bearing his name, has been selected by the exhibitors' association of the District of Columbia to represent the Washington, D. C. theatre men as a member of the Arbitration Committee to be formed there. This committee will consist of delegates from the associations of the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and the Washington Film Board of Trade.

This new committee will serve just as did the old Grievance Committee which operated so successfully in this territory some years ago ironing out disputes that arose between exchanges and exhibitors and in cleaning up a number of conditions with respect to both branches of the industry that had previously been quite a source of annoyance to all concerned. It was headed by Mr. Crandall and although a large number of cases came up for settlement the findings of the committee were never questioned and were considered to be fair and equitable.

Mr. Crandall suggested the appointment of someone else this time explaining that he had served on the committee and that there were other exhibitors who might desire the opportunity. However those who attended this meeting were unanimous in the belief that his experience as chairman of the committee would better fit him for this work.

He explained how the committee has operated in the past and expressed the belief that it has done and would again do excellent work and would be of great benefit to the industry generally. It has been pointed out that the elimination of objectionable practices in the industry makes the business healthier; that the exhibitor who plays the game straight suffers through the activities of him who takes advantage of opportunities in the other direction, the latter ultimately becoming a part of the overhead cost of operating a distributing office which is naturally reflected in rental fees.

There was some discussion of the coming national convention of the M. P. T. O. A., to be held at Chicago in May. No action was taken at the time looking to the appointment of the three delegates and three alternates to which the local association is entitled to represent it at the convention. This matter will again be considered at the meeting to be held on March 16, next

Clancy Returns from Europe with Material for 3 New Productions

CARL STEARNS CLANCY, whose production, "The Headless Horseman, or The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," starring Will Rogers as Ichabod Crane, has been meeting with widespread success throughout the country, has just returned to the United States after a three months visit to Europe.

Mr. Clancy states that his reason for paying a visit to Europe was to secure new material for future productions and at the same time to get a much needed vacation. During his trip, he visited Ibenez, the author of the "Four Horsemen,' and also Sem Benelli, the Italian author of "The Jest."

During his trip through France he was entertained by Abel Gance and Louis Mercanton, who are two of the foremost moving picture producers of France.

Mr. Clancy further states that, during his trip through France, England and Italy, he visited a great many of the leading motion picture studios in an effort to study the comparative best of production and the difference in methods employed in motion picture making. Mr. Clancy stated that he was greatly impressed by the manner in which the foreign producers met the question of cost.

As a result of his visit, Mr. Clancy states that he will produce a picture in the very near future, the nature and title of which he is not as yet ready to divulge. However, he does admit that it will be a production of Oriental setting and that it might be produced in Tunis. Mr. Clancy further adds that it is his intention if possible to schedule his next releases through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Many Leading Colleges in Laemmle Scholarship Race

THE Laemmle Scholarship, a college endowment offered by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation for the best motion picture scenario written by an undergraduate in American colleges and universities, promises to be the incentive for one of the greatest forward steps in the history of the screen. This is the consensus of opinion of college presidents from coast to coast.

Although the scholarship competition was announced only two weeks ago, the response has been so prompt and so enthusiastic that even Mr. Laemmle himself is astounded by the extent to which interest in the scholarship has grown. Already almost one hundred colleges and universities, among them most of the leading institutions in the country, have definitely lined up for the competition. They have a combined student body of more than 200,000 undergraduates.

Among the best known educational institutions which will compete for the Laemmle Scholarship are Brown University, the University of California, Carnegie Tech, Center College, the University of Chicago, Colgate University, Columbia University, Drexel Institute, Hamilton College, Iowa State, Lehigh, University of Maine, University of Maryland, Mississippi A. & M., University of Missouri, University of Montana, University of Nevada, University of North Carolina, Notre Dame, University of Pennsylvania, Oberlin, Purdue, Rensselaer Polytechnic, Syracuse, Union College, Vassar College, Washington State College, Williams College, and Yale.

The competition will result in the awarding of a minimum of $2,500, and a possible aggregate of $3.000 or more. The award will be made for the best motion picture scenario submitted by an American college undergraduate. A committee of competent judges will be selected to choose the winning scenario. The endowment will consist of $1,000 to the winning student, $1,000 to the endowment fund of his college, and an additional amount not less than $500 to be paid to the winning student for the screen rights to his scenario. The aforementioned scholarship endowment will be awarded to two or more students in case of a tie. Additional scenarios may be acquired by purchase from among those submitted in the competition.

The enhusiasm which Mr. Laemmle's offer has aroused is best indicated by the responses received from the institutions entering the competition.

President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University immediately directed Prof. James C. Egbert, of the University Extension Department, to cooperate with the Universal chief. Prof. Egbert, in accepting the terms of the competition on behalf of President Butler, wrote as follows:

"I have looked over your rules and I am desirous that the students who are interested in this subject should have an opportunity to take part in this contest.

"I think I should say that a proposition of this kind which will lead to the improvement of moving pictures should be endorsed by educational institutions and we welcome this opportunity of taking part in this desirable accomplishment.'

Mr. Thomas B. Appleget, the executive secretary of Brown University, wrote:

"We are very much interested, of course, in the Laemmle Scholarship contest, and we shall at once announce it to our students."

President R. Ames Montgomery, of Center College, the celebrated institution in Kentucky which has recently jumped to the fore as one of the most energetic small colleges in the United States, says:

"Permit me to say it will give me great pleasure to cooperate with you in this.

"I am very much interested in the motion picture business of this country, and in the production of the very best exhibitions for this great public institution. It will give me great pleasure to assist in forwarding in any way the production of this kind of picture for the screen."

President George B. Cutten, of Colgate University, welcomed the competition as an opportunity which will give to college students "an outlet for creative genius which college courses do not encourage any too much."

K. G. Matheson, president of the Drexel Institute, Philadelphia, sees in the Laemmle Scholarship a chance for college students to contribute to the worthy cause of better pictures.

A. F. Woods, president of the University of Maryland, in accepting the endowment offer, said:

"I think this is a very good plan and I have no doubt it will develop an interest that will be worth while, not only to your corporation, but to the colleges and students."

Similar enthusiasm was expressed by President C. H. Clapp of Montana State.

Fire Destroys Cosmopolitan Studios with $600,000 Loss

FIRE destroyed the studios of the Cosmopolitan Productions early Sunday, February 18. The studios were located at 127th street and Second avenue. The loss amounted to between $500,000 and $600,000, and was fully covered by insurance.

Many of the elaborate costumes for which Marion Davies is famous, were burned. Likewise the "sets" and "props" of "Little Old New York," which was being filmed, were destroyed. The negatives, however, which were two-thirds completed, were saved. Other negatives which were in the building at the time, but which also were saved, are those of "Enemies of Women," "The Go-Getter," and "The Nth Commandment," coming Cosmopolitan film.

The fire caused no change in the plans for Cosmopolitan productions. Work on them will be gone through with at the Tilford and Jackson studios, and it is expected they will be released as per schedule.

It was four hours before the firemen could get the fire under control. They were aided by two fireboats in the East River. The blaze was discovered by a watchman, who gave the alarm, but it gained headway too rapidly for the firefighters to smother it in its incipiency. Theye were hindered by hundreds of stretched cables which were heavily charged with electricity.

The studios covered nearly a square block. It will take about three months to have them in running order.

Goldwyn Engages Brabin

To Direct Film Version of Elinor Glyn's "Six Days"

Charles Brabin has been engaged by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to direct its Elinor Glyn film, "Six Days." Mr. Brabin began his motion picture career in 1908 as a director for the old Edison company. Since that time he has directed productions for nearly every large concern in the industry and has made some of the notable photoplays of the past fifteen years.

"Six Days" will be the first picture he has directed in Los Angeles in five years.

Mr. Brabin's most recent photoplay, "Driven," now showing at the Criterion Theatre, New York, is regarded as his finest production and one of the truly big pictures of the year.

In "Six Days," Mr. Brabin will have an opportunity greater even than was his in filming "Driven," and that he will take every advantage of these opportunities and turn out a Goldwyn super-special goes without saying.

Corinne Griffith, who was engaged to play the leading role in the Elinor Glyn picture, has arrived at the studios from New York and active work will soon get under way.

Makes Interesting Talk

Arthur Friend Tells How to Eliminate Industry's Troubles

Arthur Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures, Inc., was the guest speaker at this week's luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

Mr. Friend forecast the time, not so far away, when the motion picture industry's most serious problem—distribution— would be solved.

"When the time comes when distribution can be procured at a reasonable cost," the speaker said, "the producers income will go up and the exhibitors expenses will go down. Both of them today," he said, "are feeding too much money into the middle."

Mr. Friend emphasized his thought that the ills of the industry today were chiefly economic and not faults of morality. He illustrated his points with a wealth of experience gained in his own considerable service in the industry.

Sawyer Takes Vacation

Arthur H. Sawyer, supervizing director of S L Specials, is taking a short vacation. Mr. Sawyer is at present in Chicago, conferring with Herbert Lubin, his associate. Following a brief visit, he will return to California.

Picture Show on Train

After conclusive tests made Lincoln's Birthday on the St. Louis Limited of the Chicago and Alton Railroad arrangements are being completed by Universal for a regular picture show service in a special car on that train. The car is known as the "Movietorium" and is the first of its kind in the history of the film business to be regularly installed in the United States. The initial run of the car, on the St. Louis bound train which left Chicago last Monday, carried a full program of Universal pictures.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

From Newsboy to President of $3,000,000 Firm in 20 Years

A newsboy in 1902 and president of a $3,000,000 theatrical corporation in 1922 is the achievement of Nathan Robbins, of Utica, N. Y., head of the Robbins' Enterprises of Utica, Syracuse and Watertown, N. Y.

Born in Syracuse in 1891, a son of Mr. and Mr. Julius Robbins, "Nate," as he is better known to everyone, after being a newsboy for some time and attending school he was given his first job in a theatre as program boy in the Grand Theatre at a salary of $1 a week. The Grand then was controlled by the Shuberts, also natives of Syracuse. About a year later he became an usher and within a few weeks became head usher. Then he went into the box office as a ticket seller, finally being made treasurer.

He left Syracuse two years later and went to Utica where he was treasurer and assistant manager for the Shuberts in the Shubert Theatre, now the Colonial. Possibly at that time he decided that some day he would have the house as one of his own circuit—a desire, if it was such, that now has been fulfilled.

A few years later, after having been out of the theatrical business for a short time, he formed the Robbins Amusement Company and took over the Majestic Theatre, Utica. From his early success at the Majestic, Mr. Robbins had no difficulty in interesting Utica financiers and business men in his venture and some of the city's richest and most influential men now are numbered among his associates.

With the Majestic under his management, Mr. Robbins set about to purchase the Avon, the best appointed picture theatre in the city. The owners, a Buffalo corporation, and after they had decided not to sell, finally agreed to dispose of their holdings to Mr. Robbins and in July, 1920, less than four years after he had obtained a lease on the Majestic, he found himself at the helm of the Avon.

The new DeLuxe Theatre, in the center of Utica's most exclusive residential section, was his next acquisition in the December following. The DeLuxe, a beautiful house, was leased to Mr. Robbins by the Alhambra Amusement Company, operators of the Alhambra, Utica.

Mr. Robbins next invaded Syracuse, his home city. In March, 1921, the Vinney Building, one of the most valuable business properties in the city and containing the Eckel Theatre, was added to the Robbins string, and named Robbins-Eckel. In only 19 years after he had left his home town he returned with a certified check for half a million dollars, the purchase price, as he prepared to take over the office and store building and photoplay house.

During November, 1921, Mr. Robbins went to Watertown where he purchased the Olympic, Antique and Palace Theatres. The Colonial and Gaiety, Utica, were added to the chain last August when Wilmer & Vincent, who had their first fling in the theatrical business in that city, relinquished their holdings to Mr. Robbins and his associates.

In 1920 Mr. Robbins formed the Robbins Film Company with an exchange located in Utica. But with the rapid addition of theatres Mr. Robbins later disposed of the films he had been distributing, to Lewis J. Selznick.

Plans for further expansion are announced by Mr. Robbins, who said that architects are now at work on plans for several theatres that will be erected in various cities in New York State. He says that the proposed expansion will be acclaimed the largest and most ambitious of its kind in the state, outside of New York City.

Approximately 18,000,000 persons are patrons of the Robbins Theatres each year. The total seating capacity of the nine houses is 12,900. With an average of four shows daily the attendance is 51,000.

Mr. Robbins views, before contracting for them, every picture shown in his theatres, as six of the nine in the circuit have an exclusive picture policy. On numerous occasions he has asserted he is for clean, moral pictures only, and says that he does not hesitate to ban a picture in any of his theatres he knows it will offend.

The policy of the theatres is as follows: Utica—Majestic, Avon, New DeLuxe, pictures; Gaiety, Keith vaudeville; Colonial, burlesque and legitimate attractions; Syracuse—Eckel, pictures; Watertown—Palace and Antique, pictures; Olympic, Keith vaudeville and pictures.

Daniel Boone of "Movies" "Snitches on" Pat Powers

Discovered! The Daniel Boone of the picture industry in Western New York. The man who opened the first motion picture exchange in Buffalo and many of the first theatres in Canada, Pennsylvania and central and western New York. Folks, hear about George W. Dell, now operator at the Little Hippodrome in Buffalo—a man who knew Pat Powers when he was a cop wearing out shoe leather on the streets of the Queen City of the Lakes and swinging one of the wickedest clubs in his baliwick.

Yes, George Dell has seen the motion picture industry grown from infancy to its present position. He has been in the business himself twenty-two years. He opened the Dell-Miller exchange, the first in Buffalo, on the site where the Little Hipprodrome now stands in Main street. Most of the "super-productions" he handled were 50 feet in length. It was mostly foreign celluloid. "A Trip to the Moon" was one of the big features. George furnished all the theatres in Western New York in those days—back in 1900.

Mr. Dell got mixed up in the theatre business by "enlisting" in the ranks as a songbook seller at the age of fourteen, when he joined Tony Pastor at the old Court Street Theatre, Buffalo. Then he toured the country with Allen May, the first illustrated song artist—George was "operator."

George opened all the Wagner houses in Buffalo and started some 30 "picture palaces" in Pennsylvania in the days when the butchers, the bakers and the candlestick makers were going in for the leaping tintypes. He opened the first theatre in Jamestown, May's Theatre in Syracuse, the first house in London, Ontario, which was the first in the Dominion, and taught John Pferd, owner of the Pastime, Buffalo, the business.

Mr. Dell was associated with Vitagraph one season producing shows. The Wagner houses he opened were Keith's, Grand and Comic.

George got Pat Powers his first camera and first cameraman some fourteen years ago. Mr. Powers will have to blame George for shaking the skeleton and snitching that Pat once sold photographs in Buffalo and later was appointed to the police force.

George relates a story. One day he and Pat were in Murphy's (Hist, a saloon) when a man came in swinging a cane, wearing a high hat and lit up like a lighthouse. Pat got acquainted with the man and asked him what business he was in. He said he was a motion picture producer. When he of the high hat left, Pat turned to George and said: "Just wait, I'll be one of them guys some day!" Pat sure is "one of them guys" now, eh, what?

Mr. Dell toured the country a few years with Tony Pastor's variety show, in which were such famous players as Maggie Cline, Sam Bernhardt, Muldoon, et. al. He also toured with Arthur P. Miller, singer of illustrated songs and with whom he was later associated in the exchange business.

He went over the Empire circuit with the John L. Sullivan-Jack Kilrain fight films.

Now George is interested in many pursuits. He has several road shows out, presenting spectacular films with flashy displays "for the front." He is in charge of projection at the Little Hippodrome, Buffalo, in the afternoons. He furnishes films for club dinners and other social gatherings.

Mr. Dell has a wide acquaintance in both the picture and legitimate theatre business all over the country. He has had opportunities to go to many cities "to locate," but insists that nothing can drag him out of good old Buffalo, where he started in the business and where he'll probably finish in it.

Re-Naming the Kid

Regional News and Gossip is no more, and from its ashes, Phoenix-like, rises Exhibitors' News and Views, a new name and a better one for the same department, because it more clearly expresses our intent—to supply a department for exhibitors only, in which they may read the news in their territories and in which they may exchange opinions on vital film topics.

The service continues the same. Through our great chain of correspondents we are reaching out for exhibitor news all over the United States and Canada. We're practicing on the Coué stuff. Just watch us grow!

Redmon's Smiling Face an Institution in St. Louis

Harry Redmon, owner-manager of the Majestic Theatre, St. Louis, is something more than "The Daddy of 'Em All" in East St. Louis. He is an institution, an integral part of the community, like the stock yards, the Broadway viaduct or the annual police board scandal. Pittsburgh on the Cahokia could no more do without Harry's smiling face on Collinsville avenue than dispense with politics. He's part of its very life.

And there perhaps is the secret of Harry Redmon's success as an exhibitor. He knows East St. Louis and the town knows and trusts in him.

Back in the halcyon days when the Star Spangled Banner meant something more than a song written by a chap named Keys, Harry was a great lover of the thoroughbreds and was prominently identified with the Sport of Kings and Southern gentlemen. Born in Louisville, Ky., he learned to love the Derby as babes in other climes do Santa Claus and peppermint candy. And he has never forgotten his first love. Every year he charters a car and hikes back to see the big racing event, taking with him his less fortunate brethren who haven't the price. Harry has that way about him. But that is another story. We started out to tell you about Harry's picture career.

He was not the first exhibitor in East St. Louis, but he does hold the honor of being the first man to successfully conduct a strictly motion picture house, and he has been in the business continuously since 1906, longer than any other East St. Louisian now exhibiting pictures.

The first motion picture shown in the metropolis of Egypt was the famed John L. Sullivan-James J. Corbett fight pictures which were exhibited by Bert Sager, now with the East St. Louis Light and Power Company, and J. Wesley Reed, advertising man for the East St. Louis Daily Journal. Later that pair showed other pictures, and during the World's Fair in St. Louis Sager conducted a picture house opposite Delmar Garden. Now I am getting away from East St. Louis.

After that first venture Joe Erber opened a theatre at Collinsville avenue and St. Louis avenue in East St. Louis and showed some pictures in conjunction with vaudeville acts. A year or so later he moved across the street and opened the Lyric Theatre which was also a combination house.

Then, about 1906, when Erber took over the Majestic Theatre, a vaudeville house, Harry Redmon moved into the Lyric and changed it into a picture house. In the meantime the "reform" wave had struck the country and racing was killed in Missouri.

Those were the days of the illustrated song and his wife was the singer for the Lyric. She had a beautiful voice and was as big an attraction for the Lyric as the pictures. At the very outset of his career as an exhibitor Redmon set up a rock-ribbed policy that he has never departed from—to show nothing but the very best picture available and never to over-advertise or misstate the facts in telling his patrons about a forthcoming show.

That's the basis of his success, the foundation upon which the present Majestic is erected. The best kind of underpinning for a picture house or any other business institution. Harry has never substituted. If he wasn't able to obtain the original picture he never booked something with a similar name to fool his patrons.

One of the stunts that Harry used to advertise his shows in his early years was the distribution of dishes and other souvenirs. He bought his dishes by the carload and the basement underneath the old Lyric was always packed with these favors for his patrons.

From the jump Redmon's show was a success. Some said he was lucky. But they didn't guess the secret. He knew St. Louis people and he gave them what they wanted to see. In about 1911 his business became too big for the limited capacity of the Lyric and he bought out the interest of Joe Erber and Fred Ziegenheim in the Majestic Theatre. Five years later he bought the building and site, paying approximately $65,000.

For a time in 1910 and 1911 he operated an airdome on St. Louis avenue east of Collinsville avenue, playing the Sherman Stock Company. But at no time did he show anything but pictures at the Lyric or the Majestic after he took over that theatre.

Shortly after he opened the Lyric Theatre, John Choat, present director of publicity for the Majestic, became associated with Redmon and he has been practically with him ever since. It has been noted that rarely does an employe leave Redmon. When his original doorkeeper became too old for active work Harry leased him a farm out on "The Bluffs" and upon his death paid all of his funeral expenses.

He is very charitable, although he doesn't hire a brass band to herald his alms-giving. He quietly contributes his bit—and it is a very generous morsel—to the various charities of East St. Louis. He never turns down a worthy case and a very large portion of the Majestic's annual earnings is dispensed among the needy of East St. Louis. For example, Harry has extended a standing invitation to the newsies of East St. Louis to attend the Majestic free of charge on any Monday evening.

Like all red-blooded Americans, Redmon is fond of sports and is a "square-shooter." He always attends the World's Championship baseball and was the first to detect and expose the fixed series of 1919. So baseball as well as the "movies" owes much to Harry Redmon.

At present Harry has under consideration plans for a $750,000 picture theatre and office building to be erected on the site of the Majestic. A modern structure will eventually go up where the Majestic now stands. The old showhouse has about outlived its usefulness and is not in keeping with the high value the ground on which it stands has attained. The new house would contain accommodations for about 2,200 to 2,400 patrons. Harry is undecided whether the structure would be devoted to offices or a hotel. Some of the East St. Louis business men interested believe that a hotel would prove a paying venture.

But Harry isn't in a great hurry to build. Construction costs are still very high and the indications are they will remain up for some time to come. And he dearly loves the Majestic. He hates to lose the fond associations attached to his picture show.

Redmon's wife was killed in an automobile accident in Chicago about eight years ago and he has since made his home with his widowed mother and sister.

Thomas Returns to Blank

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 20.

Wish to announce the acquisition of Mr. H. M. Thomas, formerly managing director of Famous Players-Lasky theatres in Canada. I have created for Mr. Thomas the office of directing manager of the A. H. Blank theatres in Iowa and Nebraska and wish to express my pleasure in being able to again secure his services. Mr. Thomas was with me three years ago and was for several years manager of my Rialto and Strand theatres in Omaha.

A. H. BLANK.

Saved Bastable

Stephen A. Bastable, manager of the Bastable Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., is alive today, thanks to Francis P. Martin, managing director of Robbins-Eckel Theatre. During the fire that destroyed the Bastable Theatre and business block, in which a heavy toll of dead and injured resulted, Mr. Martin entered the theatre office and, despite remonstrances by Mr. Bastable, forced him through the lobby and into the street. Mr. Bastable was overcome with smoke and physicians fear he may be stricken with pneumonia.

Indiana

The moving picture censorship bill, which was introduced in the Indiana general assembly several weeks ago by Senator Claude S. Steele, of Knox, was reported out of the committee on public morals this week without recommendations and was advanced to second reading.

It is understood that when the measure is called up for second reading opponents expect to try to kill it by offering an amendment to strike out the enacting clauses, one of the parliamentary methods of putting a bill to sleep.

The attack on the censorship bill will be led by Senator F. Harold Van Orman, of Evansville, who has vigorously opposed such measures in previous sessions of the Legislature.

In an effort to save the life of his daughter, Verner U. Young, proprietor of the Orpheum Theatre, Gary, gave a half pint of his blood recently in a transfusion operation at the Mercy Hospital in Gary. Mr. Young's daughter, Mrs. Ralph W. Taylor, has been suffering from anemia.

New attendance records for the Indiana Theatre, at Terre Haute, were established recently when the theatre celebrated its first anniversary. Special features of the program were "Our Birthday," a skit staged by Emil Velazco, organist, and the Misses Eunice Schramm and Diana Hyland, dancers. The photoplay attraction was "Back Home and Broke."

The Indiana is owned by T. W. Barhydt and is managed by Bruce Fowler and Herman Halberstadt. Mr. Fowler came to Terre Haute last November from Buffalo, N. Y., where he managed the Elmwood Theatre, the largest picture house in the city. The Indiana has enjoyed a most succesful year.

Robert H. Harris, manager of the Harris Grand and Princess theatres at Bloomington, has announced that the new Princess will be opened about March 1. The theatre is being rebuilt and when completed will seat 1,650. New seats, a women's rest room, a new front and new lighting system are being installed. A large pipe organ will be installed.

By the first of September, Bedford expects to be boasting of a picture theatre second to none in Indiana. The plans for the structure, which will be built for the Lawrence County Theatrical Company, which now operates the Stone City Opera House, have just been completed and work will begin as soon as the weather permits. The theatre will seat approximately 1,500.

Chicago Theatre "Mashers" Find Their Fun Expensive

Mashers caught in movie theatres here are getting short shift these days. The latest case brought to the public notice was the arrest of Frank Baramski, who molested Mrs. Joseph Hoffman while attending the Tiffin Theatre, so Judge Joseph Burke fined him $50 and costs for his fun.

The Fischer Paramount Theatre Corporation at 36 South State street will build a new house at Madison, plans having been completed by Philip Dean.

Otto Senglaub will have charge of the erection of the new movie theatre at Manitowoc that will cost $75,000 to complete.

The prices of the Englewood Theatre under the Orpheum management will be from 22 cents to 68 cents, and the three-a-day show policy with pictures will prevail. All seats will be reserved for every performance.

Frederick Freiberg, former owner of the Freiberg Theatre and well known musician, died at his home here after an extended illness. He was buried at the Waldheim Cemetery.

More than a half million dollars worth of bonds have been issued by the Al H. Woods holding corporation to help finance the cost of the Columbia Theatre property at North Clark street. It will be renamed the Adelphi Theatre next season when the house will be taken over by the Woods management.

Some of the managers are sure hitting the high spots these days here. Morris Salkin of the Owl and Harry Goldson of the Adelphi are hobnobbing with the movie stars on the West Coast, S. J. Geogory of the Parthenon is doing Hot Springs for a month, Frank Hammond of the Vendome Theatre is telling the boys all about the bright lights of Havana and how nice the film men have it in Cuba, and here is Julius Goodman of the Broadway Strand sporting a new Pierce coupe.

Steve Bennis' new theatre at Lincoln, Ill., will be ready for its opening the latter part of this month.

Fitzpatrick and McElroy will rebuild the house they owned at Traverse City that was recently destroyed by fire.

The interests of Clifford B. Snell in the Regent and Family theatres at Ionia have been taken over by W. S. Buttefield.

Ben Serkowich, formerly with the Madison Theatre at Peoria, has joined the Chicago Theatre staff under Publicity Manager Hollander.

R. D. Taylor, owner of the Bourbon Theatre, will make extensive improvements in his house and will put in a new front and rebuild the interior of the house, making it modern in every way.

Manager Nelson of the Star Theatre at Quincy is putting over some good publicity stunts and has secured the co-operation of the local fire department in bringing "The Third Alarm" into Quincy.

A. H. Woods, who built the Apollo Theatre here, is suing the Longacre Engineering and Construction Company to recover approximately a half million dollars which he claims to have paid in excess of the estimated cost of building the house.

C. Morrison has sold the Star Theatre at Willow Grove to E. M. Carrol and he will make some improvements in the house.

A movie theatre will be opened at Tampico by C. F. Shere, who will use the Opera House for the venture.

The Rainbow Theatre at Pullman has been taken over by Will Hirschberg, who also operates the Orchard Theatre there.

Sam Levine, owner of the Crystal Theatre on Sixty-third street, has added the Edward Theatre to his chain.

The Blackstone Hotel property at Rockford has been taken over by the West End Business Men's Association of that city and the old buildings will be removed in the spring and a 2,500-seat theatre will be erected on the site.

The Alamo Theatre at Dixon has been placed under the management of Don Lee of Biggsville. He will also continue his Biggsville house.

C. A. Burlinggame, who formerly operated in South Bend, has leased the Tolleston Theatre at Gary and will open with popular programs.

L. L. Lewis is making extensive improvements in his Gem Theatre at Pocahontas, and in addition operates the Sharum Theatre at Walnut Ridge.

John B. Weber has been chosen president of the Blackstone Theatre Corporation of South Bend; Howard Yant, secretary, and Frank C. Toepp, treasurer.

The Lyceum Theatre at Thirty-ninth and Cottage Grove avenue is now under the management of Will Spanuth.

Charley Kamp, manager of the Madlin and Ashland Theatres, has been elected commander of Forges Post 176, American Legion.

The new Star Theatre and office building at Whiting will soon be ready for the opening and will be a credit to the Oil City. The house will seat 900.

The cities in this state which do not have Sunday shows are making efforts to get around the blue law folks. In Bloomington, Manager Lyons of the Castle is pulling shows under the auspices of different social clubs and filling the house, while at Harrisburg the local band wants the council to let them put on Sunday shows to increase the treasury of the band boys. At Watseka the city council is giving consideration to the plea for Sunday movies. At Galesburg, the railroad and college city, interests are actively at work to lift the ban and permit Sunday movies. The railroad men are strong for the Sunday show, but the church folks are still stubborn.

Charley Ryan, manager of the Garfield Theatre, is smiling broadly these days, not only because business is good but he is the proud father of a ten-pound boy, who is kicking lustily already to see his first show.

The Ben-Hur Amusement Company has been organized by W. F. Fitzgerald, Ernest Christy and Albert L. Christy to operate a picture theatre in Cicero. The house will be located at 306 East Cicero avenue.

ARTHUR SCHOENSTADT
Popular Chicago Theatre Owner, Off to Study European Exhibiting Conditions.

The Pythian Theatre at Marshall has been taken over by S. E. Pittle and added to his chain of theatres.

The rental of the Englewood Theatre, taken over by the Orpheum Circuit from the Shuberts, according to the lease, will be $131,233 for the first five years and with the option to renew for another five years at $30,000 annually. The Shuberts agree not to open a rival house within the district the Englewood draws its patronage from.

Suspended fifty feet above the heads of a crowd in front of Balaban & Katz Chicago Theatre, Erwin Wagner, electrician with the house, was saved from a certain death when his foot was caught by a dangling rope and he was rescued from his perilous position by city firemen who climbed up on the extension ladders and brought him down to safety.

Ross Denny, owner of the Dreamland Theatre at Roodhouse, has taken over the Bijou Theatre at Carrollton and will make some improvements in the house.

Well, Harry and Leo Brunhild got back from Florida in time to hit the coldest part of the winter, while Aaron Jones of Jones, Linick & Schafer stuck at New Orleans to take in the Mardi Gras and bask in the Southern sunshine.

Another theatre is projected for Twenty-second street. E. R. Ruppert and R. Levine are having plans drawn for a house to cost a half million dollars.

New York's East Side Boys Do Without the Gold Spoons

Ambition seems to thrive on New York's East Side and we believe that a majority of men now on the top in the picture business came from that district—far more than came from Riverside Drive. "Down east" they go out and earn prosperity, and constant progress is their watchword, while uptown "Dad" supplies a gold spoon.

Charles Bushwick is an old East Sider who started in the game as reel boy. Almost quicker than it takes to tell, he became connected with Loew's Greeley Square Theatre under Manager J. Bernstein. Then he became houseman at the Avenue A Theatre and then assistant to Manager Murray Shaw at the New Delancey. Charlie and Murray work like a well oiled machine as they are "buddies" and each knows every angle of the work.

Manager Murray Shaw of the New Delancey Theatre, 62 Delancey street, has made rapid strides in the course of five years, rising from porter to chief usher, doorman and assistant manager of the Royal in Essex street. Then he went to the Royal in Grand street, and then to the Clinton. Murray is an all-around man with this wealth of experience back of him.

Eddie Oppenheim, manager of Loew's Circle Theatre at Sixtieth street and Broadway, has a house famous in theatrical history. Many an oldtimer of note appeared on its stage, among them Alex Carr in a minor role in "Wine, Women and Song." Eddie has seen ten years' service at that theatre and has been with Loew even longer. His fine character, persuasive disposition and inevitable smile make him a friend of many.

One of the prettiest theatres on the Keith time is the Riviera at St. Johns place and Kingston avenue, Brooklyn. Herman Whitman is the manager and he has surrounded himself with a great staff. Like Mr. Oppenheimer, he has a winning smile and unvarying good nature.

Armond Robi has assumed the managership of the Pantheon Theatre, Ridgewood, N. J. He managed the National Theatre, Washington avenue, Brooklyn, when it opened, putting over many original advertising stunts. He also has been connected with Metro. Recently he has been visiting France, Belgium and England.

Arthur Bergoffen, three years ago at New York's Criterion Theatre, has returned as business manager for Universal during the run of "Driven." Rumors have it that he is to manage a new theatre planned for Broadway. He has been connected with the Central, George M. Cohan's and Astor theatres.

A tip to visitors at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre—when you want to find Manager M. J. Duffy, trot around to the stage. In other words, if you want to find a fisherman, go where his nets are. Duffy is a stickler for a smooth running show. With two changes a week the theatre requires constant attention, and that's just what Duffy is giving it.

Al Guttman, assistant manager of Loew's Delancey Street Theatre, makes a good foil for Manager Ben Mills. At the age of 15 years he played with a burlesque show, doing character parts, and later went in vaudeville with Lowe & Lowe in an act known as "The Bellboys," playing regular time. After considerable experience in theatricals, he took charge of the rebating department, under Gene Meyers, of Loew's Metropolitan, returning to New York when the theatre closed to become assistant to Manager Vogel, now of the State Theatre, Broadway and Forty-fifth street.

The house run by Charles Trippe, at Fifth avenue and Fourth street, Brooklyn, while not fitted up like the Broadway palaces, is, as Charlie himself says, "getting the money." For the amount that it costs to run he would rather have his house than one of the big places across the river in the White Light lane. Charlie Trippe has owned and run the house for the past nine years, so he knows what he is talking about. In that time he has made it prosper and it has helped him to his ownership of a seventy-eight foot front on Fifth avenue and 120 feet on Fourth street. Charlie is satisfied. He's no vulture and soon he expects to retire from the game and let some one else get some of the money.

The Lyric Theatre, 800 Union street, Brooklyn, after being closed for a year past, has opened its doors again to big business. The house, improved and renovated, is now controlled and owned by Bernard Farkas, new as an exhibitor, but a close student of picture conditions for some time. Mr. Farkas has entrusted the management of the house to the able hands of J. C. La Strange, an old showman, with years of experience, who formerly managed the Times Square Theatre in Forty-second street, near Seventh avenue, Manhattan, handled several road shows and also owned his own house.

The managers of the leading movie houses through the Illinois association have offered the use of their screens to fight the drug evil. Joe Hopp and Adolph Powell were appointed a committee to confer with the B. P. O. E. No. 4, who are leading the fight in this part of the country.

Barbee's looked like a regular fire department this week as "The Third Alarm" is the feature. Fire apparatus of all kinds gave real atmosphere to the exploitation of the film and helped to keep the house well filled throughout the week.

Jack Hoeffler, one of the owners of the Orpheum Theatre at Quincy, accompanied by his wife, has gone to California to escape the tail end of winter. He will be back by the first of April.

The Mendon Movie Theatre at Mendon had a bad fire in the projection room of the house, and while the apparatus was seriously damaged, the operators escaped with minor hurts.

Paul Morgan has sold the Grand Theatre at Madison to J. A. Keyes, who operates a chain of houses in Northern Indiana.

The Beck Walker Company of Mason City has taken over the Regent Theatre at Waterloo and they will make many improvements in the house and modernize at throughout.

The colored movie fans will have another house here as the Booker T. Washington Theatre will open early in March at State and Thirty-first streets.

The Avenue Theatre at Thirty-first and Indiana avenue will inaugurate a policy of vaudeville and pictures under the management of Walter Beadell.

The Ben-Hur Theatre at Cicero has been taken over by Christie Brothers, who operate the Elmo Theatre. E. H. Christie will look after the new house.

"Mighty Lak a Rose" is pulling strong at the Chicago this week and the newspaper reports have been flattering to the feature. Many exhibitors in this district have come in to look the picture over for future bookings.

Manager Beines of the New Lincoln Theatre opened up his house on Lincoln's Birthday with "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and played to capacity business.

The Stratford at Sixty-third and Halsted had good business last week with "Back Home and Broke" and some good stage specialties to back it up.

It's on March 1, Says Josh

The annual convention of the Theatre Owners and Managers Association of Oklahoma will be held on March 1 and 2 at the City Auditorium, Oklahoma City. The notice we've just received says that those will be "two of the greatest days of your whole life." That's the way Josh Billings, secretary, puts it, and he produces evidence in support of his claim.

Exhibitors and distributors will have a real get-together banquet on March 2. It will be absolutely free, as will the dance given each night—that is, free to members of the organization. Motion picture stars will attend. Among the acceptances received to date are those of Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleston.

The convention will be open to the public. Exchanges and supply houses will have booths. Each evening the floor will be cleared and the dancing started. Each exhibitor or manager will register and receive his card, which will admit him free to all meetings, dances and banquets, if he is a member of the organization. Membership costs $10 and the dues are $6 a year.

"Bring your wife or sweetheart and let's have the greatest convention we ever held," says Josh Billings' letter, in conclusion.

J. L. Blackford Purchases Huntington, Pa., Theatre

J. L. Blackford, who for five years has leased the Gamble Theatre, Huntingdon, Pa., on January 1 of this year, purchased the theatre building and property from the owner. The Gamble is situated in the best part of the town on Main street and is 60 by 120 feet.

Mr. Blackford will close the house on April 1, and contractors will begin enlarging the building. It is expected that the work will be completed early in the fall, and when it is reopened the Gamble will be one of the best picture houses in Central Pennsylvania. The seating capacity will be increased to 1,000 and $25,000 will be expended to make the necessary improvements. The lobby will be 20 by 35 feet.

While alterations are in progress, Mr. Blackford will abandon the policy of pictures and road shows at his Grand Theatre, in the same town, and show pictures only.

The Sheridan Square Theatre in East Liberty, owned by the Harris and Davis interests of Pittsburgh, one of the finest vaudeville houses of this section, inaugurated a new policy on February 12 of feature photoplays and vaudeville.

The Wonderland Theatre on Fifth avenue, downtown Pittsburgh, owned by the Harris and Davis interests, one of the oldest and best money-making picture theatres in Pittsburgh, will close its doors for good on the last day of April and the building will be remodeled for another line of business.

Adjacent to the Wonderland, in the building now occupied by Thompson's Restaurant, the Harris and Davis Company will erect a picture theatre to seat 700 persons. This work will be started on May 1 and it is expected that the house will open in August. Eddie Johns, now manager of the Wonderland, will officiate in a similar capacity at the new house.

Carl Sherkel of the Opera House at Houtzdale, Pa., states that the Opera House building will be put up at public auction on March 1 to be sold to the highest bidder by the owners of the building. He also states that he has had blue prints drawn up for an 875-seat house to build in this town, work to be started immediately.

The Whalens, of the Whalen Theatre, Osceola Mills, Pa., have sold their theatre to a Mr. McCabe, who has conducted a pool and billiard hall in the basement of the show house for the last several years. The new owner takes charge the first of March.

The Elden Theatre at Boswell, Pa., has again been opened, after having been closed for the past several weeks owing to the death of Frank Elden, owner. Mrs. Elden, widow of the deceased, is operating the house at the present time, but states that it is for sale, as she does not intend to continue the business.

Frank Ferri, of the Victor Theatre, Rossiter, Pa., has purchased the Royal Theatre at Conifer, Pa., from the Campbells. A brother of Ferri's will manage the Conifer house for the present.

The Palace Theatre at Hyman, Pa., has been closed, and the management states that the house will not again be opened until the spring weather sets in.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Stone of the Paramount Theatre, Pine Grove, W. Va., are confined to their beds with the "flu." Mrs. Stone's father is looking after the theatre until his son-in-law is again able to take up the reins.

The Misses Pomeroy and Gaffney, the young lady exhibitors of Sisterville, W. Va., will open their new theatre at Paden City, W. Va., about the first of March. The new house will seat about 350 and is one of the prettiest little houses in the State, if not the prettiest. Good luck to you, ladies!

We are just in receipt of a postcard from Leo Barclay, formerly managing director for the Grand Amusement Company, of Johnstown, Pa., and who enjoys a wide acquaintance among local film people. Last fall Leo went to Los Angeles to take charge of Goldwyn exploitation work in that city. But to get back to our story: Said postcard carried the news that Leo was the proud daddy of another baby boy. This makes the fourth son in the Barclay household. Congratulations!

H. H. Robey, one of the best known exhibitors in West Virginia, has sold his theatre at South Charleston. He retains his houses at Spencer, St. Marys and Ravenswood, and says it keeps him busy looking after this trio.

Dr. Zimmerman of the Auditorium Theatre, Holsopple, Pa., has enlarged his house and can now seat 600 persons. The improvement is a marked one, and the Auditorium has had a very successful career necessitating the enlargement of the house.

John Moskola has sold his Dreamland Theatre at Brackenridge, Pa., to Harry Golembiewski. The new owner took charge on February 16.

Harry Miller, manager of the Princess Theatre at Ford City, Pa., has lots of idle time on his hands in the day time, so he has gotten himself the management of a large gents' furnishing store in the same town. Film salesmen would do well to stock up on collars, shirts, ties, etc., when in the town and at the same time sell Miller some pictures.

Charles Hutzel, of the Palace Theatre, South Fork, Pa., made one of his semi-yearly trips to Pittsburgh recently. He was seen circulating among the various local film exchanges.

Fred Gohrs, formerly manager of the Aris Theatre in Erie, Pa., which was recently completely destroyed by fire, is now officiating in a similar capacity at Pete Demas' Rialto Theatre in the same town, succeeding John Sanford, resigned.

Nick Notopoulos, manager of the Olympic Theatre, Altoona, Pa., was married on Sunday, February 11. The happy young couple are now on a two-week wedding trip and visiting in New York and Washington.

Charlie Frost, head of the publicity department at the Rowland and Clark theatres, is receiving congratulations, Mrs. Frost having presented him with a ten-pound baby girl on February 9.

Mounting the fire escape to the second floor, then jimmying a window to gain entrance, safe robbers on February 1 made their way into the office of Rowland and Clark's Strand Theatre, 3615 Forbes street, Pittsburgh, knocked off the safe combination with a sledge and escaped with $500 in currency and $399 in securities. Papers were strewn all over the floor, apparently discarded after careful examination. This is the second robbery suffered by the R. and C. management in the past few weeks, the first having been perpetrated at their Liberty Theatre in East Liberty, where $1,800 was stolen.

The theatre being erected on Adams street, Fairmont, W. Va., by the West Virginia Amusement Company, will be known as the Fairmont Theatre. The name was decided upon after a contest held among the citizens of the ctiy, to suggest names for the new house.

Harry Handel, along with his brother, Louis, and the latter's son, Albert, have taken over Max Engleberg's Strand and Liberty theatres in McKees Rocks, Pa. The Handels constitute the Hippodrome Theatres Company and for some time past have conducted the Hippodrome Theatre on the North Side, Pittsburgh. The Handels state they will shortly acquire more picture theatres in or near the city.

The McKees Rocks houses will be closed for remodeling and when reopened the Liberty will be called the Strand and the name of the Strand will be changed to the Hippodrome. Max Engelberg, former owner, who is one of the most active members of the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania, says that for the present he will quit the theatre business and devote all of his time to looking after his agency for Durant automobiles.

Sam Sprance, manager of the Russell Theatre, Barnesboro, Pa., spent a few days recently in Pittsburgh film shopping. Sam says business is good and that he makes it good by giving his public what they want to see. He's a great believer in advertising and his orders for paper, window cards, etc., are a large item.

It Truly Is a Funny Old World

Mr. and Mrs. Public are funny creatures. That's the decision of Milwaukee exhibitors. They base their deduction upon the result of a vote taken by a leading newspaper to determine the most popular screen star. The results are of special significance because there was no tieup in connection with the contest.

The peculiar thing is that stars who have long been recognized as box office winners have failed to poll the most votes while others whose drawing power has been referred to as just fair ranked high. The contest revealed Norma Talmadge in sixth place.

It's a peculiar situation," said Ed Weisfeldt, manager of Saxe's Strand Theatre in discussing the results. "Norma Talmadge has never failed to pull for me, yet she is listed by the public far below stars that never completely filled the house.

"As an example of what Norma Talmadge pictures do, her 'Voice From the Minaret' jammed my house despite cold weather, the crowd one night extending past the box office, fifty feet from the doors. Even weather of 12 degrees below zero, the coldest of the year in Milwaukee, failed to keep the crowds away. Yet with some of the actors and actresses listed ahead of Norma Talmadge in the contest I have rarely had such success despite more favorable weather conditions."

Frozen North Pictures Give Albany Exhibitors Shivers

Here's a wrinkle that has cropped out among some of the exhibitors as the result of abnormal winter conditions prevailing in central and northern New York. Pictures of the frozen north are not wanted, especially in houses where the coal question has become one of much moment. The other day an exhibitor by the name of McNarama, in Valatie, N. Y., telephoned to the Universal exchange in Albany, asking for a substitution.

"I've about three scuttles of coal and a whole lot of promises," said Mr. McNamara. "I'm trying to convince my patrons that the house is warm. In place of giving me 'Out of the Silent North,' can't you send me some tropical picture, anything taken in the South Seas, or some other place where it at least looks warm? I simply can't stand any more winter pictures."

And so, "The Altar Stairs" was substituted for the picture which depicted the vast expanses of the silent—and chilly—north.

The Broadway Theatre in Albany, N. Y., run for several years by Weidman Brothers, will close on February 24 and be remodeled into a clothing store.

Phil Markell, who runs Atlas in Adams, Mass., but books out of Albany, dropped into town this week and reported business as fairly good throughout Massachusetts. Mr. Markell also handles a string of houses around Boston.

C. R. Moyer, who runs the Liberty in Herkimer, was in Albany this week visiting the State Capitol, where he had plans approved for the house which he will build in Little Falls this summer.

The Pearl Theatre in Albany, operated by Walter Powers, is to close its doors soon and give way to a business block.

The Mark Strand, in Albany, will run "Dr. Jack" during the week of February 26. Uly Hill, manager of the house, has also booked a special two-reel on Dr. Coue from Educational for the same week.

In Rensselaer. across the river from Albany, the exhibitors are conducting a campaign for Sunday shows.

Paul Alberts, of the Albany in Schenectady, has gone back to week runs with "The Town that Forgot God."

The Lyceum at Red Hook, which has been having trouble with its heating system, has just reopened.

Joe Braff, who runs the Lyric in Albany, used a bit of gray matter this past week and cashed in on the same. The house ordinarily charges 5 and 10 cents. After booking an Italian picture, Mr. Braff went after the Italian patronage, hanging out an Italian flag in front, jumping his price to 25 cents, but what is of more importance, importing an Italian singer for the occasion. The house was jammed to its doors.

The Ford boom in Green Island has resulted in several persons securing options on buildings and sites suitable for picture theatres. Since C. R. Halligan sold the Daisy, Green Island has been without a picture theatre.

Louis Schine of Gloversville, brother of the intrepid Myer, said "hello" to all the exchanges in Albany this week.

"The Christian," playing at the Lincoln in Troy this week, established a record in dollars and cents. Even on Ash Wednesday, the S. R. O. sign was out.

Robert V. Erk, of Ilion, making the rounds of the exchanges this week, complained of bad business due to weather conditions.

"The Third Alarm" broke the house record at the Griswold in Troy last Sunday night.

Edwin O. Weinberg, of the State in Schenectady, played to the best business this week with "The Flirt," since the house was opened early in December.

Herman S. Vineberg, assistant manager of the State in Schenectady, has decided to move his family to the Electric City within the next few weeks. Mr. Vineberg has made a reputation for himself in Schenectady, through the handling of the State, in connection with Mr. Weinberg.

If there is one place in New York State which is a bit colder these days than all the rest, it is Port Henry, according to Lew Fisher, who runs houses there as well as at Fort Edward and Ticonderoga. Mr. Fisher says that the weather has cost him hundreds of dollars this winter.

A blizzard swept over Voorheesville, N. Y., last Wednesday, with the result that "The Kentucky Derby," booked for there under the auspices of a committee from the Odd Fellows, attracted only about fifteen persons and was called off. The committee will book it again some time in April when weather conditions are more propitious.

A Faithful Guardian of the Cash

The burglars, yeggs and hold-up men who are breaking into print each week as exhibitor after exhibitor reports evidences that picture theatres make good "pickings" have fought shy of the guardian of C. H. Estes' cash at the Square Town Theatre, Brooklyn, Mich.

A picture of this alert and fearless guardian has reached the World office, but, unfortunately, isn't clear enough to be reproduced for publication. Only three shows has he missed in three years, and those because, at the time, he was ill of the distemper.

"He insists on carrying the change bag to the theatre every show night," writes Mr. Estes, "and he is loved by every child and a good share of the grown-ups who attend the theatre. He is a familiar sight on the streets at all hours of the day, carrying a market basket or wearing his blue cap, with his pipe, which he handles with all the dexterity of an habitual smoker."

Incidentally, "he" is an Airdale, 3½ years old.

Rochester, N. Y.

Mrs. Henry F. Burton, deputy on the New York State motion picture commission, made a special appeal to the members of the Rochester Women's City Club, whom she addressed last Sunday in the club house, to send in protests against the repeal of the censorship bill which comes up for hearing February 27. The repeal bill, she said, would have been presented sometime ago except for the many protests sent in against it from ministers of all denominations, women's clubs, mothers and others.

According to Mrs. Burton, the bill will probably pass the Senate, but will be contested in the House. She wishes members of the club to send in protests and be present at the hearing if possible. Her subject was "The Law and the Movies."

Courtland Smith, representing the Will Hays organization, came to Rochester last week to confer with George Eastman and representatives of several Buffalo exchanges on the gutted condition of bookings at the new Eastman. It is understood that the condition has been cleaned up. Conferences were held in the Hotel Seneca.

The Eastman this week is showing an all-Pathe bill, Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack," and Will Rogers in "Fruits of Fate."

Daniel Donovan has reopened the America Theatre, formerly operated by Mrs. H. Brucker.

Mickey Finn, manager of the Temple Theatre, has recovered from an attack of grippe.

Manager A. G. Leonard of the Olympic has booked "The Headless Horseman" and "While Paris Sleeps" for the week of February 25.

Manager William Fait is planning a ballet school for the Eastman. It is reported that members of the ballet may appear in other houses in the State.

Bill Callahan got an awful scare recently when he was served with a summons in regular style. It was a summons demanding that he come through with dates. It was a joke on the part of some Buffalo exchange manager.

Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount theatre department, dropped in on Arthur Amm, house manager at the Eastman, for a chat last week. Art was formerly associated with Mr. Franklin when the latter was managing director of the Shea picture houses in Buffalo.

Utica, N. Y.

Charlie Faust, erstwhile dispenser of Universal subjects in the Utica, N. Y., district, now is selling stock for the Robbins Theatres' financial department. From all reports he is selling the stock, which is being offered on a buy-stock-and-get-a-life-pass-to-Robbins'-theatres' idea.

W. H. Linton's Hippodrome Theatre, Utica, N. Y., has reverted to a straight film policy, daily change of program.

Frederick J. Hathaway, the greatest motion picture press agent Utica, N. Y., ever had, a title that leaders in the business have awarded him, now is in charge of Metro publicity in the Syracuse, N. Y., district. Mr. Hathaway was with the Alhambra Amusement Company in Utica for ten years, leaving there nearly a year ago to become general publicity manager for the Schine circuit of theatres in New York State, from which position he resigned recently.

Fear Collapse of General Theatres

Buffalo Foresees $200,000 Loss—Schuchert Acquires Corporation

Claiming that 700 Buffalo stockholders faced a $200,000 loss in an impending and threatened crash of General Theatres Corporation, C. F. Martina, 91 Trenton avenue, has discussed the matter with District Attorney Guy B. Moore. General has been operating the Allendale, Marlowe, Circle, Ellen Terry, Star and Central Park Theatres. According to Martina's story, the entire corporation has passed into the hands of Joseph A. Schuchert, 300 Woodbridge avenue, owner of the Colonial and Columbia and other local houses, and who, it is said, held two mortgages and issued the leases on the theatres.

Martina declares the property passed into Schuchert's hands as a result of the company's failing to pay the interest on its mortgages and taxes on the property. That the company was in financial straits was not known to the stockholders until recently, Martina alleges. He said that all the stockholders believed the company was making money and that the news of the impending disaster came as a thunderbolt to those holding an interest in the concern.

Martina says that all the original officers and organizers of the corporation have stepped out. These are Harry Marsey, former president and general manager; Harry G. Ess, stock broker, and Albert G. Becker, treasurer. The corporation, according to Martina, until a few months ago, issued monthly statements declaring the company to be in good standing.

Under the leadership of John T. Gilbert, the stockholders have organized and will get together to attempt to buy back the property from Schuchert, who, it is said, is willing to turn back the property to the stockholders, providing the interest on the property is paid and he is protected in his interests. The stock holders will be asked to contribute $15,000, which Schuchert demands before he will assume the other obligations amounting to some $65,000.

While the corporation is said to have lost money in 1920, 1921 and 1922, it has been making money since last August when James Wallingford became general manager, succeeding Mr. Marsey. If the stockholders are unsuccessful in their attempt to raise the needed money to meet Schuchert's demands, then, it is alleged, their interests are lost to them.

Mrs. B. S. Newman, owner of the Star Theatre in Addison, N. Y., and at one time manager of a theatre in Corning, N. Y., has been charged by C. D. Hibbard of Addison with violating section 484 of the penal law in having admitted Mr. Hibbard's son, Harold, aged 12, unaccompanied by parent or guardian. The charges made against Mrs. Newman follow as a result of the arrest and sentence to industry of Harold, who robbed the William Pepper bakery to secure money to attend the theatre.

In his complaint Mr. Hibbard alléges that he had forbidden Mrs. Newman to allow his son admission to the theatre. Mrs. Newman, through her attorney, Charles L. Crane, has demanded a jury trial which has been set for February 22. Mrs. Newman, it is reported, will prove by witnesses that Mr. Hibbard has on several occasion paid his son's admission to the theatre without accompanying him. Mrs. Newman states that Mr. Hibbard has told her to admit the boy, saying that he would be better off in theatre than on the streets.

When Manager Vincent J. McFaul of the Shea's Hippodrome showed "Tess of the Storm Country," he tied up with the Courier in inviting all the teachers of the local schools to the Monday matinee or evening performance. The teachers, it was expected, would do much word of mouth advertising after seeing the production.

Herman E. Schultz, conductor of Shea's Court Street Theatre, writes from Miami, Florida, where he went following a breakdown after an attack of grippe, that he is recuperating in fine shape and hopes to be back in Buffalo soon in good health. In 1905, Mr. Schultz was in chrage of the orchestra in the hotel in which he is now stopping, Hotel Halcyon. He played a cello solo last Sunday in the Flamingo, Miami's famous hostelry.

Al Beckerich got a lot of front page publicity for the Loew State when he arranged with the Evening Times for a special newsboys' show to see "Heroes of the Street."

Batavia, N. Y., dispatches set forth that plans are being formulated by a Buffalo party for building a picture theatre on the fromer Pease property on the east side of Jackson street, between the New York Telephone building and the Henry J. Volz property. This property has been sold to Wolf Krieger, Main street junk dealer, by Oren C. Steele, hardware merchant. The Buffalo parties who viewed the Jackson street site and agreed that it would be an ideal location for a theatre, left a substantial check with Mr. Krieger to bind the contract, and upon the expiration of the option, March 1, the men propose to announce the details of their plans and a description of the theatre they will erect. It is rumored that H. E. Houghton, owner of the Little Hippodrome, Buffalo, and who has been showing pictures in the Opera House, Batavia, is perhaps one of the persons interested.

Friends of Earl L. Crabb, former manager of the Buffalo Strand and now manager of the System in Syracuse, heard this week of Earl's fast one in showing pictures of the Bastable building fire on the System screen while the blaze was raging. Earl "shot," developed and printed the pictures himself.

Fire in the Linden Theatre, 943 Jefferson avenue, last Saturday morning, damaged the place to the extent of $700. The blaze started in the basement and was caused by hot ashes being thrown on papers. The Linden is owned by Nelson T. Barrett and George Williams, the latter being president of the Western New York unit of the Motion Picture Owners of New York, Inc.

The Star Theatre in Perkinsville, N. Y., E. L. Gunther, manager, and the Rex in Beneseo, N. Y., have been closed. The latter is being renovated and remodeled. The Du-Tell Theatre in South Dayton is also closed on account of an epidemic of small pox.

The Mozart Theatre in Jamestown, N. Y., has changed its policy to straight pictures and reduced its prices from 30 and 40 cents to 5 and 10 cents. The Mozart formerly showed pictures and vaudeville, but the New Palace, also owned by the company that operates the Mozart, has opened with this policy.

The Western New York branch of the M. P. T. O. A., of which Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace, is president, held a meeting in that theatre last week and condemned Will Hays and the producers for attempting to put through the uniform contract. Those in attendance claimed the contract favored the producers. Mr. Smith said that forty exhibitors attended the meeting. None of the larger theatres, such as Shea's Hippodrome, Lafayette Square, Loew's State, Elmwood, Victoria, Regent and Shea's North Park, are affiliated with the Smith organization, but are members of the Western New York unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., of which Charlie O'Reilley is president.

George Hall, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Buffalo's South Park district, has returned from a hunting trip through the South. It is understood that the only thing he shot was dice.

Manager Vincent McFaul of Shea's Hippodrome announces that "Robin Hood" will not be shown at the Hip until Easter week in April. "Bella Donna" is scheduled for presentation the week of April 15. Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law" and Constance Talmadge in "Madame Pompadour" have also been booked. In the spring the Hip will have a new stage setting, Mr. Shea believing that the present draperies deaden the sound of the organ and orchestra. A hard metallic setting will be installed.

Mr. McFaul announces that business at the Hip was never better and that every week is showing three to four thousand dollars improvement over the same weeks last season. All other houses downtown are enjoying good business, the Lafayette Square, Loew's State and Hip running around $14,000 to $15,000 weekly.

Who Can Help Mr. Fihe?

Here's a call for more information on community owned picture theatres, from Joseph H. Fihe, owner of the Grand Opera House, Elwood, Ind.:

"I have read with a great deal of interest," writes Mr. Fihe, "the two articles on community owned theatres. I would appreciate very much having you mail me any further information which you can supply on this subject.

"There is nothing that we need more in our town than a new theatre. Elwood has a population of about 12,000. The idea advanced in this article to my mind is a splendid one, but I am not fully convinced that it will work out in the small cities. We need a theatre seating about 1,000 to 1,200 and which would require a total investment of approximately $125,000. The two big problems we have to solve are: first, to raise this amount of money, and, secondly, to be able to get a return from this investment which would warrant such an expenditure of money.

"I shall appreciate very much securing from you all the information you can give me on this subject.. I wish also to say that I am addressing a letter to Mr. Frank G. Hall, asking him to give me such information as he can on this subject."

Mr. Hall's success with the State-Capitol Twin Theatres at Union Hill, N. J., was described in the February 17 issue in answer to a request for information from L. L. Goldsmith of the Society Theatre, Seattle. Who can give Mr. Fihe and Mr. Goldsmith more detailed dope?

New England Theatres Hit by Snow and Incendiary Fire

A theatre at York Beach, Me., was badly damaged when weight of snow on the roof caused the girders to collapse. The Holland System of Boston, Mass., owns the building, which is leased to New England Amusement Company of Boston. The loss will exceed $8,000.

A 12-year-old boy has been arrested on the charge of attempting to set fire to the Star Theatre, pictures, in Clinton, Mass. The police say the lad has admitted starting the blaze in a box where the doorman put the tickets. The blaze burned itself out before it had gained any headway. Philip J. Philbin is manager of the Star.

The jury in the case of Leon Gorman in Portland, Me., indicted for larceny by embezzlement of motion picture films, disagreed. The case went to the jury after a strenuously waged technical battle in which the defense was based on the contention that Gorman had the intention of disposing of the films, but repented and intended to repudiate his bargain. Therefore it was held he was not actually guilty of any illegal act.

Gorman furnished bail of $5,000 on a continuance of the case to the May term of Superior Court.

The order that the American Legion Post in Nantucket, R. I., pay a license fee for showing motion pictures on Sunday has been rescinded. Strong opposition of residents forced the reversal of the decision of the Selectmen of Nantucket.

Harry E. Neal, of Pittsfield, Mass., won a dollar when he wrote to a Boston newspaper, saying that "the happiest day of my life was when I obtained a position as an assistant 'movie' operator."

Frank Linnehan, who has been manager of the Strand Theatre in Ware, Mass., for the last fifteen months, has resigned. J. E. Babson of New Haven, Conn., is his successor.

Walter M. Merkel, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Springfield, Mass., for the last two and one-half years, has resigned to become manager of one of the Poli theatres in Bridgeport, Conn. He was employed by the Poli Circuit in 1917 and 1918 as manager of the Coliseum in Hartford, Conn. At one time he was publicity representative for Goldwyn and Selznick Pictures in the New England territory.

Lansing Earnest, who has been manager of the Colonial, Pittsfield, Mass., has resigned as the house has been closed by the owners, the Goldstein Brothers. Mr. Earnest has obtained a lease of the Union Square Theatre in Pittsfield from John Cooney, owner, and has assumed control of the house.

Claremont, N. H., is going to have a war of its own concerning the Blue Sunday laws. The Federation of Churches committee will request representatives in the State Legislature to vote against bills not favoring Blue Laws and closed Sundays.

Abraham Goodside, of Portland, Me., owner of several theatres in New England, paid a visit to his Capitol and Bijou theatres in Springfield, Mass., February 23.

John J. Barry, past president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators, and a former president of the Boston Central Labor Union, recently died in his home in Dorchester, Mass.

Harry Steinberg, proprietor of the Steinberg Theatre at Webster, Mass., is one of the prime movers in a project that has for its objective a new theatre to be located somewhere in the vicinity of Webster Square, in Worcester, and to be known as the Webster Square Theatre. According to Mr. Steinberg, the proposed showhouse will be a $200,000 enterprise, consisting of a three-story building, with seven stores, five apartments and a theatre seating 1,400.

The exterior of the building will be of the Italian renaissance style, and the theatre itself will be modeled along lines similar to the new Capitol Theatre in Boston. Work will be begun in April, and eight-hour day and night shifts will be employed so that it may be completed and ready for occupancy by October.

The corporation which will erect this new theatre building and run it when completed will be known as the Webster Square Theatre Company. It has been organized with the following officers: President, Archer R. Greeley; treasurer, Harry Steinberg. The principal stockholders of the new company are Helen Rogers Steinberg and Harold T. Sweeney, both of Worcester.

Movie fans of Greater Boston have had little to complain of in the line of screen showings during the past week. At the Park Theatre "The Christian" has taken the place of "Robin Hood" for an indefinite run, Gordon's Olympia Theatre is showing "Mighty Lak a Rose," at Loew's State is "Adam and Eva," with "Drums of Fate" as the companion piece. At the Tremont Temple "The Town That Forgot God" has played its concluding week of a successful run; at the twin showhouses, the Modern Theatre and the Beacon Theatre, "The Prince and the Pauper," with the "Kingdom Within" as a companion piece, has been shown; Mae Murray in "Jazzmania" transferred from Loew's State Theatre to Loew's Orpheum Theatre; at the Boston Theatre Betty Blythe has been seen in "The Darling of the Rich," and at the Scollay Square Olympia Theatre the attraction has been "Fury." "One Exciting Night" has been shown at popular prices at Gordon's Capitol Theatre, the Fenway Theatre, the Exeter Theatre, the Codman Square Theatre and the Central Square Theatre.

The Washington Theatre, which was badly damaged several weeks ago when fire swept the old Odd Fellows Building on Washington street, Boston, where it is located, reopened on Sunday after having been renovated and redecorated from top to bottom. Harry Norton and Willie Hagman, both skilled instrumentalists, have been engaged as organists by Manager Frank L. Collier. The program for the reopening was selected with especial care and included "Tess of the Storm Country," Larry Semon in "No Wedding Bells" and Max Linder in "The Three Must-Get-Theirs." For the midweek change, Tom Mix in "Romance Land" and Alice Brady in "Missing Millions" were the attractions.

Patrons of the Melrose Theatre, located in one of Boston's suburbs, are greatly pleased with some improvements that have just been made by the management. The installation of a Minusa Gold Fibre screen, the locating of this screen further back on the stage, and the installation of new lens in the projectors have had the effect of making the equipment the equal of any of the large Boston movie houses. The new lens cuts a clear, sharp picture, with high lights and shadows that can be seen from every seat in the house without eye strain.

New Englanders did not respond to the invitation extended by President W. A. True of the Connecticut Motion Picture Owners of America unit, and of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation to attend a meeting at which the merits of the latter organization were to be set forth. The meeting was held according to schedule last Thursday afternoon at the Hotel Lenox, Boston, but was very sparsely attended. Jacob Lourie, president of the Massachusetts unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, presided.

The session was held behind closed doors, but because of the small representation of theatre owners no definite action was taken except to arrange for a future meeting. This is to be held on March 13 at the Copley-Plaza Hotel in Boston, and at that time it is hoped by the promoters of the new distributing corporation that they will be able to get sufficient information as to the attitude of the New England exhibitors towards the project so that a report may be made at the national convention of the M. P. T. O. A., to be held in Chicago May 19 to 26, inclusive.

To Re-wed Love of Youth

Charles Hilton, a moving picture manager of Los Angeles, Cal., is expected in Boston almost any day now to rewed the love of his youth, from whom he has been divorced for almost thirty-six years. Mr. Hilton is a native of Boston and Mrs. Hilton was born at Whitman, Mass. Each is now 68 years of age. They were married in Boston in 1873, and by this marriage had one son. As the years rolled by the flame of love burned low and finally the divorce court was reached and a legal dissolution of the marriage ties was decreed in 1887 on the grounds of desertion. Mr. Hilton immediately went west and there married again.

As the son grew to boyhood a steady communication was maintained with his father. After twenty years of happy wedded life the second Mrs. Hilton died in Los Angeles last August. Through his son Hilton had kept track of his former wife and it was also through his son that meetings were arranged. Hilton and his former wife became lovers once more. He proposed anew and was accepted. And now, after having wasted more than three decades, they believe that their declining years will be passed in an atmosphere of a real love that only death can render asunder.

tion of moving pitures on the Sabbath Day in Rhode Island was made during the past week when Representative Cianciarulo of Providence introduced into the Rhode Island House of Representatives an act in amendment of an act entitled "Of Shows and Exhibitions." Similar in effect to the amendment introduced in the Rhode Island Senate the previous week, this new act would permit performances between 3 and 6 p. m. and after 8 p. m. on Sundays. The act was sent to the House Judiciary Committee, and undoubtedly will engender the customary amount of uplift opposition when this committee holds public hearings upon its merits.

A fire panic that was started in the Empire Theatre at Salem, Mass., last Thursday afternoon was halted by the ushers before it had assumed alarming proportions. Several small boys had made their way into the balcony, which it was thought was closed. Believing they had been discovered, the boys started to run out and the pattering of their feet alarmed the audience below. Some excitable person shouted "Fire!" and in an instant many of the audience jumped to their feet and rushed to the exits.

The Bowdoin Square Theatre this week has joined the ranks of the first-run houses and is showing "The Secrets of Paris."

"Broken Chains" has been shown to big houses during the past week at Loew's Orpheum Theatre.

Providence audiences have been particularly interested during the past week in the showing of "My Dad" at Fay's Theatre, from the fact that this picture features Ruth Clifford, the only Rhode Island girl of any prominence now appearing on the silver screen.

"The Streets of New York" was given its New England premiere last week at the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I., and the reception accorded it at every performance was most gratifying to the management. The supporting feature was "The Forgotten Law," with the Eddie Lyons comedy feature, "Follow Me," for full measure.

Thieves who visited a large number of business places in New Bedford, Mass., all in one night, broke their way into the office of Manager Thomas E. Walter of the Orpheum Theatre. After tampering with the safe they departed without securing anything.

New England exhibitors are suffering quite a few losses from burglaries.

John F. Santos, projectionist of New Bedford, Mass., has received three notes bearing the Ku Klux Klan signature. He now has appealed to the chief of police for permission to carry a revolver.

A visual history of the city of Waterbury, Conn., is being compiled in motion pictures by Charles Tarr and Roy Clapp. Residents of the city are enacting the various roles in the story showing the growth of the city.

Goldstein Brothers' Amusement Company, of Springfield, Mass., has contracted for "The Third Alarm" and the film will be shown in all of the company's theatres. The price for the circuit was reported as $18,600. The company has fourteen theatres. Unusual efforts with a view of publicity will be made in each city where the Goldstein Brothers will present the picture. Pre-review showings will be arranged and the members of the fire commissions and firemen will be invited to the screenings.

San Francisco

Loew's Warfield Theatre paid tribute to Abraham Lincoln on the anniversary of his birthday by ceasing activities for a full minute after each performance in which a Lincoln film was featured. An announcement on the screen explained the minute of silence.

Joseph F. Enos, manager of the Frolic Theatre, has commenced the publication of a folder listing the coming attractions of this house. Business of late has been better than in many months and an especially fine showing was made during the recent visit of Carl Laemmle, owner of the house.

A community night celebration was held recently at the new Balboa Theatre in Westwood Park, the event being in the nature of an official opening, although this house has been in operation several weeks. This theatre enjoys the distinction of being located in one of the most beautiful residence parks in the United States.

Contracts have been awarded for the erection of a picture house seating 2,000, at Geary street and Eighteenth avenue. Reid Bros., 105 Montgomery street, are the architects, and the owners are Alex. E. and Joseph L. Levin, who have had wide experience in the management of district theatres. The building will cost in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Chris Johnson, former owner of the Verdi Theatre, has arranged to sail for Honolulu at an early date with Mrs. Johnson. Since disposing of their theatre interests they have made their home on a ranch, but have kept in close touch with the picture business.

P. J. Hanlon, of the Virginia Theatre, Vallejo, is wearing a broader smile than usual, the reason being the postponement of the plan to sink one or two hundred million dollars in the building of a naval base on the mud flats of Alameda. Be it known that Vallejo has for years been the site of the Pacific Coast navy yard and that its citizens are waxing a determined fight to have it retained as such. Exhibitor Hanlon is just as conversant on naval matters as in the art of conducting a picture theatre, having sailed the briny deep and having held commissions right up close to the admiral class

Work is being rushed on the new Fox Theatre at Oakland, Cal., and the prospects are that this house will be opened late in April. The equipment is already on hand and the managerial staff is being chosen.

The Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment has booked "The Message of Emile Coue" and this will be shown at the Portola Theatre, where it will be billed as a feature picture.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has booked the Roth "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera" picture for its entire circuit, with the exception of San Francisco, Oakland and San Jose, where it has already been shown.

Claude Langley, of the Turner & Dahnken & Langley Circuit, with houses in the southern part of the state, was a recent visitor here, coming up in connection with the proposed transfer of the Turner & Dahnken interests to the West Coast Theatres, Inc. Inventories are being taken at the various theatres involved in anticipation that the option taken on the properties will be closed.

Despite its record run at the Mission, Sol Lesser booked "Doctor Jack" for an extended run at the Alhambra and the film is now in its third week and still going like its first run showing.

Earl Wachter, manager of the F. B. O., booked "Captain Fly-by-Night" into Pantages for a week's run. Alec Pantages is featuring the picture over all the vaudeville acts.

Jackie Coogan got away to a big start at the Kinema this week. Sol Lesser states that the opening performance of "Oliver Twist" broke all house records for the Kinema.

After opening at the California "Mad Love" with Pola Negri will go into the Miller's Theatre for an extended run after it completes one week at the former playhouse. Despite its sad ending the people are eating up "Mad Love" and according to Fred Miller the people are not nearly so wild about a sugary ending as before.

Babies Jam Traffic

A traffic jam has occurred in the outdoor baby carriage parking places in New Bedford, Mass., because thoughtless young mothers are leaving their young hopefuls while they go to a picture show.

"It's getting to be terrible," is the way one of the attendants describes the state of affairs. In other words they're doing a turnaway business, because most of New Bedford's film houses have double-feature bills, which keep the mothers in the house for an unusually long time if they see the complete bill.

The baby carriage parking places are maintained by department stores and men have been employed to guard the infants while the mothers shop inside. But the "movies" are chiefly benefiting.

Los Angeles

Manager Harry David of the Mission will show "One Exciting Night," succeeding "Suzanna," which had a run of eight weeks to big houses. David changes his program on Wednesday instead of Saturday, Sunday or Monday, as is the practice among the other Los Angeles first run houses. David is taking lots of space in the newspapers for Griffith's latest and has billed the town like a circus.

Fred Miller is making an extended run of "The Christian" at his Main street playhouse, where the film is now in its third week after opening at the California.

Sid Grauman has put "Adam's Rib" over at the Rialto better than any previous De Mille feature. The crowds were so big that Sid started giving matinees at 10 a. m.

Wisconsin Blizzard Costs Exhibitors Many Thousands

Theatres in Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota lost thousands of dollars as a result of the season's worst blizzard which struck this section of the country February 12 and continued for four days. Part of this loss was suffered by seventy-eight picture houses in Wisconsin and Michigan, which either were forced into darkness or found it necessary to arrange emergency programs when the storm tied up film shipments.

A report to George L. Levine, of Universal in Milwaukee and president of the F. I. L. M. Club, and Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, showed that not one of these seventy-eight house received new shipments of films for at least two days.

Even outskirt houses in Milwaukee suffered because pictures booked there were delayed in transit.

While the downtown houses were not affected in this way, the extreme cold weather, however, put a crimp into box office receipts. A poll of the leading houses on the first night of the cold wave showed that with the exception of one house, where a contest served as a magnet, an unusually great number of seats were empty.

An epidemic of contagious diseases has closed picture houses in at least two Wisconsin cities and threatens to throw showhouses in many other parts of the State into darkness, according to Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin.

The theatres temporarily closed are the Majestic, in Sturgeon Bay, and the Orpheum and Grand, belonging to Fred and Frank Smith, in Menomonee, according to Mr. Baumann.

Theatre men in West Allis, a suburb of Milwaukee, are among those displaying anxiety over the situation in view of the fact that the schools there have been ordered closed because of the prevalence of scarlet fever and influenza. Similar action also was feared in Antigo for a time, according to word received in Milwaukee.

Charles Toy, widely known Chinese owner of the Toy Theatre and the building of the same name which houses numerous Milwaukee film exchanges, has been sued for $10,000 on a charge of breach of contract in connection with a restaurant deal.

Toy, in addition to his theatre, owns a leading chop suey house. Therefore, when a Chicago Chinese negotiated for the purchase of a nearby cafe, it is alleged Toy intervened and offered Henry Bursinger, the cafe owner and plaintiff in the suit, money with which to continue in the business.

However, it is charged that after Toy had issued the promised check, he suddenly changed his mind and ordered payment stopped which, it is alleged, caused Bursinger to sell finally at a lower figure than he originally could have gotten.

Work has been started on the first theatre in Shorewood, aristocratic suburb of Milwaukee. The showhouse will be part of a $200,000 building which, in addition, will house stores and twenty-two apartments. It will be located in the center of the exclusive residential section, a few blocks from the shores of Lake Michigan. The permit was issued to the Kel-Nau Investment and Amusement Co.

The fight against the return of daylight saving in Milwaukee this spring gained impetus on February 15, when representatives of sixteen downtown picture houses gathered at the Whitehouse Theatre to discuss a plan of action. Thomas Reynolds, a city alderman, outlined what could be expected from the common council and announced he has prepared a resolution to prevent return of daylight system. Exhibitors voiced the opinion that a concerted fight must be made to obtain passage of this resolution.

Convalescent war veterans at hospitals in Milwaukee and the vicinity were given a rare opportunity of trying out the famous "Day by day" theory of Dr. Emile Coue in an effort to rid themselves of their ailments when the famous French chemist appeared on the screen at Saxe's Strand Theatre.

Ed Weisfeldt, manager of the showhouse, threw the doors open to these boys during the week so that they might study his thory as expounded in "The Message of Emile Coue" and benefit thereby.

In connection with the showing of the picture Mr. Weisfeldt arranged to have a nurse in the lobby all day long to explain Coue's theory to those seeking information.

Incidentally, the largest electrical letters ever used by a Milwaukee showhouse, heralded Coue's picture from the Strand canopy. Each letter in the word "Coue" was approximately eight feet high and contained 100 candles.

With "Back Home and Broke" as the feature, all attendance records for the six months of its existence were broken on Sunday, February 11, at the New Milwaukee Theatre, according to George Fisher, manager.

The week beginning February 17 was a big week for the babies at Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee. Plump babies and lean babies, some crying, some smiling, crowded the showhouse with their mothers, each of whom proudly attempted to prove that her child most closely resembled the famous Baby Peggy of the movies.

The contest was staged by Manager Ralph Wettstein in conjunction with the showing of "Peg of the Movies." Handsome prizes were offered through tieups with merchants. As a grand finale, all of the youngsters were treated to a big kiddies' candy party.

Charles Brewster, assistant manager at the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, has resigned from his position and will devote his time to the electrical business. He has been succeeded by Henry Taylor, who, until January 1, was house manager of the Garden Theatre. Mr. Taylor, while at the Garden, established considerable reputation as a singer in prologues. He is a former opera singer. S. Walker is manager of the Butterfly.

BISHOP WILLIAM F. ANDERSON
Methodist Episcopal Church, Cincinnati, Ohio
I have seen today the new motion picture drama, "The Stream of Life." It is true to life. It has a high moral purpose and a powerful appeal. I heartily congratulate its author, Dr. Shields, and predict for it a great success.

REV. HARRY L. EVERETT, D. D.,
First Congregational Church, Jersey City, N. J.
For the second time within a year "The Stream of Life" has been shown in the People's Palace. This time it was given to a congregation of five of the largest churches in Jersey City, and may I say that the vast audience left the auditorium spellbound.

The Southeast

The many theatres formerly operated by Southern Enterprises which have been "sold" to men who have formerly been supervisors or managers for this corporation under the Lynch regime, have brought about considerable gossip as to whether or not Stephen A. Lynch is actually out of the business or held out a number of the houses when the Famous Players transfer was made, these houses to be operated by his former employes under a royalty or percentage basis.

Many of the best theatres formerly belonging to the chain have "changed hands," in each instance the new operators being employes of Southern Enterprises. Included in this was the Imperial at Asheville, which Carl Bamford has taken over. E. J. Sparks has also taken over several Florida houses, and Wilby of Alabama has taken over several of the theatres in that State. Coupled to this is the presumption current in this territory that the Enterprise Distributing Corporation and its system of exchanges still belongs to Lynch and is being operated upon a royalty basis by former employes. It's purely gossip, but is widely current.

Motion picture activities throughout the Florida territory are very brisk at present, with many changing hands and several new theatres going up. Jacksonville is to have a new colored theatre to seat 1,200, and which is said will rival many of the excellent theatres of the South in its general equipment and conveniences. E. V. G. Scranton, formerly operating the Liberty and Gem theatres, is building the new house, and it also will be the Gem. E. J. Sparks, who has already taken over theatres in Orlando, Lakeland and St. Augustine, formerly operated by Southern Enterprises, has leased the new theatre now under construction in Fort Pierce, Fla., which will seat 1,400 and cost around $80,000.

E. D. Brown, for several years with the Southern Enterprises, Atlanta, has left that organization to become affiliated with the rapidly growing theatrical interests of E. J. Sparks throughout Florida. Brown was formerly in the exchange end of the Enterprises.

Edenton, Ga., is soon to have a new theatre, plans of P. C. Rossee now being underway for the new house which will be named the Adele. It will open about March 1.

W. H. Carroll, formerly a Tampa exhibitor, has returned to the game, having purchased the Rivoli at Douglas, Ga., and the Colonial, at Vidalia, Ga.

Willard Patterson was compelled to open his Metropolitan Theatre a half hour earlier each day during the run of "The Voice from the Minaret," in order that the line-up for the opening morning show could get seated before the performance began. A big exploitation campaign in advance put the picture over to record-breaking business.

Friends throughout the Southeast are sympathizing with Carson Bradford in the death of his father, Joseph Bradford, which occurred at the home of his son in Miami, Fla.

C. E. Daffin, Tallahassee, Fla., plans to build a new and larger theatre there, work to begin in the early spring.

The Alpha, Manchester, Ga., will be reopened in the near future.

A disastrous fire visited Jackson, Ga., recently, burning among other buildings the Tudor Theatre there.

FILM EXCHANGE PERSONALITIES

Buffalo

A. W. Moses, one of the best known men in the exchange end of the business and former manager of the Select, Robertson-Cole and American Releasing exchanges, died suddenly Friday, February 16, of pneumonia. The body was taken to Scranton for burial. A large floral piece was sent to the home from the members of the various offices along Film Row. "Archie" Moses came to Buffalo six years ago. He was at one time assistant manager of the Syracuse Strand.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Merit Exchange, has engaged "Izzy" Cobe as a member of his sales staff. Izzy is "cleaning up" around Central New York. He was formerly with Universal.

J. R. Levee, formerly manager of the Warner Brothers' Exchange in the Beyer Building, has resigned and returned to New York to accept a position with Famous Players-Lasky. Charles Goetz is expected in town to select his successor at W-B.

Col. Howard F. Brink, manager of the Educational Exchange, had a visitor last week end in the person of John J. Scully, special representative of the New York exchange. Both Mr. Brink and Mr. Scully went to Rochester to screen Educational's Coue film for the Eastman.

Vitagraph Manager C. W. Anthony is celebrating his first anniversary as head of the local office and his sixth with the company. The past week, by the way, has been the biggest business week in the history of the Buffalo office. G. H. Balsdon, assistant general manager, was in town for a few days and Special Representative C. R. Cullingsworth made a trip to Syracuse.

E. M. Hopcraft has resigned from the Goldwyn sales staff. He has returned to Brooklyn. The Goldwynites this week are observing "Brady Week," in honor of Manager T. W. Brady, and are breaking all records for business.

"Hub" Taylor, Pathe plugger, returning from the Southern Tier in his canal barge, had the misfortune to see his engine balk on him, necessitating his sleeping all night in a farmhouse near Caledonia, N. Y., for the night. "Hub" never did like this winter weather.

Manager Allan S. Moritz of Paramount has engaged Malcolm Williams as a salesman. Mr. Williams was formerly with Realart when Harry E. Lotz was manager and has recently been in charge of the Pittsburg American Releasing exchange.

F. B. O. Salesman Harry T. Dixon has reached a state of affluence wherein he sees his way clear to purchase a palace for himself in the Kensington section of the Queen City of the Lakes. One of the few millionaires in the film business!

Manager A. W. Carrick, Hodkinson manager, was visited by George Dillon, sales manager at the New York office, and Joe Miller, salesman, the past week.

The Carolinas

Charlotte will have two additional film exchanges within the near future, bringing the total number up to an even dozen and second only to Atlanta as an exchange center. T. O. Tuttle, representing Hodkinson, was here during the past week making preliminary arrangements to open a Charlotte Branch. Tuttle previously managed the Bromberg office here. Al Lichtman Corporation, it is stated, will be open early in March at their Charlotte stand, having already advertised the existence of a Charlotte branch.

George E. Ebersole, for several years booker in the Charlotte Pathe office and for the past year holding down this position as well as the office of Southern division booker-inspector has been transferred to Chicago to head their booking department there.

J. U. McCormick is now packing a portfolio for Universal, handling the special productions, since the Select office closed.

Manager E. E. Heller, of the Pathe office, Charlotte, has effected a valuable tie-up with the Charlotte "Observer" whereby that newspaper will twice a week treat pictorially the current release of Pathe News.

R. C. Price, formerly with Universal, has been made assistant manager of the Charlotte office of Enterprise Distributing Corporation.

Robert E. Helms, for many years associated with various exchanges in Charlotte, is now chief booker with the new F. B. O. office.

W. B. Corby, has resigned his position with Pathe.

Oscar Kantner, Paramount's new exploitation chief in this territory, recently put over "Manslaughter" personally at Aiken, S. C.

Louis Ingram, Al Lichtman salesman, is covering South Carolina territory.

Pittsburgh

Manager A. E. Atkinson is displaying Film Row's newest automobile. It's a Hupmobile coupe and "Al" is mighty proud of it. He traded in his nine-months-old Hupmobile touring car on his new one.

H. M. Berman, general manager of the Film Booking Offices, spent a day in Pittsburgh recently in conference with his local manager, A. H. Schnitzer. Berman gave a pep talk to the sales force of the local office, and expressed himself as being highly pleased with the excellent showing being made by this office.

H. M. Herbel, former manager of the Pittsburgh Universal branch, and now assistant general sales manager for the Universal, is spending a few weeks in Buffalo, N. Y., beginning his new duties. He will be back in Pittsburgh at a later date, and pick up his Packard car, which he stored here, and will then drive to Cincinnati, his next stop.

H. M. Wilkinson, First National publicity director, who was to be transferred to the Detroit office of the same company this past week, has just received a "wire" to stay in the Steel City indefinitely. Wilkinson says he has nothing against our fair town, but nevertheless he's out of luck, because he has already shipped his household furniture to Detroit, and given up the lease for his home here as well.

Fank Drew, former Fox manager in Pittsburgh, has left the city, and by this time is crossing the ocean to take up his new duties as assistant general manager of the British Isles for the Fox organization.

E. A. Cumberland, formerly branch manager for the United Theatre Equipment Corporation in New York City, is in charge of the Pittsburgh U. T. E. branch, pending the selection of a new manager for the local office to succeed Frank L. France, who resigned to join the First National

Milwaukee

"Pathe in Milwaukee is going to have the finest exchange home than can be built." This was the statement of William Aschman, manager of the Milwaukee office, in announcing that a deal virtually has been closed which will bring Pathe into a new building by May 1. Details of the deal have been worked out satisfactorily to all parties concerned and the only thing still lacking is the matter of formal signatures, he said.

The building to be constructed under direction of Pathe under the terms of a fifteen year lease, will be 60 by 130 and will provide 5,200 square feet for Aschman's firm. It will be a one-story affair and will house in addition to Pathe, one smaller exchange to be decided upon later.

Chicago

Joe Smith of the Universal office is smiling broadly these winter days. The reason is that the stork left a baby girl at the house. Both mother and baby are getting adong fine.

J. M. Jacoby is now handling Warner Brothers pictures exclusively out of the First National office.

Edward Brichetto is now covering the southwest territory in this State for the First National office.

The Metro office here reports that Oscar Osborne, manager at Omaha, has been transferred to the Cincinnati office. Samuel McIntyre succeeds him at Omaha, coming from the Atlanta office.

Hal Oliver has been made assistant to Al Sobler, exploitation manager for the First National in this territory. Oliver was formerly at Boston for the company.

Frank Mantzke, manager here for the American Releasing, closed with Ft. Wayne to show George Beban and his company there the week of March 18, and has also closed with the Ascher, Lubliner & Trinz for "The Darling of the Rich" and "What Fools Men Are."

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Play May Be the Thing But Still, The Playhouse Counts for Something

SHAKESPEARE said that "the play's the thing," but Bill was a dramatic author and perhaps he was prejudiced in favor of his own line of work. To the manager the playhouse should at least be as important as the play, and yet for every dollar spent in popularizing a theatre, one hundred dollars of exhibitor money is spent to give popularity to some play good for a run of from one day to a week—seldom longer. The relation is disproportionate.

This does not argue, of course, that it pays to spend money to tell that the manager has "always a good show." That was the device of a bygone day when a program of three to five one-reel features did not lend itself well to intensive advertising. That was before the time of the star system and the book and stage success, and different days call for different methods. It does not seem to this writer, however, that the present day calls for the promotion of the star film to the exclusion of all else. It does not call for the selling of a star feature and only that.

Managers at Fault

It may be argued that the patronage follows the feature, but if it does, it is merely because the management has taught a clientele to follow the star offering. He has dug the pit into which he has fallen, and the best thing to do is to dig himself out again.

It will be only a matter of a few months to train any house following to regard the offering as a whole and not come or stay away on the strength of the star feature. It will require no more newspaper space. It is merely a matter of using that space in a different manner.

Nine-tenths of the theatre advertising sells the idea of a star feature and little else. No effort is made to sell the various items of a bill. The success of a program stands or falls on one feature, and on that alone.

It Is Being Done

Some managers will argue that the star feature is the only thing to sell, but the argument is unsound. Managers like Eddie Hyman of the Brooklyn Strand, the Circle, Indianapolis; Sid Grauman and others sell a complete entertainment and know that they pick some ticket sales from features other than the longest film offering.

If they can do it, others can. If they do it, others should. Grauman is not building million-dollar houses because the theatres he already has are losing money. He makes money by selling the idea that at the Grauman theatres you see a complete and well varied program. Sometimes people go in spite of the star feature.

At the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, a large percentage of the patrons care less about the feature than the general program. For this reason you never see a Hyman advertisement confined to the film feature. Unless he has an extra-length film he gives at least a third of his space to the specialty program and shorter length films. Sometimes he gives more to the specials.

So much stress is laid upon the features by the salesmen that they have sold the managers the idea that the star film alone counts. The exchanges handling the short lengths are in the minority, and they cannot offset this propaganda, yet a large class of patrons go more to see the news reel or the comedies than most managers realize, and they have to take these on faith, since they are not advertised.

The wise manager will sell not only all his show, but will sell his house—as the home of good entertainment—into the bargain. That is a headliner he has always with him, if he will only make it a headline.

Try it for a time. It pays others. It will pay you.

Refused a Contest Took Special Story

Now and then contests wear their welcome out and The Hottentot came into San Francisco just about the time the editors were threatening to close the Golden Gate on the next contest suggestor.

The Tivoli Theatre press agent wanted to run a contest for the best picture of racing scenes taken by amateur photographers, as a means of telling of the fine racing stuff in the First National Ince production, but the editors would have none of it.

Nothing daunted, the P. A. went home and wrote a feature story on action photography, illustrated with race pictures from the stills of the play.

The Bulletin not only played it up for a feature, but it sent out 4,000 marked copies to members of the Camera Club and various sports clubs, and the persistent press agent smiles once more.

A First National Release

DON'T FEEL SORRY FOR THIS POLICE PUP. HE IS STANDING IN NICE WARM COTTON SNOW.

He was the chief factor in one of those old-time lobby displays W. E. Drumbar and W. F. Brock got up for the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, on "Brawn of the North," and which helped to shoot the receipts to nearly double the usual takings. Mr. Drumbar is manager of theatres and Brock is the resident manager of The Strand. This looks like one of their old-time showings.

Painted Mirrors to Get Full Attention

Women are the deciding factor in ticket sales as a rule, and there is one point where you can always reach the women, and that is on the mirrors in the lobby. No woman can resist a glance at the mirror as she passes, and if you have your announcements put up there—still leaving an ample reflecting surface, you are bound to reach them.

For advance work on "The Sin Flood," F. K. O'Kelly, of the Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., cut the heads of six of the players from the Goldwyn lithographs and fastened them to the glass. Then he lettered in a sign with colored whiting, with a little glue to make it stick, and he had something every woman patron saw. Most of the men got the message, too, for there are a lot of men who wonder if their neckties are on straight, and it has been demonstrated in the New York subways that more men than women look into the mirrors on the gum-vending machines there.

If you have lobby mirrors and do not letter them up occasionally, you are losing the next best to your screen advertising, but reserve the idea for the extra big ones.

The photograph is rather a jumble, since the photographer could not cut out the reflection, but you can get the idea, and also a good suggestion of the Strand's stained glass front. Never mind the front, but get the idea and use it. It will put extra dollars into the box office.

PAINTED MIRRORS STILL HAVE A STRONG APPEAL TO WOMEN

H. K. O'Kelly, of the Strand Theatre, Altoona, cut the heads from a lithograph and pasted them to a lobby mirror, painting in the necessary lettering. The reflection of the front confuses the photograph, but you can get the idea.

Herschel Stuart Has a Lifelike Semon

One of the best ballyhoo doubles since Clive Hartt quit impersonating Chaplin is a double for Larry Semon dug out by Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, for "The Counter Jumper."

Herschel sends in six pictures of the man, Larry Wagner, and they are ringers for the Vitagraph comedian. If you live near St. Louis perhaps Herschel will let you have his address. He's a wonder if his work is as good as his resemblance. With most impersonators the resemblance stops with the costume, but this man looks like Larry's twin.

Off and On

The woman sign painter stunt is still current. Recently "Mme. Frui, noted French artist," painted a sign for the Valentine Theater, Canton, Ohio, for Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," working as slowly as she could to make the stunt last. It still seems to get attention. Just what the Madame's name is when he puts on his trousers is not recorded, and it doesn't matter much anyway. A female impersonator does not need a very clean shave when working on top of a three-story building, if you get the idea.

Various Angles on Denver "Knighthood"

No one stunt was trusted to put over "When Knighthood Was in Flower" when it played the Princess Theatre, Denver. Manager Al G. Birch looked after the newspapers while Rick Ricketson went after windows and Homer Ellison stood around and thought of other things for them to do.

A castle front was made for the lobby, and the week before the large oil paintings were hung in the auditorium and foyer. Only straight publicity was used in the papers, but Birch managed to sell off a lot of this and worked it from the society angle.

Ricketson confined his window efforts to chain stores on the principle that the chain stores specialize in choice locations. He tied a tailor to the comparisons in dress, a drug concern to the cosmetics, which were used even in the Tudor times, and ten candy stores were tied to the Knighthood Kiss—"the kind that won a throne."

And when he had a little spare time Rick arranged a parade of bannered automobiles of a certain make, getting about a dozen nice looking cars for nothing more than a slide and an argument—chiefly argument.

Most restaurants and tea rooms were induced to tie in with some special Knighthood dish and a final touch was given by reserving all of the seats.

PUTTING UP A GOOD FRONT WAS JUST A BEGINNING

For "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at the Princess Theatre, Denver, this castle front was just the starter for an unusually elaborate campaign, with a raft of windows, an automobile parade and a lot of things like that.

No Klux Cross

Hornellsville, N. Y., was thrown into a ferment not long ago by the display of a fiery cross upon a hillside above the town. Hundreds rushed to the spot, hoping to horn in on a Ku Klux initiation, but instead they were merely advised that "The Eternal Flame" was to play the Majestic Theatre. This was something they had already been told, but it was more forcefully impressed upon their memories.

The cross was formed of railroad flares.

THREE KINDS OF ETERNAL FLAMES FROM MEMPHIS

This foyer display from Loew's Palace Theatre is based on a cutout, but it offers painted flames, chiffon flames and the burning candle. The turn does not show the ribbon flames, which were kept in motion by a concealed fan, but they had them.

Moon Has Copy for Laundry Enclosure

Russell Moon, New Haven Paramounteer, who takes pictures from the wrong side of his stunts sometimes, has a good idea for laundry enclosures. He worked it for the Broadway Theatre, Norwich, on "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

The original is a slip five and one half by eleven inches, carrying a two column press book cut and this essential copy:

WAS IN FLOWER"

The linens of Milady and Knight were made fresh and clean by beating upon the rocks at the edge of the stream. Aplenty soap was used and the smashing contact upon the smooth rocks at the water's edge removed the dirt and likewise soon frayed the garment. Hooked Comic Strip to "Dr. Jack" Date

So far as Birmingham, Ala., was concerned there was just one show in town the week "Dr. Jack" held forth at the Strand Theatre. All city records were broken and the other houses starved.

And it was done largely through a new style of hook-up devised by L. R. Towns, the manager of the Strand.

The Barney Google cartoon strip is the favorite with the readers in Birmingham, so Mr. Towne sold the News on the idea of putting over Barney and his decrepit racer through a popularity contest.

He exchanged slides for newspaper space, both reading the same. One was:

This Harold Lloyd is trying to beat my Sparky in a laughter handicap put on by the Birmingham News. Friends DO YOUR DUTY.

BARNEY GOOGLE.

The other was phrased:

To the Public: Barney Google has entered his Sparky in a handicap put on by the News. If he can beat "Dr. Jack" the brown derby is his.

HAROLD LLOYD.

Then the News sprang the contest idea. The number of votes was to decide the relative popularity, but the winners of the prizes were to be the writers of the best letters explaining why Lloyd or Barney should be given the award. The cash total was $25.

For this there were purchased several columns of front page publicity of the best sort. Barney won the award, but Mr. Towne did not worry. The decision was that Barney was best because he was there every day.

Biographical

Getting local self-made men to relate their early experiences is a new stunt on "Back Home and Broke."

It was pulled in Titusville, Pa., where J. Schweitzer, of the Orpheum, came on the stage each evening the week before the showing of the Meighan picture and called on well known citizens to tell where and how they got it.

By carefully picking his men the manager gave no offense, and a lot of business men were glad to get up and do a little modest bragging. If you use the stunt play safe and get permission first. Most men will fall for a tactful approach.

Ming Toy Brothers Told All About Her

Booking in a Chinese novelty act on his vaudeville bill the week before "East is West" was due at the Academy of Music, Newburgh, gave William Fleming a good ballyhoo.

The troupe wear native dress on the street to advertise their act, and he sent them out to sell red ink extras on the Constance Talmadge play. Each man carried on his back the request to "See our sister, Ming Toy, in 'East is West' at the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday."

It gave emphasis to the Oriental angle and also advertised the current show.

Hooks to Paper

Barnet Zuckerman, publicity man for the Regent Theatre, Brooklyn, writes that he put up business for "The Beautiful and Damned" by getting permission to snipe the posters put out by a daily paper which was running the story as a serial.

It is a clever hook-up and one not apt to suggest itself to the manager, but Zuckerman keeps both eyes open and he got a good stunt at small cost.

Tar Soap Windows Help "East Is West"

Hooking to a tar soap has brought strong cooperation from druggists in most towns where "East Is West" has played. The hook up is worked through the jobbers and can be obtained with a minimum of effort on the part of the exhibitor.

The cut shows a drug store window in Austin, Texas, decorated with the material supplied by the soap manufacturers in screen and cutout, supplemented by stills supplied by the Queen Theatre.

Tank Drama

Sharon, Pa., is not exactly a tank town, but Sam Friedman, of the Luna Theatre, built a tank in his lobby for "Ebb Tide." A local diver gave exhibitions of how they dived for pearls in the ebb tide.

At least that is what John (formerly Max) Rosenfield, the Paramount golem expert, declares, though it is a bit cold for diving down in Pennsylvania just now. Max—that is, John—must have mislaid his calendar, for another story has them catching butterflies in Washington, Pa.

And there is a line on each Paramount story which begins: "The Division of Exploitation undertakes to furnish only veracious accounts of exploitation on Paramount Pictures!"

We expect any day to get a story from Max telling how they staged a bullfight on the ice to exploit "Blood and Sand" down in Mexico City or something like that.

Wanted New Ending

It's old stuff, but it works well for "The Sin Flood."

The Strand Theatre, Salina, Kansas offered prizes of ten and five dollars and tickets for the best new endings.

This is a better angle on "The Sin Flood" than it would be on most pictures since there is such an infinity of possible endings. It's not a story which must move to one definite and logical point. You can use your own judgment in figuring out how the people would act, once the crisis was passed. And in this leeway is found the great value of the stunt as applied to this particular story.

You cannot use fifteen dollars to greater advantage, and you can give the local paper a good reading stunt for which the editor should be willing to pay with space on other productions.

Assorted Lengths

Russell Moon, New Haven Paramounteer, adopted Fred V. Greene's inch-of-film idea for "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and added a foot length for window cards.

Russ is better on ideas than on grammar, for he announces that "there is 129,600 like inches" in the Marion Davies production at eleven cents an inch, making the total cost $1,500,000, which is what Russ gets for associating with John (formerly Max) Rosenfield, of the home office, who measures his golems with a magnifying glass. At eleven cents an inch the total is only $1,425,500. He is cheating $74,500, but a small sum like that is nothing to an exploiteer. One inch of film was set in a window on each card.

But somehow eleven cents an inch does not seem to be very impressive because there is such a vast difference between eleven cents and a million and a half dollars. We think this flivs a little.

A better stunt was the window card shown here, which displays a foot of film and gives the total cost instead of the price by the inch. This card is not cut, but a window could be hand cut into the cards and a piece of tissue pasted over the open-

Choicy

Putting on plenty of "dog" got a special hook-up page on "When Knighthood Was in Flower" in Portland, Me. The Jefferson Theatre sold off the page on the argument that since Knighthood was a dollar top only the topside merchants could come in. There were only six of these, but they were the most exclusive shops in town, and the very fact of their co-operation gave added dignity to the engagement and added class to the attraction.

Incidentally it gave the press agent a chance to sell off his page to some new names. In return the stores were permitted to give one free ticket to all purchasers of goods to the value of $10 or more. Special tickets were printed up, which were backstamped by the distributors.

artistic proportioning, but it shows what can be done.

This is supposed to be the Love Boat scene, and it was enough out of the ordinary to bring a better than usual business for the Constance Talmadge effort.

Nice Necks

"Ebb Tide" has nothing much to do with pearls, but Charles Eggers, of the Lyric Theatre, McKeesport, Pa., knew a man who had traveled in the South Seas and had some photographs of the pearl fisheries. And he knew the jeweler who handles imitation pearls.

He borrowed the photographs to loan the jeweler to make a window display, adding some stills of the picture.

Having gone that far he went further. He bought one of the necklaces as a prize and started a "prettiest neck" contest in one of the newspapers, with the winner getting it in the neck on the stage of the Lyric.

Nothing germane to "Ebb Tide," but it was vital from the box office angle, and Eggers would tie a corn cure to a hero with wooden legs if it would sell tickets for him.

Easy Marks

F. K. Davis, of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col., was right up to date with his exploitation on "Nobody's Money." He got hold of some marks and rubles in the smaller denominations—just a few thousand each.

These were enclosed with a card bearing only the title, "Nobody's Money," and given to department stores to be placed in bundles. Then Davis came out with the offer to accept the money at its exchange value in payment for tickets to see the picture. It got a big laugh, but most persons held on to the paper as curios.

Built Up Business in An Emergency

Because a sleet storm killed all the power wires in Greenwood, S. C., one evening, the Liberty Theatre had to close, along with a lot of other enterprises. Learning that it would be several days before the wires could be repaired and the current started, W. A. Byers, the manager, got busy.

He had Kick In booked for Thursday and Friday, and he knew he could get real money with that if he only could show it. The storm put the electric plant out of business Tuesday evening. Wednesday morning, in spite of bad roads, Mr. Byers drove 28 miles to borrow a small power plant used on a farm. Twenty-four batteries came with the outfit and Wednesday evening was spent charging the batteries.

Hand Press Worked

Meanwhile, since there were no newspapers and the power presses could not be operated, Mr. Byers got out some throwaways printed on a hand press. These announced that Kick In would be shown. Hand painted one sheets, posted along the business streets, supplemented the bills.

Four shows were given to big business on Thursday. Friday morning the overtaxed generator of the telephone company broke down and Mr. Byers loaned the plant to them, understanding that the light current would be on by the time the matinee opened. Current did not go on until six o'clock, and he lost the two matinee shows, but he made the telephone company his friends for life, and when it finally did come out the newspaper played up the public spirited act on the front page, bringing more than passing credit.

In spite of the lost matinees, the business was a fifth above the average.

Once Upon a Time—

Once upon a time there was a chap named George Rea, who ran a picture theatre in Hillsboro, Ohio.

Then he moved to Washington Court House, which is so close to Hillsboro that it looks with fine contempt upon the last named town.

And once upon a time, not so very long ago, Rea wanted to put out a double deck co-operative page for "When Knighthood Was in Flower," and he sold the merchants, but the editor was haughty and remarked that in Washington Court House they did not sully their fair pages with double trucks, as even a man from Hillsboro should understand.

And George came right back with the repartee that he was not from Hillsboro but Winchester, and he had been around the world four times and Washington Court House was the only hick burg he ever saw too dead to grab off two whole pages of advertising on one contract.

And afterward the editor admitted that it was a fine looking double truck and expressed the hope that George would do it some more quite frequently.

Moral: The quick answer turneth away the turndown.

After you have laid out your program of special music for Easter week, get busy on a flower matinee for Memorial Day. Keep looking ahead.

Soap Windows Had Cash Contest, Too

Eight Jacksonville druggists ran the tar soap windows when the manufacturers gave $50 for a prize contest on why the essayists liked that particular brand of soap.

The soap stunt was, of course, tied to East Is West, playing the Imperial Theatre. A. B. Hill gave the druggists plenty of support on his screen in return for the newspaper advertising some of them used.

Backing this up, he made a falsework of compoboard to partly box in the sidewalk between the curb and the marquise roof, with sides down to the building line, all lettered in pstudo Chinese characters. A banner also stretched across the sidewalk under the marquise and the inner side of the falsework was painted with green and red dragons and other D. T. inducers. The lights were dyed pink for lobby and under the marquise, and streamers of red and green bunting were used in a sort of curtain effect.

A canopy of the same quite tones were used on the marquise roof.

Taken by and large most of the white population knew of the coming of Constance Talmadge in the play and a large proportion availed themselves of the information and enjoyed the performance.

Border for Reid

For some reason the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, O., could not put Wallace Reid over with the same degree of success he met in most cities. Fred S. Meyer, one of the most astute managers in the game, did the best he could with but indifferent success.

But with the news of Reid's death Mr. Meyer pulled another attraction to set in "Thirty Days," though he had no time for a campaign. The screen was used and the daily paper carried a 175 by three with a mourning border 36 points wide enclosing a picture of the dead actor and this simple copy: "The late and beloved Wallace Reid in his latest and last production, the only one never presented in Hamilton, 'Thirty Days.' Cast includes Wanda Hawley." All but two of the existing records, both for numbers and cash, were exceeded and as Mr. Meyer puts it, it just shows that a fellow has to die to be appreciated.

MAKING A "PRODUCTION" OF A STREET PERAMBULATOR

Jackie Coogan Club a Permanent Hook-up

One of the best and most original schemes for the promotion of the popularity of young Mr. J. Coogan has been devised by J. P. Adler, of the Adler Theatre, Marshfield, Wis. It is a distinctly good idea and one which others will do well to copy, even where the popularity of the little star is such that a hook-up might be supposed unnecessary.

When Jackie came along in "Oliver Twist" Mr. Adler made a deal with one of the large stores for the formation of a Jackie Coogan Club. It was framed to let it appear that the idea had originated with the store and had been put over by them with no small effort.

The store had "hard" cards printed up with the certificate of membership on the face and a permanent store advertisement on the back. Care should be taken with the framing of the advertisement that it may be of lasting value. That is, it should refer to the store in general; perhaps as the best source of children's ware, and not advertise a bargain of the moment, for the stunt is a permanent one and not merely a one-time idea.

These membership cards are issued to any boy or girl under twelve who applies at a designated counter accompanied by a mother or father to vouch for parental consent. Of course the card counter is so placed that the parents (and in a majority of instances the parent is the mother) must pass an attractive display of bargains for children and adults.

The child's card is filled out with the name and address written in ink, and the name of the parent is taken off on a store sheet, along with the address, to supply a mailing list.

The card is good for a half-price admission to the special matinees to be arranged on all Coogan presentations at the Adler. This commits the management to a special matinee on every Coogan play, but no manager will object to this, since the advertising value of the child matinee is too well known to require argument here.

The stunt not only sold off Jackie to big business, but it will keep the youngsters constantly on the watch for his new productions. They discuss them with their parents and sell off the adults on the idea of seeing all the Coogan pictures.

The advantage to the store is the permanent advertisement. The advantage to the house is the attraction of the children and the advertising the store must do each time to keep in on the stunt; for, of course, lost cards will be reissued.

It looks as though Mr. Adler has hit upon a real dollar-drawing idea. If you wish a six months' limit may be placed on the cards.

Mr. Adler also sold the schools on "Oliver Twist" so well that the superintendent personally supervised the distribution of half-price tickets to all classes on the contention that "Oliver Twist" was a story all children should be familiar with.

CAN YOU IMAGINE A TRUCK DRIVER WITH A SWANSON FEZ?

These hats were distributed by Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, at a midnight matinee, but they can be used for any festival occasion or laid off to beefsteak dinners, church fairs, carnivals and the like.

Gilded Pills

Exploitation in Japan develops some interesting angles. Yammoto Kato, who runs the Dai-Ichi Asahikan Theatre, Kwansai, Honsu, made a permanent hook-up when he advertised that the current methods of English study were antiquated. "Come to our cinema house and learn to read the titles," he pleads in fluent ideagraph. "It is easier and more interesting. John (formerly Max) Rosenfield suggests that this might be worked in our own cities where there is a sizable foreign population. It's not a bad idea. He used it on "Don't Tell Everything," which is just getting into the Japanese provinces.

Building Up

Instead of a prologue on "The Hottentot" the Capitol Theatre, Detroit, used the treadmill race, with just the upper parts of the horses showing. At a proper point in the race episode the film was cut, the screen taken up and a flash of the running horses shown. Then the screen was dropped and the picture ran on.

The entire thing lasted less than a minute, but it gave a novel twist to the presentation that was not without its exploitation angle—which is something most prologues lack.

The house used cutouts for three sides of the marquise and tied a phonograph store to a joint display for this Ince production and "East is West."

ONE OF THE BEST LOBBY DISPLAYS FOR "EAST IS WEST"

This is from J. B. Carroll, of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., and is the first to use the translucent paper screens which used to constitute the siding of the Japanese homes and which takes the light nicely. That is real gravel on the floor.

Starting Early

Although release dates have not yet been assigned for "The Covered Wagon," George E. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City, has already obtained a window showing of the stills.

A clothing store was planning a reduction sale, which was to be widely advertised. Carpenter heard of it, and suggested to the store manager that stills of "The Covered Wagon," which was produced in Utah by a Utah man—James Cruze—would help pull the passer-by.

Nearly a dozen large stills were obtained and placed right in the front of the window, with a properly worded card, and the pleased clothing merchant found that they really pulled people up to the window.

Meanwhile Carpenter and Kenneth Renaud, Paramounteer, have been working the newspapers on the made-in-Utah angle, and have gained considerable free publicity, which is not less valuable because it is clearly news and not immediate press stuff, all of the stories stating clearly that the opening has not yet been decided upon.

Keep out a regular line of posted paper no matter what you do in the way of exploitation. Nothing reaches better than pictorial sheets.

TWO HEADS ARE BETTER THAN ONE, BUT SIXTEEN!

The Lyric Theatre, Redfield, S. D., put all of its advertising appropriation into posters for "Strongheart," and had sixteen pictures of the dog star for its lobby display, keeping down the expense and running up the receipts. Nothing could be better.

McCuan's Appeal Hits All Families

It has been some time since L. W. McCuan, of the Kozy Theatre, Dresden, Tenn., has sent in an idea, and he just saves himself from a nasty letter by kicking in with another good one.

Mr. McCuan has set apart Wednesdays as Family Nights, when the whole darned family is urged to attend in a body and the kids of school age ride in free if with their parents and they have a ticket.

Not Kid Matinees

The tickets are hard stock, nicely printed, and are dated so that they must be used on the day indicated. The Wednesday shows are not in any way related to the kid matinees. The attractions are such as will interest the older persons, but they are selected to appeal to the children as well; "Thunderclap" and "The Last Trail" being representative bookings.

Father figures that it will cost nothing for the children if he and Ma go with them, so he spends two quarters to save the pass, and the whole family gets the idea of going on other nights. It's a business builder as well as a moral effect stunt, and better from the business angle because it is habit forming.

A Big Week

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjes'ka Theatre, Augusta, Ga., based his display on One Week of Love on the fact that a week had seven days. Seven large hearts were made of compo board and each was lettered with one day of the week. Then the seven were arranged to form the figure seven in front of the lobby with the text reading:

One Week

E

This was done by nailing them to two pieces of batten. The days of the week, spelled out in full, were at the top of the heart and the announcement at the bottom. One of the lobby stills are pasted on the center of each card. It is inexpensive and attracts because of its simplicity.

Sixteen Foot Head for The Masquarader

A sign said to be sixteen feet high, but which seems to come closer to ten or twelve feet, was used for a street display on The Masquerader in Ogden, Utah, where it was used by the Orpheum Theatre. Press agents are notoriously poor judges of distance and that sixteen needs a little editing.

Fought Own Feature

When Amike Vogel, the Paramounteer who tries to spend his Sundays in Pittsburgh, was called to Johnstown, Pa., to help the Nemo Theatre put over "The Valley of Silent Men" he found that he was expected to help crab "When Knighthood Was in Flower," at the other house.

He did not break the record, but he gave the Nemo a record second only to the Davies' production, and did it mostly with a dog-team, bannered. He took advantage of a snowstorm which had just hit that section to sell the Alaskan idea.

Hooked In to Week Instead of Picture

Finding a local Apple Week of greater interest than a feature, Frank Steffy, of the Coliseum Theatre, Seattle, hooked in to the week to put over Barthelmess in Fury.

He nominated his best looking usherette the Apple Girl and sent her out to give the Mayor an apple, shooting some three hundred feet of news picture of the event.

He also tied the evening paper to a pie baking contest—apple pie, of course—with $25 split seven ways, and after the contest the pies went to poor families and institutions.

He also borrowed a window from an automobile concern to plug the apples, using 20,000 fruit in various ways through the week.

In all the stunts the Coliseum Apple Girl appeared in all news photographs, and there was always some reference to the First National picture. That was because Steffy stands well with the newspapers.

This Omaha Artist Beats Staff Men

It's a shame to have to reduce this illustration on Robin Hood from the Strand Theatre, Omaha, for it is going to suffer somewhat in the process but it is 120 lines across six and it will simply have to come down. It is the advertisement of the Strand Theatre, Omaha, and the work was done by Gordon Bennett, the staff artist, who has proven in the past that he can get good results with poor printing week after week. Bennett knows what so few realize; that it is how the picture will look in the paper which counts in drawing up newspaper ads, and he plans his efforts to suit his medium. He knows that he cannot get strong black unless he makes his lines too heavy, so he lays out his idea to work with soft tones. In this scene he gives most of the color to the figure of Robin Hood, who stands against a somewhat vague background of forest, while on the other side of the panel is a castle across the valley. It is all beautifully done, and without the letter press would be well worth framing for figure and perspective work alike are of high class and the design shows poetical invention. It is so inviting an appeal that it will probably draw to the theatre many persons who could not be reached by the jazziest talk about Doug and the millions spent on the production. It creates the suggestion of artistic value and it carries this even into the modified old English lettering; one of the few instances where this style of letter is permissible in an advertisement. It fits in with the whole and the lettering is kept so large that there is not the slightest difficulty in reading it. Mr. Bennett has done some remarkable work in the past, notably with Lorna Doone, but we think that this is far and away the best he has done, and our hat is off to a man who can get magazine results in newspaper work. Bennett is in a class absolutely by himself and he has produced a result that overlays anything the home office has done on this picture. And with it all he has not forgotten that the first mission of a theatre advertisement is to sell tickets. That's the surprising thing about Bennett. He is a real artist and he is also a real advertiser. This is a combination rarely met with.

Village Blacksmith Had Christmas Tree

This is the Christmas advertisement from the Terminal Theatre, Newark, N. J. A bit late perhaps, but still suggestive of an idea, though it is too late to turn the good old chestnut tree by the village smithy to Christmas uses. The display is well laid, but with a better than usual cast it would appear that more might have been gotten out of the vignettes. It might have been a little more work to have added the name of the player, as well as the character, but the combination would have been worth the trouble in the additional pull the names would have given. An all-star cast sounds all right if you can name no well-known players, but the "Blacksmith" offers some real names; and the display would have pulled rather better had these names been employed in the display advertising as well as in the news story. It is a mistake to argue that the public will get the names from the story which accompanies the advertisement, on the same or a nearby page. If you have something of value to sell put it into the advertisement. Do not trust the patron—perhaps only half sold—to turn to another column for more details. Offer all you have to sell in your own market-place. Then if you can get more space in the theatre department for a repetition of the facts, all the better. You then get two chances at the same person. He may read one and not the other, but, whichever he reads, he gets all of the argument and not merely a portion of the wares. We do not know that we like the adaptation of the United Candy Stores' slogan to the house, with "Happiness in every show." This sounds more like the utilization of a line because

Misleading

Howard James, of the Union Theatre, Voluntown, Conn., is a real hustler in a small town. He sends in a house program that is better in its features than the product of the usual small-town printer. It is well set and better printed, and—write it large—there is one small-town printer who realizes that black type is not always the most conspicuous. He uses a light face for titles, and gets a much better effect than you can find in most city programs, where the printers seem to feel that "display" means the blackest in the case and not merely a disposal of type to get emphasis. But we call upon James to tell just what he means when he writes of "Man-Woman-Marriage" in this strain: "You'll see thousands of women ride barebacked into battle, clad only as the Amazons of old." And down below he adds: "Be on hand this night. Our capacity is limited." We think that Howard is trying to cheat the local baldheaded row by not being more definite and explaining that the horses, and not the riders, are barebacked, and that the fashion plates for Amazons call for skirts. His copy suggests something that would make a De Mille Babylonian episode resemble a fashion show of togas. But it probably made business for the limited capacity.

Takes What He Wants from the Plan Books

W. M. Reed, of the Columbia Theatre, Junction City, Kan., sends in a rather deep display on "East Is West," which is interesting chiefly in showing what can be done with plan book cuts if you do not find anything that will meet your needs in the cuts as they are arranged. Mr. Reed does not throw away the book because he can find nothing that is just what he wants. He goes through it a second time and figures what he can use out of what he is offered. These two cuts are not all there were to the cuts as displayed in the book, but they are all that Mr. Reed wanted, and he knows that he can cut away the excess of cut and get what he does want. Frankly, we think he has a better display than the original would have yielded on this, for he gets room for more talk, and talks in type. No matter how popular Miss Talmadge may be with your patrons there is so much to be said about this production that you need to tell even the fans. They may be most ardent in their appreciation of her work, and yet if you tell even a fan that this is a better than usual picture you stand a better chance of a sale, and at the same time you stand a better chance of selling the idea to the non-fan, who may have a greater interest in the stage play and be led through this interest to the picture. But, even leaving the non-fan out of the question, it pays to tell the regulars that the story is better than usual—when it is. They will come prepared to like it, and their enjoyment will be heightened. The printed word has a powerful influence, and if you do not abuse it you can make praise work for you even in your own advertising space, where you are least likely to be believed. This applies to all good stories, and not merely to Miss Talmadge in "East Is West." Tell them it is good and they will know that it is good. Some of the early Valentino pictures are winning greater approval now than they did when they were first released. spect. This is a little point in psychology not many managers work on. They do not seem to realize that even in their advertising they can guide public opinion if they do not make their statements so emphatic as to challenge the reader. If "several millions have laughed at, cried over, this love tale of little Ming Toy" the average patron is not going to go out and say that several million persons are dead wrong. He is more apt to accept their decision and like the story more than if he had not been told of their opinion. Of course, the abuse of the idea is as fatal as no praise at all, but a little practice will soon give the right touch.

Canopy Caught 'Em

The canopy over the sidewalk, which was a lobby suggestion for "Nice People," and was not wholly new even then, served well for "The Strangers' Banquet" at the Allen Theatre, Toronto. As this was the first time a police permit had been obtained for a canopy in front of a theatre, it got unusual attention and carried the idea of class and high society.

Thirty 24-sheets and 20,000 paper napkins also helped to sell the idea, along with doubled newspaper spaces.

If Pete cannot do it, we don't know that anyone can, but the best Peter sends in from the smoke is small town stuff, though much better than the Pittsburgh average. We have stopped talking about Pittsburgh lately. Just as Sivitz got them so they could use type, he went west on a vacation and the new man is using hand lettering, and there is only one house getting a decent display now. It is not the Pitt, where the Fairbanks attraction opened. This is a very poor drawing, with a right arm that might have been drawn in by a schoolboy. All Pete can hope to do is to tell them that Doug is coming. He is doing this better with other devices

White Space Is Good Seller of The Flirt

We like very much this five eighths from the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo. It invites the eye, and after it has gotten attention through its looks it proceeds to sell through brief copy. It is not alone the white space and open display which makes this sightly. There is more to it than that. It plays up the title without opposition from a mess of heavy type. "The Flirt" is the first thing you see, and then the eye drops to the house signature, and the message is completed. "The Flirt" is at the Pantheon. In case you know nothing about the play the smaller lines, very clearly and interestingly set out, will tell you that she was a liar, hypocrite, tyrant and cheat, but beautiful, kissable, adorable and bewitching. That should give you a desire to look her over; but, in case it does not, there is the further information that it is one of Booth Tarkington's best, and "one of the most sensational tales of the past twelve months." All of this is backed up by some snappy sketches, quite in the character of the story, to complete the suggestion of a good offering. The space is rather large for a city paper, but it is not wasted when it is employed to such good advantage. Note how the artist holds the space to the reverse signature with a linear border; not too heavy to detract from the sketches and type, and yet not so light as to permit the eye to wander out of the space; and note that there is a minimum of attractor material and a maximum of display. While you are about it you might note that, while the artist is above the average in merit, he does not think he is a whale at hand lettering, and stands aside for the printer on that which the printer can do best. That is the most remarkable point in this space. The artist stops as soon as he has done all he can. He does not undo his work by going further and insisting upon lettering in the entire layout.

Cocktail Girl Is Chief Sales Factor

The girl in the glass is made the chief sales point in the display of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, for The Stranger's Banquet. She takes up so much room that there is less space than usual left for the talk. The chat plugged in is strong and convincing, but it is evident that Roy Miller felt that the picture would be better than conversation on this release. We think it is open to question. There is much to be said about the story and the cast, and the cast is shoved down into the corner below the Goldlyn line, too small to be of much use. Possibly this was done to tickle Nielan and impress the neighbors in his home town. It is the least successful of the recent California displays from an advertising point of view, and it is not particularly bad at that. Not bad; merely not as good as the others.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

BOHEMIAN GIRL. (6,462 feet). Star, Gladys Cooper; produced by Harley Knowles. The success of this picture rests with the orchestra. Well acted, great photography, popular story. This picture ran seven days; three daily, six Saturday shows. A showman's proposition. A big chance of boosting your orchestra. Attendance was capacity. City of 45,000, draw from business and leisure classes. Jack Prendergast, Palladium Theatre, Lancaster, England.

CARDIGAN. (7,000 feet). Featured cast. Here is a picture which every school child, and most adults as well, should see. Advertised with posters. Attendance was good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

SIGN OF THE ROSE. (6,200 feet). Star, George Beban. An exceedingly good picture which drew splendid good business for entire week. Many complimentary remarks made, and no kicks. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST. (6,377 feet). Author, Kate Douglas Wiggin. A picture that pleased the women one hundred per cent and the men about fifty. Personally, I think it a good picture. There isn't much action and the story is a little thing, but the picture can be bought right and you can do a little business on it. Your draw will be principally on account of the author, Kate Douglas Wiggin; she's the only one I said a thing about. Advertised with mailing list. Attendance good. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Associated Exhibitors

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT. (5,815 feet). Star, Constance Binney. A very pleasing drama with a good story. Business very good. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CONQUERING THE WOMAN. (5,731 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Just a fair program picture. Advertised as usual. Attendance good. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission, 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,377 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Cost money, but sure is a money getter. Don't be afraid to play, and I would say, jack the price. Advertised extra, heralds. Attendance was large. Town of 2,500, draw average small town fans. Admission, 17-28. Stanley G. Allen, Allen Theatre, Chatham, New York.

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,377 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A comedy knockout, and also a financial "knockout" to the exhibitor when the prices charged are considered. I'll do anything once, so I mortgaged the box office and the cashier, at the completion of the exhibit, turned over the gross receipts to the distributors. Had to play it at an increased price because capacity, at the rental, wouldn't have let me break even. Patrons roared their heads off at the increased price, so must let Mr. Lloyd's work severely alone at any such price hereafter. Advice to exhibitors, taken from my experience, play the picture; but figure just what your capacity is at regular prices; boost very little or you'll have what I had to contend with; made a lot of enemies for the theatre. If you want to play the picture for fun, give them their rental and let your audiences laugh, but when you count up, you'll sob! Summed up: a great comedy at a still greater price. 'Tis said in a year Harold Lloyd will be worth two millions—I believe it, and I helped! Advertised with mailing list, billboards, programs, novelties, etc. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance fairly good, not what it should have been, or anywhere near it when the rental is considered. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WOMAN, WAKE UP. (6,000 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Anyone who is not satisfied with this feature cannot be satisfied. Many favorable comments from those who saw it. Doubled usual advertising. Attendance was fair. Town of 2,500, draw farmers and retired farmers. Admission, 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

F. B. O.

COLLEEN OF THE PINES. (4,738 feet). Star, Jane Novak. A pretty fair Northern picture. Just average program picture. Did fair business. Advertised ordinary way. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

EDEN AND RETURN. (4,600 feet). Star, Doris May. Light comedy. You see a great deal of the star in this picture. This pleases them. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. (5,000 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good. Everyone liked it. Especially good small town stuff. Ordinary advertising. Good attendance. Town of 2,500, draw usual small town people. Admission, 17-28. Stanley G. Allen, Allen Theatre, Chatham, New York.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. (5,000 feet). Star, Harry Carey. The best Carey has ever done. Regular advertising, good attendance. City of 14,000, draw working class. Admission, 10-25. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

KICK-BACK. (5,000 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Regulation Western, with a good climax that saves it. Regular newspaper advertising. Attendance fair. Draw all classes. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

IF I WERE QUEEN. (5,953 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. Not a big picture, but a very good one that will please the big majority of your patrons. Richly staged and well acted. Where mythical kingdoms, such as "Graustark," are popular this will prove more than acceptable. My advertising was a modest campaign as it was run Christmas Day. Attendance was good. City of 14,000, draw merchants, workers, their wives. Normal admission, 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

First National

ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR. (6,130 feet). Star, Charles Ray. A good picture and brought many laughs, but did not pull at the box office. Lost money on this one. Advertised with lobby and in newspapers. Poor attendance. Draw mixed type. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

BELL BOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. They don't make them any better. A good comedy and good entertainment and very pleasing. Advertised extensively with billboards, window cards and in lobby. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. (7,268 feet). Star cast. An A-1 production. Pleased all here. Good screning of Custer's last fight. Used regular advertising. Good attendance. Town of 350, draw town and country class. Admission 10-22. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,050 feet). Features dog "Strongheart." Good audience picture and made money for us. Ran it four days instead of the usual two. Usual newspaper advertising gave good attendance. City of 50,000, draw average type crowd. Admission 10-20-30. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,050 feet). Features dog "Strongheart." A splendid example of a dog's intelligence—he really should have written the story, too, but the dog only did what he was told and our audiences are raving about Strongheart. Laying aside faulty story (the audiences don't care), it is at least equal to "The Silent Call." Used mailing list of 2,400, two and a half pages advertising, lobby. Attendance was extra good. Town of 2,850, draw railroad, transients, tourists, farmers. Admission regular 10-25, 15-35 special. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. (6,292 feet). With James Kirkwood. Not up to expectations. However, a good release and will get over; but do not promise too much. Advertised as usual. Attendance good. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. John W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

CUP OF LIFE. (4,432 feet). Star cast, with Hobart Bosworth. Splendid in every way. Lots of nice compliments. A picture that is entirely different from the rest. It held the audience in suspense. The drawing power of this picture meant nothing, but if you have it bought, play it. Advertised with ones, three photos, slide. Attendance was poor. Town of 4,800, draw neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. A highly pleasing picture which enjoyed highly pleased good business. No mistake will be made by booking this one. Advertised with extra newspaper, billboard, street car and lobby. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Contains good moral. Well acted and produced. Better than the average "First National" features. Contains excellent advertising possibilities. Good enough for any size theatre. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

ETERNAL FLAME. (7,453 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. I booked this picture at the same price I paid for "Smilin' Through." Of course it has been exploited to a fare-you-well and the "bigger and better" stuff has been spilled all over the newspapers; but as compared to "Smilin' Through" the opinion, in this town at least, is that there's no comparison. The patronage proved it. I put this on for two days because, to do justice to the picture, I didn't want to railroad it through the projectors, and played it but one performance a night, giving the patrons some choice filler in addition. But I played to but half a house in the two shows (matinee and night) the second day and on the first day matinee and night together just about filled this small house. It's well produced, finely acted, costumed and all that; but the verdict here is that the story isn't there. It's too thin to spread over nearly eight reels. Anyway, I did a fine "flop" as a whole on the picture financially. If this picture is bought and circumstances are so that you can buy it right, do so. Permit me to add that in my opinion it isn't worth within forty per cent of what "Smilin' Through" cost me. That picture held up pretty well the second day. "Eternal Flame" died. Everything considered, it's the price for this picture that counts; you'll escape severe criticism at regular prices, but when you increase your prices—as I had to do—they hollered plenty. Advertised with everything you can think of. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance poor. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

ETERNAL FLAME. (7,453 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Very good. Used extra newspaper advertising. Patronage, better class. Attendance good. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

HER SOCIAL VALUE. (5,000 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. A splendid picture. Pleased a hundred per cent. The star carried her part off well, but the hero in this picture did not please so well. Film was in excellent condition and the photoplay was good. Used nothing special in my advertising. Attendance fair. Town of about 1,000, drew general class. Admission, regular 10-30, special 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LIGHT IN THE DARK. (7,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton, with E. K. Lincoln and Lon Chaney. Very ordinary picture. I suppose a lot of you will have to play it, as we did. Not worth the price paid for it. Attendance was only fair. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

LIGHT IN THE DARK. (7,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton, with E. K. Lincoln and Lon Chaney. A picture that should interest all parts of your audience. Advertised in three newspapers, with heralds, window cards. Patronage, small town. Attendance fair. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

MASQUERADER. (7,835 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. A well liked picture here that did a very fair business. Star a good actor. Regular advertising. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance fairly good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MY BOY. (4,967 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A knockout. Lots of comments, no kicks. Patrons well pleased. Advertised with ones, heralds, newspaper. Patronage, small town. Attendance good. P. S. Nielsen, Rex Theatre, La Moure, North Dakota.

ONE CLEAR CALL. (7,450 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Very good picture. Pleased all. Advertised regular way. Attendance fair. Town of 1,800, draw mixed type. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,600 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Badly over-rated kid picture. Good thing to use if you want quiet business so you can go fishing. Got plenty of complaints on this one. Watch the price. Not worth to me near what they want for it. I got stnug. Advertised extraordinarily big. Attendance was fair. Town of 5,000, draw best in town. William C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. (6,137 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Pleased ninety per cent. Very good story. Sure to please. Attendance here very good. Small town, general type to draw from. Admission ten cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre. Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

RIVER'S END. Star, Lewis Stone. Got a new print of this and it sure was a winner. Time doesn't affect such a picture. Had extremely bad weather. Used regular advertising. Attendance fair. Town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Some fellows have complained that they have held off from pictures because Straight From the Shoulder reports scared them, only to play the pictures finally and discover they made money.

Some others have felt a little bit sore because somebody knocked a picture that was generally good.

This is no lecture, but it's only fair to say that if the reports are taken the right way maybe the folks who held off would have played the film instead; and the other folks would see why their "good stuff" was slammed.

Take into account the star—does the star mean anything to you? Notice the size of town and the kind of people the theatre pulls from. If a picture went well in a high class house it may not be as big for working classes or oil field patronage.

When a man with neighborhood draw says he raised prices on a picture, you may get stung doing the same thing if you appeal to mining town people.

Every report is sincere, and every added tip that is likely to help you is included. If you step heavy on the old common sense pedal you'll say with a host of others that Straight From the Shoulder is the one dependable guide to picture booking.

VAN.

Fox

ARABIA (Tom Mix in Arabia). (4,418 feet). Why don't the producer and star see the "handwriting on the wall?" A few more like this and Tom Mix will be a "has been" here. Advertised usual way. Attendance good. Town of 7,000, draw general type. Admission 10-25-35. John W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

BOSS OF CAMP FOUR. Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A good Western program offering, but nothing to brag about. William Noble. Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CALIFORNIA ROMANCE. (5,802 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A good program picture. Not much praise, but no kicks registered. Will get by if properly advertised. Fair attendance. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BROADWAY PEACOCK. (4,380 feet). Star, Pearl White. This will do if you have enough to carry it over, such as good comedy. Pearl really is, as the patrons state, out of place in features. They're too slow for her daring. Regular advertising, good attendance. Town of 282, draw small town and country. Admission 10-15-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Mix has made better pictures; however, this one pulled good business and seemed to please most of my patrons. Mix is the only Fox Star who pulls any extra business here. Regular advertising gave good attendance. Town of 2,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum Theatre, Quinton, Oklahoma.

FAST MAIL. (6,000 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. To me, paper very much misleading. Story not at all like the old play. Many rough house fights and much uncalled for choking stuff. It might make a Saturday program for a roughneck crowd, but generally not a pleasing picture for refined audience. Town in which, counting the white folks, too, we have about eight thousand. Admission 5 to 20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7,000 feet). Stars, Lewis Stone, Estelle Taylor. This is fine. Everyone pleased. No apology to make on this one. Advertising slants, Kipling, poem, story. Attendance good. Town of 5,000, draw all nationalities. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7,000 feet). Stars, Lewis Stone, Estelle Taylor. We played the first release from Fox when he made this picture several years ago with Theda Bara and my patrons said that there was no comparison, that the one with Theda was a regular show and that this one was fair only. I did not think that it was as good as when it was released with Bara. Advertised with twenty-fours, sixes, lobby. Draw all classes, had good attendance. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

FOOTFALLS. (8,068 feet). With special cast. A clean and very interesting picture, but not a very strong drawing card; but if well advertised it will get by. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HONOR FIRST. (5,000 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Some liked this picture while others did not. Should be well advertised in order to get by. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, featuring horse 'Tony." A very novel picture in which the Mix pony figures very prominently, which incidentally pleased a hundred per cent. Usual advertising got good attendance. Patrons are health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MIXED FACES. (4,400 feet). Star, William Russell. A fair program picture that will please quite a lot. Star plays a dual role. Used slides, posters, photos and newspapers on this, drawing fair attendance. Town of 7,000, general type. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK. Star cast. Lights of New York failed to shine in Shawnee. Not a special by any means. Ordinary program picture. I raised prices on this and almost got run out of town. Advertised special to mixed patronage and had poor attendance. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

RAGGED HEIRESS. (4,888 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Mason won't draw for me. No pep to the stories they have put her in Advertised as usual. Attendance was fair. S. H. McNeill, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ontorio, Canada.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. (5,957 .feet). Star, William Farnum. An over-acted melodrama, if such a thing is possible. The serious parts do not convince. Farnum is too big, physically, for the parts he takes; and he seems to be losing his popularity. Does not go with the women patrons here. The story is better than most he has had lately. Attendance good enough. City of 15,000, draw general type. Admission ten to thirty cents. Ben L. Morris, Elk Grand Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS. (4,668 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Good program picture. Nothing to brag about. Advertised with posters, newspaper. Patronage of average class. Attendance fair to good. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

WEST OF CHICAGO. (4,694 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A very good program picture. Will go good where Jones has a following. If he keeps up his good work he will become popular here. Draw mixed class, fair attendance. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

WEST OF CHICAGO. (4,694 feet). Star, Jones. Very good Western with planey of action. Jones is a winner. Advertised regular way. Attendance good. Thomas J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

WITHOUT FEAR. (4,406 feet). Star, Pearl White. Just a mediocre production. Somehow dear Pearl fails to draw 'em in on feature stuff. A drama is too slow for her. Advertised regular way, fair attendance. Town of 282, draw small town and country. Admission 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

YELLOW STAIN. (5,506 feet). Star, John Gilbert. The picture does not end right and some were pleased, some displeased; but if properly advertised the picture will get by. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Goldwyn

FROM THE GROUND UP. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Moore. One of Tom's best that pleased one hundred per cent. Plenty of action and overflowing with Irish humor. Any little town audience will like this one, the big ones, too. Tom Moore popular here and pictures like this increase his following. Advertised with ones, threes, screen slide ads. Attendance fair. Town of around a thousand. Draw general type. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HEAD OVER HEELS. (4,500 feet). Star, Mabel Normand. About like all Normand comedies. If your patrons like her style of pictures this one will please them as well as any of them. Personally, liked it fine. No kicks. Advertised as usual, had free street show competition so attendance was poor. Small town. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

HIS BACK AGAINST THE WALL. (4,690 feet). Star, Raymond Hatton. A little five reel comedy drama that is "different." Pleased over eighty per cent. Absolutely clean; and the photoplay and condition of film was up to Goldwyn's usual standard. You can always depend on a Goldwyn print being in good condition from the New Orleans exchange. Any of the boys can play this picture on a week day program and satisfy the patrons. Nothing extra used in advertising it, drawing fair attendance. Town of about a thousand, pull general type. Admission, regular 10-20, special 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

NIGHT ROSE. (6,000 feet). Cast includes Lon Chaney. Good crook picture, lots of action, plenty of talent, and the ballroom scenes are sumptuous. The only fault that I could see was lack of comedy relief. Town of 500 souls and two revivalists, draw farmers and miscellaneous type. Admission 10-25. Al. C. Stewart, Empire Theatre, Waitsburg, Washington.

POOR RELATION. (4,609 feet). Star, Will Rogers. Rogers always good here. Has fine part in this one. Got lots of laughs. Think it pleased a hundred per cent. Advertised it regular way, getting fair attendance. Town of about 3,000, regular small town. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

POVERTY OF RICHES. (7,000 feet). Star cast. A-1. Can't go wrong on this one. Fit to run in the best theatres. Use pictures like this and the patrons will enjoy your show. Advertised with slide, posters, handbills. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). Star cast. An ordinary program picture. The only thing special that I could see about it was the price. Claude Gillingwater a good actor, but don't promise your patrons too much. These father and mother pictures are things of the past. Paid the price on this and it fell flat second day, ashamed to face my patrons. Attendance poor. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. A very good picture. John Barrymore is a great actor. Pleased high class patronage. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

THEODORA. (10,000 feet). Star cast. This was a great picture for its kind. Liked by seventy-five per cent, especially Italians thought it wonderful. Good acting and some wonderful scenes with a lot of deep stuff which some did not appreciate. Used extra advertising, ones, threes, sixes, photos. Had full house. Mining town, draw mixed types. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

Van Hears from Vann

P. L. Vann, of the Greenville Opera House, Greenville, Alabama, comes in with a letter that means a lot because it shows that the efforts of exhibitors to give their brothers real help have been appreciated, and because it reflects the real Give-and-Take spirit of this department.

"I have found Straight From the Shoulder reports such a help in booking the best pictures," says Mr. Vann, "and they have been so true, I cannot help but feel it my duty to help those who have been so much help to me."

"Let's keep them going, and keep them true to their name, 'Straight From the Shoulder' reports."

Hodkinson

EAST LYNNE. (6,000 feet). Star, Mabel Ballin. A good picture of its kind, but believe few small town crowds like this kind. Came as a substitute for "Keeping Up With Lizzie." My people came prepared to laugh, and I received several caustic comments after I handed them this hoary old melodramatic tragedy instead. Attendance was average. Town of 300, draw farmers. Admission 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

HEADLESS HORSEMAN. (6,000) feet). Star, Will Rogers. This picture pleased my people. Drew well from the schools. Rogers makes a hit with everyone. J. N. Phillips, Ideal Theatre, Table Rock, Nebraska.

HEADLESS HORSEMAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Will Rogers. Nothing great about it; just a good program picture. Town of 3,000, draw poor class mostly. Admission 10-20. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

Metro

SEEIN'S BELIEVING. (4,500 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A well done and thoroughly pleasing comedy that gave universal satisfaction. The best we have had this star in recently. Larry Semon's "The Agent," which we ran in connection, added strength to the bill. Ran Pathe News also. Made a program that pleased. Advertising slant, advertise star in lively comedy. Attendance was fair. City of 14,000, draw clerks, merchants, farmers. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PEACOCK ALLEY. (7,500 feet). Star, Mae Murray. One of the best pictures I've ever shown for the classes but won't draw the country people here. Advertised with extra heralds and newspaper. Attendance fair. Town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

QUNICY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). All star cast. Picture started very ordinary on Monday, but picked up gradually throughout the week, each day getting bigger. Used big newspaper and outside ballyhoos. Attendance turned out good. City of 40,000, draw high class patronage. Admission 15-40. R. L. Wood, Eastland Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio.

RIGHT THAT FAILED. (6,000 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. A good, pleasing comedy drama that was well liked here. Better than most Lytell subjects that we have had of late. Nothing big or flashy, but a good program picture. Advertising slants, star and supporting cast. Attendance fair. City of 14,000, draw merchants, farmers, workers. Average admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres, Janesboro, Arkansas.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. A very good picture. I feel I had it hung onto me a little in the price, but that is my fault. Barbara La Mar very pretty and the leading man very good. They should not sell it as a special simply because Rex Ingram directed it—he could make bones also. Town of 8,000. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Paramount

ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR. (6,131 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Contains many clever situations and laughs. It pleased our patrons. Advertised usual way, attendance good. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. (6,740 feet). Stars, Gloria Swanson, Randolph Valentino. Fine picture for me. Two stars that will not fail to draw them in. Advertised as usual. Had extra good business on it, attendance being fine. Draw high class patrons. Admission 20-30. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. A wonderful picture. It was liked by all. Played two nights. Have not heard any one say they did not like it. Advertised with newspaper, slides, ones. Town of 540, draw small town and rural, with attendance fine, best in some time. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Broke box office records for us. Not a great picture, but a big one that makes them talk. Well done in every particular and will back up any advertising campaign. We invested rather heavily in publicity on it but it paid good dividends. Exploit star, author, production, cast. Attendance here big. City of 14,000, draw clerks, merchants, farmers. Admission averages 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BOOMERANG BILL. Star, Lionel Barrymore. A splendid sermon and a well made picture. Advertised with posters. Rural patronage, poor attendance. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

BONDED WOMAN. (7,718 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Highly interesting program picture with many excellent scenes on board ship and in islands. Advertised with slide and paper. Patronage small town. Attendance good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Wanda Hawley. Fair, nothing to rave over. Sills was good. Wanda was miscast. Scenery was good. Some liked it, while others said they were disappointed. If you book it for an ordinary program picture you will get by with it. David Hess, Iris Theatre, Monte Vista, Colorado.

CITY OF SILENT MEN. (six parts). Star, Thomas Meighan. Very good show. Well liked by all, and satisfied in every way. Advertised with newspapers and posters. Attendance good. City of 16,000, mixed class. Admission changes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

CLARENCE. (6,146 feet). All star cast. One of the most intelligent American home life stories ever presented, and the cast is perfect. Advertising of all kinds used. Attendance very good. Town of 6,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

CRADLE. (4,698 feet). Star, Ethel Clayton. Old, worn-out theme of "A little child shall lead them." Action too slow. Star tries hard to put the story over, but fails. Advertised with slide, photos, posters, newspapers. Attendance good. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

For Lent

Mr. Tockey, of the Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma, reports a picture you may have forgotten—FROM THE MANGER TO THE CROSS (former Kalem production, handled by Vitagraph). "Had lots of church people in the house who never came before. Had one preacher, seventy-three years old, who had never been in a picture show before. He came both nights and said he wished I would show it again."

DEEP WATERS. (5,035 feet). Very good program picture. Advertising as usual. Attendance fair. Town of 1,100, draw railroad men and miners. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

DICTATOR. (5,221 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Best Reid in the past season. High class farce comedy done intelligently. A very mixed audience enjoyed it immensely. Advertised with heralds, lithos, news, cards, lobby. Attendance good. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre, Redding, California.

EXPERIENCE. (7,000 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Picture was liked well by all who saw it. Send us some more like it. Advertised with threes, six, ones, slide, two sets photos. Town of 3,000, average attendance of mixed class. Wade Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadara, Oklahoma.

EXPERIENCE. (7,000 feet). Star, Richard Barthlemess. A picture every young man should be made to see. It carries a sermon no preacher could preach. In my estimation one of the best pictures of the year. Book it and boost it, the picture is all there. It pleased a hundred per cent. Advertised with posters, mail, photos, slide. Attendance good. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

GOLEM. (6,000 feet). All star cast. If you are looking for a big bunch of "cheese," book this. They won't even advertise it like they do their good pictures, and I can't blame them. Advertised regular way. Attendance poor. Town of 800 white, 1,200 colored, draw all types. Admission 10-20. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

GREAT MOMENT. (6,372 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Wonderful picture. More of this kind will help the movie game. Advertised with six, threes, ones, photos. Resort patronage, good attendance. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

GREEN TEMPTATION. (5,000 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good picture; but do not go too strong. Pleased about seventy per cent. Advertised with ones, threes, photos, slides, heralds. Attendance was fair, admission being 10-30. Town of 792, draw mixed class. L. Shaw Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

IMPOSSIBLE MRS. BELLEW. (7,156 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Good story value, some heart appeal. Excellent cast, smart gowns and styles worn by star. Lavish settings. Well directed. Business good. Very satisfactory. Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

ON THE HIGH SEAS. Fair picture. Lots of action and sea stuff. Advertising: window cards and newspapers. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: fair. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. Here is your distinctly original picture with some marvelous photography—the kind that, when asked how it is done, you reply, "Oh, it's some double exposure." The picture touches on a tremendously big subject that goes over the heads of most people and they only see the entertaining action. Personally, I liked it very much. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. Very good picture. We got a new print on it and the people were very well satisfied. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, photos. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. F. M. Knight, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. Star: Thos. Meighan. They liked this one here. It's a clever story in the usual George Ade vein. Meighan has a good following and deserves it. This picture will please ninety per cent. Advertising angles: star and author. City of 14,000, drawing from clerks, merchants, farmers. Admission: average 10-25. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THE OUTCAST. Very good picture, but about two reels too long. Attendance: good. Robt. Marsden, Jr., Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

OVER THE BORDER. Good picture. Pleased all who saw it. Patronage: regular. Attendance: fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

SHEIK. Excellent. The only trouble I had was a poor print. Had it been a good one I would have gotten the biggest business of the year. Advertising: usual.. Patronage: all kinds. Attendance: good first night, but poor second night. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

SPANISH JADE. Star: David Powell. It was unfortunate that we had this on a Saturday, when our crowds are not so representative of the more discriminating classes. It is a very pretty story and capitally done and splendidly acted. The exteriors are especially beautiful and rather unusual. Pleased our Saturday crowd about eighty per cent. Advertising angles; boost its rare poetic beauty. City of 14,000, drawing merchants, workers and wives. Admission: normally 10-25. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Positively the greatest hit in the last twelve months. Used everything in advertising, had wonderful attendance. City of 32,000. Admission, 30 cents. H. W. Perry, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

POWER WITHIN. (6,000 feet). Featured cast. This is a picture with a moral and will go good in a church community.

Advertised with posters and slides. Draw better class and had good attendance. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Playgoers

TRACKS. (5,456 feet). Star, Noble Johnson. Did not please as we expected. Advertised regular way to get fair attendance. Thos. J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

Selznick

COUNTRY COUSIN. Star, Elaine Hammerstein. A good picture, although it contained too many close-ups of the star, which become monotonous. Used slide, ones. Town of 1,700, mining town draw. Attendance, fair. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

EVIDENCE. (4,622 feet). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. A fair program picture, a little better than the average The star draws fairly well. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Town of 1,100, pull from railroad and miners. Admission, 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

United Artists

FAIR LADY. (7,000 feet). All-star. A mighty fine picture that pleased a hundred per cent. Decidedly different for a Rex Beach picture. Cast includes Betty Blythe, Wyndham Standing and others fairly well known. We recommend this one highly. Advertise author and cast. Attendance was average. City of 14,000, draw merchants, farmers, etc. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

NUT. (6,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A little old, but our audience enjoyed this feature very much. A corking good comedy feature. Pleased ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths. Advertised with posters and slides. Town of 4,500, draw better class. Attendance fair. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Universal

BROAD DAYLIGHT. (4,691 feet). Star, Jack Mulhall. Very entertaining picture. Story written by two newspaper men who gained a wide knowledge of "crooks" as news writers before they became screen writers. With Neely Edwards Comedy—good entertainment. Used a three, two ones and photos. Town of 650, draw town and country mixed class. Admission, 10-22-25. Elmer E. Stearns, "Dewtell" Theatre, South Dayton, New York.

About your show
It's time to blow.
If S. R. O.,
You ought to crow.
If poor or slow,
The boys should know.
THE BLANK BELOW
WILL TELL THEM SO.

CONFIDENCE. (4,787 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. As good (in comedy-drama line) as Wallace Reid or Bryant Washburn ever did. All who attended were well pleased. I want more as good as this one. Attendance, totaled 142 people. Town of 2,500, draw from farmers and retired farmers. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

DANGEROUS LITTLE DEMON. (4,571 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. An extra good little program picture. Too bad Universal let her go as her pictures seem to have more class and draw better here than the pictures of their other female stars. Attendance was good. Town of about 2,000, regular small town, county seat and surroundings. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL. (6,000 ft.). Stars, Mae Murray, Rodolph Valentino. For us this was a hit. Adverse comments in these columns caused us to step lightly on the advertising and to play it in our second house. It is good enough for any house. Both Murray and Valentino are outstanding and their friends will like it. If you book it, do not fear to boost it. Advertising slants, play on the stars. Attendance good. Town of 14,000, draw merchants, farmers, etc. Admission, 10-25. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FOOLISH WIVES. (10,000 feet). Von Stroheim production. Played this two days to big business, and it pleased most of them; had no kicks. The secret of our success, though, was the fact that we did not raise our admission too high; charged 10-30. You can show it at a price like this and clean up if you don't have to pay a big rental for the film. Advertising slants, play on it being the First Million Dollar Picture. Attendance good. Town of 7,125, draw miners and railroad men. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

THE JILT. (5,000 feet). Star, Marguerite de la Motte. One of Universal's little Specials that went over in nice style and seemed to please. Story logical and well worked out and picture is worthy, in my opinion, for any program. City of 15,000, draw general patronage. Admission, 20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

THE JILT. (5,000 feet). Star, Marguerite de la Motte. For my house an ordinary picture with no pep or action. Photography and sets very good. Used no special advertising to secure good attendance. Town of 1,200, drawing residential type. Admission, 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

SCRAPPER. Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A good comedy drama. Will go over extra good if your patronage is Irish. An awfully good fight in it too. Frankie Lee and Gertrude Olmstead are very good. Used photos, ones and newspaper to bring fair attendance. Town of 600. Admission, 10-25. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

STORM. (7,400 feet). Stars, Peters, Moore, Valli. A fine picture from every angle. Possibly one better picture has ever been played here—"'Way Down East." Some said this one was the best they ever saw, however. Advertised with newspaper, mailing list, one sheets, for good attendance in regular small town of 5,000. P. L. Vann, Opera House, Greenville, Alabama.

STORM. (7,400 feet). Stars, Peters, Moore, Valli. A real Special that pleased practically all of them. No matter what type of patrons you cater to this will suit all kinds. Wonderful scenery, excellent acting, good direction and interesting story. We boosted the forest fire and scattered small advertisements through newspaper quoting reviewers' opinions. Our attendance was good. Typical small town of 3,000 without foreigners. Admission, 15-20. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SURE SHOT MORGAN. (8,000 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Just an ordinary picture for us, neither displeasing nor especially pleasing. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WISE KID. (4,606 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. A nice little program picture, with fair attendance. Town of about 2,000, draw small town, county seat and surrounding country. Admission, 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

WOLF LAW. (4,463 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Gave good satisfaction. Mayo a great favorite with my patrons. Used three, one, cards, newspaper, to pull good attendance. Small town, draw neighborhood class. Admission, 10-25. E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, South Dakota.

ANGEL OF CROOKED STREET. (5,270 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. A good, clean picture; worth any exhibitor's attention. Can play the best of houses. Good sharp photography. Story of the underworld. Used six, three, ones, slide, lobby, to get fair attendance. Big city, draw all classes and get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

GIRL'S DESIRE. (4,950 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. Nothing extra. Tried to make a comedy drama out of it. Two ones and 11x14's brought fair attendance. City of 14,000, draw working people. Admission, 10-25. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

GYPSY PASSION. (5,601 feet). All star cast. Did not draw. Very good of the kind but we don't care for the kind. Used lobby, newspaper, billboard, handbills, to get fair attendance. City of 19,000, draw mixed class. Admission, 10-35. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

LITTLE WILDCAT. (5,000 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. Very good. Something different: summer picture that will stand boosting. Used lobby, newspaper, billboards, with good attendance. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

MORAL FIBER. (6,000 feet). Very favorably commented on and drew well. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Comedies

AMONG THOSE PRESENT (Assoc. Exhib.). (3,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Score another "knockout" for the vamping Harold. Crowded them in for two nights. This is the second three-reeler we've run and they are still clamoring for more. Used extra advertising on this; attendance was excellent. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

CHUMS (Universal). Star, Baby Peggy. "Fine in every way and every day they like her better and better." The dog is sure a wonder. Ran this with Fox's "Very Truly Yours," and attendance was excellent. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

ENTERTAINING THE BOSS (F. B. O.) Mr. and Mrs Carter De Haven. At last the De Havens are making good, clean comedies. This one very good. Advertising three, one, lobby. Attendance fair. Admission ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MY WIFE'S RELATIONS (First Natl.). Buster Keaton. My patrons couldn't see this one at all. I fail to see where the Keaton comedies are worth the price asked for my house. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

ONE TERRIBLE DAY (Pathe). Our Gang comedy. Have shown only one of these but will say it's the best I have ever run. An exhibitor can't do without these and get his due. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

'TIS THE BULL (Educational). Christie Comedy. A good laugh producer, saved our show because feature was very poor. Better class comes. Attendance was poor. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TOONERVILLE POLICY (Educatl.). Dan Mason. Last of these on booking. I am tickled to death. Did not take at all here. Admission 10-22. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

You'll Agree

Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi, says much that you can't dispute when he writes:

"Brother exhibitors, wake up! Straight From the Shoulder pages are given us to tell our story, whether good or bad, for in these pages there is a trust to every exhibitor.

"The first thing I do when MOVING PICTURE WORLD arrives is turn to these pages, and read—and read!

"These pages are bringing us closer together, making us feel more acquainted. The thing we must do is keep it going strong."

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES (Pathe). The best of all the novelty short subjects on the market. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

FOX NEWS. Have used two other news reels beside this one long enough to judge which is the best; find that Fox News goes over better. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

RUSTLERS OF THE REDWOODS (Univ.). Roy Stewart. Story fair, but one scene in this one kills it—engines crashing together have been shown in features, reviews and weeklies. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TWINKLE, TWINKLE, LITTLE STAR (Savini). A wonderful "kid" picture, juvenile performers. Gave children special egg matinee; very successful—twelve dozen. Everyone enjoyed it. Patronage, everyone. Attendance was naturally fine. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

Serials

ADVENTURES OF ROBINSON CRUSOE (Univ.). Chapter eleven as good as the rest of the serial. Used ones and slides on it. Town of 2,800, draw working class for this. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

IN DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (Univ.). On episode fifteen and still going over the top. It's a money getter. Don't overlook this one. Harding & Nisbett, Plaza Theatre, Little Rock, Arkansas.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Star, Ruth Roland. On episode eleven. A serial that will check up with Ruth's best work. Star very popular here and story interesting, with enough thrills to satisfy most of them. A picture that will bring them back. Draw mostly factory people, attendance good. Town of 1,800. Admission regularly 10-25, special up to fifty. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

Special Subjects

ARE YOU FIT TO MARRY? (War Camp Pictures). All star. Nothing to it for me. Supposed to be a Social Hygiene picture. Has very little instruction to it from an educational standpoint. Used as advertising slants, Ed Baldwin. Advertised with tack cards, heralds, two lobby frames and a Ford car and the attendance was extra good. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi.

State Rights

GOD'S GOLD (Canyon). (5,000 feet). Star, Neal Hart. An old picture but it would have gone over good had the exchange sent a good print. Good story, well acted; popular star. Above average program Westerns. Advertised usual ways. Attendance good. Town of 1,800, draw principally from factory workers. Admission 10-25. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

HATE TRAIL (Standard). (4,588 feet). Star, George Chesborough. This would have proven a very satisfactory picture with factory people had the print been good. Advertised regular way. Attendance fair. Town of 1,800, draw factory type mostly. Admission 10-25. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

I AM THE LAW (Affil. Distrib.) (6,800 feet). Star, Alice Lake. Good audience picture. Bought it right. Made money on same. Advertising angles, K. K. K. scare cards. Attendance good two days. Town of 3,000, drawing oil field patronage. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

PARISH PRIEST (Garfield). Star, William Desmond. After advertising this picture heavily and drawing in a big crowd we had "the pleasure?" of presenting to them a print with poor titleing and photography. This was a big picture at one time but when we got it the films were only five strung along on six reels. Some of our patrons who saw it in our neighboring town said some of it had been cut out. We booked the film of the exhibitors' film exchange in Malwaukee. I wish some one had said to me, "Fellow exhibitor, beware." Kenneth Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

RAGS TO RICHES (Warner Bros.). (6,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. The kind of a picture my patrons enjoy. Very highly praised by all as they came out. Makes a fellow feel good to get lots of compliments as I did on this. Advertised with ones, threes, sixes, heralds, window cards, etc. Attendance good. Town of 2,150, draw all classes. Admission 10-20. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

RICH MEN'S WIVES (Lichtman). (6,500 feet). Star, House Peters. Went over very well in very bad weather. Everybody thought the picture was great and we think we could have run it longer. Advertised with newspapers, extra space. Attendance good. City of 40,000, high class trade. Admission 15-40. R. L. Wood, Eastland, Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio.

SCHOOL DAYS (Warner Bros.). (7,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. Exactly the same as the other fellows said in Straight From the Shoulder—the picture is good and pleased everyone who was lucky enough to see it. Absolutely clean and so interesting that my audience complained about it being too short. Seven reels seemed like two. If you haven't played it, go after it and tie up with the schools. Advertised with ones, threes, slide, caps, window sheets. Attendance good. Town of about 1,000, draw general class. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). (6,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. Picture jammed full of action. Pleased patrons and made us money. Advertised usual way. Patronage was family type. Attendance good. J. A. Flournoy, Criterior Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR ROOM (Arrow). (8,000 feet). Star, John Lowell. A wonderful production. Exploit and advertise and the results will be entirely satisfactory. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

"Suzanna"

Mack Sennett's Latest Effort Is Very Attractive Production.

Reviewed by W. E. Keefe

Mack Sennett has produced an excellent audience picture in "Suzanna" which Allied Producers and Distributors will handle. It is a sure fire comedy drama with a smack of O'Henry's great construction of a sob with a laugh immediately following.

It is very picturesque, with the players appearing in the costumes of old Mexico, where the scenes are laid. Incidentally Mabel Normand never before appeared so beautiful nor gave us such splendid dramatic work. Her work probably surpasses anything she has ever done. Her transition and moods are exquisitely well done. As the daughter of an old family servant who in reality is an heiress and falls in love with the hero, Mabel Normand gives us something new and splendid in screen acting. Suzanna is rich with love interest and the way the love story is linked up with the gags makes the picture one that will make a big hit, especially with women.

The story is closely knit and built up logically and in natural sequence. It holds the interest from start to finish. "Suzanna" is typically Sennett, with the big dramatic moments built up in a really big way only to terminate in a big laugh. One of the big scenes is where Walter McGrail kidnaps Miss Normand just as he is about to marry Dolores, and weds the former instead at the same place where the former wedding was to have been held.

No expense has seemingly been spared in producing beautiful and picturesque background.

When viewed at the theatre "Suzanna" was very enthusiastically received. The picture moves a little slowly at about the centre but afterwards it gets to going again on all six and holds the interest to the finish.

The acting is well done. Walter McGrail as Ramon is splendid. George Nichols' portrayal of Don Fernando is faultless. Carl Stockdale as Ruiz is perfectly cast while the work of Winifred Bryson stands out distinctly. Director G. Richard Jones has handled the production well. Each situation has been well developed and the players show the work of excellent direction.

Story

The hopes of Fernando and Diego two Castillian nobles owning adoining ranches in old California are centered upon a consolidation of the two estates through the marriage of Ramon, Don Fernando's son, to Dolores, the daughter of Diego. Dolores has been at boarding school, from which she has been expelled because of a clandestine love affair with Pancho, a toreador, who follows her home hoping to win, through her, the Diego estate. Meanwhile Suzanna, supposed daughter of a peon on Fernando's estate, has been sent away because of Ramon's growing love for her, and becomes Dolores' maid. During an altercation between the two girls Suzanna's supposed father reveals that she is really Don Diego's daughter, Dolores being his child, placed in the cradle of the Diego heir. Because of her love for Ramon and her desire not to upset the plans of the two old men, Suzanna is silent, but Ramon, finding love too strong, deserts Dolores on his wedding day to pursue Suzanna, when explanations clear the way to their happy union and the marriage of Dolores to her toreador.

Dustin Farnum in Fox Western With Usual Romance, Thrills and Comedy

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Dustin Farnum as a woman-tamer, camp party chaperon and bully beater has a role that keeps him constantly on the scene in this Fox Western. He is the chief feature of interest and those who like him will enjoy his more than usual share of heroics. The story is a typical mixture of romance and villainy. There is fully an average amount of action and enough conflict between the various characters to furnish the required dramatic interest.

Doris Pawn plays the unconquerable heroine. She is a good type to play opposite Farnum and displays enough fire and energy to make her role convincing. She impersonates a pampered young lady from the city who tames a wild horse but fails to completely manage her cowboy guardian.

The final thrill reverses the usual order of dramas. This time it is the girl who does the rescuing. She tosses the hero a rope at the critical moment as a fall backward into the canyon threatens him. Gilbert Holmes helps to supply the comedy interest. The picture should be well received where Westerns of the conventional type are popular.

"The Bolted Door"

Universal Presents Frank Mayo in a Well-Knit Story

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

"The Bolted Door" stands out above the average picture principally because of the strong continuity of the story. It is exceptionally well put together.

Frank Mayo gives, as usual, an exemplary portrayal, and his adaptability to almost any part is well exemplified by the manner in which he handles his role. He shows himself as much at home in a dress suit and on the ballroom floor as he is in grimy overalls, working in a machine shop over a locomotive, which role also enters into his part in the picture.

A fight between Mayo and Nigel Barrie, the "heavy," gives the principal touch of strenuous action to the picture, and it is a realistic "battle."

There are diversified scenes in the picture, switching from "sets" in a millionaire's home, with all the splendor of society entertainments in such surroundings, to the workshop of a locomotive works, where Mayo plays the part of one of the chiefs, who, however, is not afraid of such labor as is done by the lowliest mechanics. These contrasting sorts of scenes will give the picture an appeal for patrons who have the "society bee" as well as those who like to see their "heroes" as members of "the great unwashed."

Brooke Garriott.....Frank Mayo
Oliver Judson.....Charles A. Stevenson
Natalie Judson.....Phyllis Haver

Length, 4,126 Feet.

Story

Oliver Judson leaves his fortune to Natalie Judson, his niece, and Brooke Garriott on condition that they marry within six months. In order to gain the fortune Natalie agrees to the terms of the will, but stipulates that she and her husband must separate immediately after the ceremony. Finally, when she compares him with her "society" friends she comes to realize his real worth, and love follows.

"Stormswept"

Wallace and Noah Beery Co-featured in F. B. O. Drama of the Sea

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Wallace and Noah Beery are seen in the chief roles in this sea drama which unfolds a serious theme in a comparatively unvaried rugged atmosphere. The storm scenes and the fight between the two men give the picture a certain force. It will be more apt to appeal to men than to women.

Action has been more or less suppressed at the start, so that the interest is not immediately aroused. Wallace Beery is presented in a series of moody studies, conceived to arouse sympathy for the character of the hero. The part does not seem suited to him. Because of his personality and his long association with the heaviest of villainous roles, this performance is not fully convincing. A few of the romantic touches are almost ludicrous. This is not a personal fault, but due to unfortunate casting and directing.

The story belongs to the Enoch Arden class and shows the sufferings of a man deserted by his wife. The suspense could have been increased by a more thorough dramatic construction. As it is, the incidents seem unrelated and the purpose of the story, at times, indefinite. Noah Beery gives the most interesting performance, this perhaps because he is appropriately cast. Virginia Browne Faire is pretty and pleasing in a small role.

Cast

William McCabe	Wallace Beery
Shark Moran	Noah Beery
Ann Reynolds	Virginia Browne Faire
Helda McCabe	Arline Pretty
Snape	Jack Carlyle

Story by H. H. Van Loan.
Scenario by Winifred Dunn
Direction by Robert Thornby.
Length, 5,000 feet.

Story

William McCabe saves the life of "Shark" Moran and Moran takes him on board his ship, a relief vessel. McCabe hints at an unhappy past and in time tells an Enoch Arden tale of his wife's faithlessness. He falls in love with Ann Reynolds, daughter of the captain of the supply vessel. The sudden appearance of his wife, and Moran's infatuation with her bring affairs to a climax between the two men, but their friendship survives and McCabe gets the girl he loves.

"Success"

Metro's Murray Garsson Special Is a Huge Box Office Bet With Surefire Angles.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

The public that this production is destined to please to the superlative degree is the same public that furnishes the foundation on with "Success," Murray Garsson's independent special which Metro will distrib, has been constructed. It's a huge, spectacular, human-interest structure, built on a solid foundation that will carry any house through a week or more of financial profit. Here's a production that is greater in human—genuine interest—than "Humoresque"; a production of the theatre—of its folks, of life behind the scenes, life at home, of life itself. You've been raving for mother pictures. Here's an artistically clever production that dwells on the masculine head of the family. It is a masterpiece in its line. Ralph Ince never did anything quite so human. This picture has a soul—a soul that will spell big money for the wise exhibitors.

Give the industry more pictures like "Success" and Lent and Christmas week will mean nothing in the show business. Here's a picture every reformer, every clergyman, every man, and woman—everybody—should see. This writer can't say too much for this production. It represents our model of picture the showmen and the public want. There is nothing superfluous. Everything is logical. It's a sweet story, a story of temperaments, a story of daddy who erred in his youth, only to lose wife, daughter—everything—and suddenly finding himself at the threshold of happiness only to find that his past was a drawback.

And climax! Nothing we have seen in a D. W. Griffith production stirred us so strongly, so effectively as the climax in "Success," genially worked up with a punch that hits straight between the eyes. The characters are humanly interesting. You recognize each and every one. They typify characters that are common. Their behavior is logic—but the story, ah, that's the big drag that will drag them into your theatre and hold them in their seats satisfied they have got their money's worth.

Our regret is that we can not go into details concerning the many, many features embodied in this production that make it as big as anything this writer has ever seen. As a production it is flawless.

Insofar as cast is concerned one couldn't ask more of "Success." In the first place it is chockful of names—with everybody acting realistically and delivering their bit satisfactorily and in artistic fashion. Brandon Tynan's role of the great Shakespearian thespian will live long in the memory, for it is his greatest role. His every move is that of the finished artist. Mary Astor as Rose Randolph is superb as is also Naomi Childers as Jane Randolph. The rest of the cast gives excellent support.

Applying for a job he discovers that the "angel" of the show is attempting to win his daughter's love by giving her a leading role. Without revealing his identity he cleverly saves his daughter and also her sweetheart who is about to follow a course that would lead to ruin. Then explanations are made and it develops that the old actor has made a great sacrfice and a reconcillaton occurs.

"A Clouded Name"

Playgoers Picture Features Pretty Norma Shearer in Average Production.

Somewhat lacking in action, this picture will appeal primarily to those who are sentimentally inclined. The story progresses slowly with very little suspense. The picture's most attractive feature is Norma Shearer who imbues familiar situations with considerable interest. She is appealing enough to make one forget at times the obvious trend of the story.

Primarily it is the story of a mystery surrounding the names of three persons. The charactes do not all seem convincing, especially those of the villain and the hermit. These, like most of the situations, are so similar to what has been seen in other screen productions, that they do not seem entirely realistic.

The part of the child as played by Yvonne Logan will be appealing to many. Those who are partial to idealistic themes, showing the wisdom of a small child in bringing about an adjustment between older persons will find an especial enjoyment in this picture. The climax, in which the child aids in a timely rescue is a striking example of this idea. The settings are pleasing and the photography is good.

"Othello"

Howells and Export and Import Offer Fine Foreign-Made Version of Famous Tragedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Shakespeare's immortal tragedy, "Othello," famed as a play and a grand opera, has been transferred to the screen and is being presented in this country and Canada by Export and Import Film Company and David P. Howells. It is a foreign-made film, the work of the distinguished director, Dimitri Buchowetski, and is presented by a fine cast headed by Emil Jannings, who received unusual praise for his work in "Deception."

It is a well-made and decidedly artistic production; the original story appears to have been faithfully followed, and no attempt made to change it so as to provide a happy ending. The many who are familiar with "Othello" know it as a story of strong drama and a remarkably clever study of human nature, particularly in the character of the arch-plotter Iago, who uses the other characters, including even his own wife, as pawns in his scheme of revenge. All of this is strikingly brought out with the result that the picture holds the interest intnsely throughout.

The picture, ending as it does with the taking by Othello of Desdemona's life and then his own, will naturally not appeal to spectators who demand a happy ending. The poignant tragedy of Othello's love, the artistry of the production, fine quality of the direction and excellent work of the cast will, however, if properly exploited attract discriminating patrons, lovers of Shakespeare, and many who possibly do not as a rule attend a moving picture theatre.

Emil Jannings in the title role gives a magnificent performance, bringing out the pathos and tragedy of the dark-skinned Moor's romance with the fair Desdemona, and only his huge physical stature identifies him as the Henry VIII of "Deception." Werner Kraus, another distinguished German actor, gives an unusual interpretation of the villainous and scheming Iago, maknng it a character of both lightness and depth, power, and intense cunning under a mask of jollity and at times almost buffoonry. Ica Lenkeffy makes a beautiful Desdemona, and the remainder of the cast give good accounts of themselves, though the actor who portrayed Cassio was rather effeminate in appearance.

Cast

Othello	Emil Jannings
Iago	Werner Kraus
Rodrigo	Ferdinand Allen

Based on Play by William Shakespeare.
Edited by Don Bartlett.
Length, About 6,300 feet.

Story

Othello, the famous Moor general, returns to Venice from a successful campaign, is received with acclaim and marries the beautiful Desdemona. Her father, a Venetian senator, opposes the match between his fair daughter and the dark skinned Moor. Iago, chagrined because Othello has not appointed him as his chief lieutenant, sees in this a chance for revenge. Gaining Othello's confidence, and using the other characters as pawns he succeeds in bringing disgrace to Cassio and making Othello jealous of him and doubtful of Desdemona's love to such an extent that Othello finally kills her and when he discovers Iago's perfidy, he takes his own life.

CONSENSUS of PUBLISHED REVIEWS

The Altar Stairs

(Frank Mayo—Universal—4,641 feet)

M. P. W.—This picture's appeal will be confined more or less to Frank Mayo fans.

T. R.—Frank Mayo appears to good advantage in a fairly intense melodrama.

N.—It's an "up and at 'em" type of story calculated to please anyone in search of adventure. It never lags and the interest is always sustained.

F. D.—A good action entertainment that suffers a bit from implausibility, but a good many will like it.

E. H.—It is fairly interesting, has good atmosphere, plenty of action and excellent photography.

Breaking Home Ties

(Featured Cast—Associated Exhibitors—5,022 feet)

M. P. W.—Should prove an unusually big success with Hebrew spectators. Its reception with other types of audiences will largely depend on whether they like pictures of this nature.

N.—It is a well made picture of its type and should please the audiences for which it is particularly designed.

T. R.—Another heart interest offering of the "Humoresque" type; should be a popular attraction and will appeal to the average picture-goer.

T. R.—Because of its human interest the picture will no doubt make its mark wherever shown, but should be of particular appeal in localities where there is a large Jewish population.

E. H.—A story of Hebrew life and customs, containing sufficient heart interest to put it over.

The Blind Bargain

(Lon Chaney—Goldwyn—4,473 feet)

M. P. W.—Lon Chaney's marvelous acting is feature of Goldwyn's thrilling but gruesome melodrama.

N.—Wild melodrama which can hardly be classified as being up to the usual Goldwyn standard.

T. R.—We would not pronounce it interesting as drama, though there is no hesitation in recommending it as entertaining movie fare.

F. D.—Deals with recently discussed theory of rejuvenation; not a pleasant theme but may appeal to some.

E. H.—It should attract unusual attention because of its difference from the ordinary run of pictures.

A California Romance

(John Gilbert—Fox—3,892 feet)

M. P. W.—A mixture of melodrama and burlesque with no great attempt at consistency.

N.—Mediocre—not only in story value but in the technicalities of production.

T. R.—May please in places where the audience is not overly critical, but for the most part the picture is only fair.

E. H.—We can't say so much for this one. It is trite in story and development and lacks punch.

F. D.—A poor picture that is not well made and contains unoriginal and uninteresting situations.

Captain Fly-by-Night

(Johnnie Walker—F. B. O.—4,940 feet)

M. P. W.—The success of a production such as this is more than usually problematical, because the picture will appeal to a certain type of patrons rather than generally.

F. D.—Another old California romance with action, thrills and a live star that will please many.

N.—Has a definite audience appeal—because of its romance, setting and action.

T. R.—A highly colored romance that should appeal to the schoolgirl type chiefly.

E. H.—Book it. It will please old and young.

The Forgotten Law

(Milton Sills—Metro)

M. P. W.—Has much to commend it and undoubtedly will meet with favor with most audiences.

N.—Comes under the heading of "better pictures."

T. R.—Likely to win a high degree of favor with movie fans in general and prove a lucrative box office card.

E. H.—Well produced and a decidedly novel theme.

F. D.—Highly improbable story makes for ordinary entertainment.

Quincy Adams Sawyer

(Featured Cast—Metro—7,500 feet)

M. P. W.—Extraordinary cast and combination of showmanship elements makes this Metro feature an unusual box-office attraction.

T. R.—As a whole the picture holds every needed requirement that goes to make up a thoroughly good box-office attraction.

E. H.—Will likely prove one of the most popular photoplays of the year.

N.—Will surely find a place in the category of better things. Thoroughly enjoyable.

F. D.—A mighty fine picture with a tremendous cast.

Singed Wings

(Bebe Daniels—Conrad Nagel—Paramount—7,788 feet)

M. P. W.—We believe that while theatres with high-class clienteles will find it profitable, it is far too flossy for some people.

T. R.—The curious mingling of fantasy and melodrama in this picture is so deftly and gracefully accomplished that it registers as most unusual and interesting entertainment.

N.—It is a weird tale, carrying no interest because of its fantastic plot and the strange marionettes which roam through it. The entertainment values are almost nil.

E. H.—Realism and fantasy are mingled deftly in the telling of the story. The box-office value of the picture is dependent largely upon the character of the clientele.

F. D.—Fantastic picture, but it isn't likely the majority will take it seriously enough to make it good entertainment.

The Town That Forgot God

(Featured Cast—Fox—10,461 feet)

M. P. W.—Strong heart interest and tremendous flood scenes in Fox picture introducing wonderful boy actor.

N.—It is a picture that will command reverence, gratify admirers of thoroughly clean, enlightening entertainment and satisfy followers of worth-while motion pictures.

T. R.—It will most likely attain its greatest success in comparatively small cities where the patronage is possibly less sophisticated than in New York.

E. H.—A trite story, with an intermingling of poverty, abused children, done in the usual melodramatic style. The flood is very well done and is the best thing in it.

F. D.—Human interest theme is overcrowded with sentiment and sobs; flood provides first rate thrill but feature does not offer especially cheerful entertainment.

The Super-Sex

(Featured Cast—American Releasing—5,749 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture holds fine entertainment for discriminating patrons, especially if some cutting is done so as to speed up the action.

T. R.—The story will no doubt appeal to people of all ages and classes and therefore should prove to be a good box-office attraction in any locality.

N.—It will serve its little hour and bring a breath of romance at the end of the day. Which is certainly something in its favor.

F. D.—Lack of humorous incident and slow-moving story keeps it from being good comedy number.

While Justice Waits

(Dustin Farnum—Fox—4,762 feet)

M. P. W.—Relies more upon the appeal of the story and suspense than upon mere physical action, the conflict being somewhat more repressed than usual.

T. R.—Fulfills the demands of the regulation western melodrama.

N.—The plot has been enlivened occasionally with a few twists which make it average entertainment. The fault with the story is its familiarity.

E. H.—Not up to the usual standard of Fox production in story interest. It is old-fashioned and lacks originality in development.

F. D.—Old-fashioned drama that builds to fairly effective climax though always obvious in its development.

Anna Ascends

(Alice Brady—Paramount—5,900 feet)

M. P. W.—In addition to an attractive cast and an ingenious plot, this production possesses that rare essential—appeal. "Anna Ascends" strikes a peculiarly human note. There are many reasons for recommending it, but this perhaps is the most important.

N.—Will not be catalogued as a masterpiece.

T. R.—It is a romantic story that should satisfy in practically any house.

F. D.—Alice Brady's best in a long time. First rate entertainment.

Barbed Wire

(Jack Hoxie—Aywon—5,000 feet)

M. P. W.—A thrilling drama of the old West, with Jack Hoxie as the star, making the most of his ability to ride and fight.

N.—It is just a rambling "wild west" story with enough two-fisted heroes and villains to receive the sanction of the ordinary western fan.

T. R.—The interest is well sustained, and the action is fast.

E. H.—Probably western drama lovers and followers of Jack Hoxie will find "Barbed Wire" more or less attractive.

Bulldog Drummond

(Evelyn Greeley—Carlyle Blackwell—Hodkinson—5,000 feet)

M. P. W.—If your audiences like action, thrills and excitement and are not squeamish over the devices employed by the conspirators, they will like this picture.

F. D.—Plenty of excitement and mystery if they don't mind them running wild.

T. R.—Here is a melodrama that is chock full of lively action and thrills galore. It is a picture that should appeal in any locality.

N.—The picture furnishes good atmosphere and is satisfying as a whole.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

Live News

Kathleen Martyn, former Ziegfeld Follies girl, and now a member of the All Star comedies' troupe with C. C. Burr, has finished "Beware of the Dog," with Ray McKee and Charlie Murray. This is Miss Martyn's first picture for Mastodon Films, Inc.

"The Average Woman," a Saturday Evening Post story by Dorothy de Jaegers, and "Rich Men's Sons," a story by Gerald Duffy, author of "Sure Fire Flint," which C. C. Burr produced with Johnny Hines not so long ago, have been bought by C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., as his leaders for the next series of feature productions.

"Luck," Johnny Hines' latest feature comedy, is finished. Ralph Spence has completed the titling and Johnny has supervised the editing. A New York premiere is now being arranged.

Another C. C. Burr feature ready for a New York premiere is "You Are Guilty," featuring James Kirkwood and Doris Kenyon. Others in the cast are Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Mary Carr, Carleton Brickert, William Riley Hatch and the five year old "find," Russell Griffen.

Gregory La Cava, director in charge of all the C. C. Burr All-Star comedies, has started on a new picture now that he has completed "Beware of the Dog," with Kathleen Martyn, Ray McKee and Charlie Murray.

Lester F. Scott, general sales representative for C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., has returned to New York from the Middle West, following a business trip through that section of the country. Mr. Scott will leave for the Southern territory to close contracts on the latest Burr features, "You Are Guilty," "The Last Hour" and "Luck."

C. C. Burr will most probably produce at least eight big features for the independent market this coming season. His last program consisted of six features. It is due to the success of these that he will increase his program.

"The Last Hour," C. C. Burr's feature with Milton Sills and Carmel Myers heading the cast, is proving popular all over the country, as telegrams and letters received at the Mastodon offices attest. Ed. Fay of Fay's Theatre, Providence, R. I., wired in that he considered "The Last Hour" the season's best independent picture.

The many rumors of Marie Prevost's engagement to Kenneth Harlan, which were started when they jointly played the leading roles in the Warner Brothers screen version of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," were laid to rest forever. Miss Prevost squashed the report by stating that she never had nor has she any intentions of ever marrying any man. But then, you never can tell!

The members of the "Main Street" cast recently made their first visit to the far-famed Gopher Prairie which has been built at the Waner Brothers studios in Los Angeles. Harry Myers, who plays the part of the druggist, Dave Dyer, breezed into his store and walked behind the counter. In his best pre-Volstead manner he said: "What'll you have, gents?" And the reply was unanimous in favor of chocolate sundaes. Whereupon, Otis Harlan, who is in charge of the Farmer's Bank, approached Director Harry Beaumont and said: "Every person in this outfit has a complete stock in their place of business, but I don't find any money in the bank."

"I should say not," returned Beaumont. "If we put money in there what would we use to pay your salary!"

Al Lichtman "Surprise Banquet" Honor Guest

WHEN Al Lichtman, the popular president of Al Lichtman Corporation, distributors of Preferred Pictures Corporation product, departed aboard the S.S. Berengaria for England on Tuesday, February 20, he knew he carried to Europe with him the very sincerest and best wishes of the motion picture industry in general. He knew, too, that his voyage had the blessing of his legion of friends, his business associates and who not, for they congregated at the Crystal Room of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York on Thursday evening, February 15, and accorded to him a testimonial that will not soon be forgotten. It was a classic in its line, with everybody in attendance a true pal of the guest of honor, who has accomplished wonders at the helm of his organization. They sang the praises of Al Lichtman and they cheered his efforts to the sky. Some told of the Al Lichtman of other days. Others told of the Al Lichtman of today. But it was the very same Al Lichtman who sat at the head of an L-shaped table and smilingly and modestly credited his own success to the co-operation and efforts of those with whom he is associated in Al Lichtman Corporation.

There was a note of sincerity that left no doubt as to the honest intentions of Al Lichtman franchise holders and his other friends to let him know in no uncertain terms that they were sorry he was going—but inasmuch as his future required such a trip, inasmuch as his hard labors of the past few months demanded a rest the sort this trip would give him, they all wished him bon voyage. He was warned the fluctuation of the German mark—and one gentleman ventured the statement that while there were a "lot of marks in Germany, they didn't mean a thing." And Al promised to remember that. They told Al just what they thought of him. Some resorted to humor, others dwelling on the testimonials in a serious vein—but all were along the same line, congratulatory to the guest of the night. He was voted a prince among good fellows, a business man of keen ability and a shrewd showman who worked not only for his own good, but for the good of the industry in general.

It was a night of nights—for Al. The boys came from everywhere. They all forgot their business cares and worries—long enough to hop a rattler and come to New York to show Al Lichtman just what they thought of him and to demonstrate the esteem in which they held him. And the feeling was genuine. It was the greatest gathering of "regular fellows" this writer ever has had the pleasure of attending. It was straight from the shoulder. The franchise holders told him just what Preferred Pictures had or had not done. But none complained.

But Al Lichtman was the big attraction. And he was a winner. He scored triumphantly. He dedicated his organization to the exhibitor and to the exchangemen through whom he releases his pictures. He spoke for Ben Schulberg, head of Preferred Pictures, who is on the Coast straining every effort to make pictures that Al Lichtman can merchandise. He told the franchise holders that his organization would do its utmost to get out the brand of pictures that exhibitors have been clamoring for. He congratulated the franchise holders on their splendid work on his current releases, giving to them no end of credit for the success of Preferred Pictures to date. A wonderfully modest chap this gentleman, Al Litchman.

He didn't mince words. He thanked his hosts for the banquet. He was as pleased and as tickled as a child on Christmas morn. He was introduced amid a loud round of applause that was quieted only at the request of the speaker himself. Al won't forget that demonstration—and neither will those who participated in it.

Harry Reichenbach, the high-powered exploiteer, was the toastmaster. Harry never was better. He proved a sensation in the words of the theatre and his every introductory speech was a sizzler from every angle. He spiced his remarks with humor—humor that started things going in grand fashion. Harry couldn't have done better work. He was the life of the party—and such a wonderful party it was, too.

Everybody had a good time. Among those who talked were Jack Bachmann, treasurer of the Al Lichtman Corporation; Joseph Dannenberg, of Film Daily; Robert E. Welsh, of Moving Picture World; Morrie Ryskind, A. H. Giannini, president of the Bank of Italy of California; Phil Gleichmann, who came all the way from Detroit; Harry Charnas, of Cleveland; Ben Amsterdam, of Philadelphia; Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, New York; Bill Johnston, of Motion Picture News; Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, Moe Mark, of the Mark Strand theatres; George Blaisdell, of Exhibitors Trade Review, and many others.—ROGER FERRI.

Theatre Reports

BOSTON — (Special) — "The Last Hour," with an all-star cast, cleverly exploited, opened to one of the biggest Mondays the Bowdoin Square Theatre has had in many years. This production is scoring big in New England theatres, the splendid box office reports coming as big surprises.

BALTIMORE — (Special) — Warner Brothers' "Heroes of the Street" opened to promisingly unusual business at the Wizard Theatre. The house management, while playing up Wesley Barry, did not forget Marie Prevost in its billing, the stunt proving a double draw.

BALTIMORE—(Special)—"Down to the Sea in Ships," the Elmer Clifton production, is the billing at the Century. The picture, which has come here widely heralded, opened to remarkable business, the presentation by Tom Soriero being one of the classics of the local season.

PITTSBURGH — (Special)—At the Sheridan Square, which books Keith vaudeville twice weekly policy, featured Phil Goldstone's latest melodrama, "Only a Shop Girl."

CLEVELAND — (Special) — "Shadows" is making an unexpectedly great showing in the neighborhood houses, which are now generally showing the Al Lichtman feature in which Lon Chaney is being starred.

JERSEY CITY—(Special)—"None So Blind," Arrow's Burton King production, is playing five houses in this city, day and date. The picture was well received at the opening.

BOSTON — (Special)—"Notoriety," the Will Nigh production which Weber & North are releasing in the independent market, is playing to satisfactory business in New England houses, according to the consensus of exhibitor's reports.

CHICAGO—(Special)—Following its successful showings at Loop houses, the Lon Chaney picture, "Shadows," a Preferred Picture, is scoring creditably in the neighborhood houses in this territory, the returns at ninety per cent of the little houses that have shown this picure being particularly big.

TOLEDO — (Special)—What turned out to be the most pretentious and cleverest shown picture in Toledo was recorded at the Temple Theatre where "The Hero," with Barbara La Marr, is being shown this week. This production will break the house record, judging from observations of the local representative of Moving Picture World. The opening, despite the bad weather, was entirely unlooked for, with the newspapers contributing praiseworthy notices that helped the draw considerably on the second day. The exceptional draw continued all week.

NEW YORK CITY—(Special)—The Cohen circuit of theatres have booked "None So Blind," the Arrow Burton King special, for a week, every house booking the feature.

INDIANAPOLIS — (Special)"Hero Lester F. Scott, sales representative for C. C. Burr, is now touring the South, visiting the independent exchanges. Several important contracts on "Secrets of Paris" being closed. Mr. Scott will return to the home office in New York.

Flora Finch is still in the hospital as a result of the fall she sustained before Christmas. As soon as she is able, she will return to the group of featured players who compose the casts of C. C. Burr's All-Star comedies.

John Barrymore Added to Warner Staff of Distinguished Stars for 1923 Films

Following closely upon the heels of the announcement of a few weeks ago that Warner Brothers had succeeded, after others had coaxed unsuccessfully for ten years, in bringing into the film fold the foremost American stage producer, David Belasco, comes now the news that John Barrymore, most active and most famous member of the family of great artists bearing his name, has been engaged by the Warner company and will devote much of his time for the next year to his appearances before the camera. This news was exclusively hinted at in Moving Picture World last week.

Mr. Barrymore sailed last Saturday on the Majestic for Europe, where he will join his wife, Michael Strange, playwright and poet. But on Friday, unknown to even his closest associates of the theatre in New York, he was closeted for several hours with Harry M. Warner, president of the Warner organization, and before he left he had signed a contract calling for his services in at least two important film plays which the Warners will present this season.

To the present generation of theatre-goers the fact that Mr. Barrymore probably will appear in the principal role of "Deburau," the Sacha Guitry drama which Mr. Belasco produced so successfully here two years ago, will seem extremely important and interesting. And to those who sit back and recall that in "the good old days" the drama was something to get excited about, the news that Mr. Barrymore has been chosen to act Brummell in Clyde Fitch's memorable play of thirty years ago, "Beau Brummell," will come as a distinctly pleasant and promising bit of news.

At the Warner offices it was learned that as quickly as Mr. Barrymore returns from abroad he will set about looking over the stage costumes of "Deburau," which Mr. Belasco has promised to place at the producers' disposal. It is considered likely that the "properties" and costumes of the Guitry play will be transferred directly to the Warner sudios. And it is already arranged that Mr. Belasco shall place his personal approval upon the production before it is released. He also, it is learned, will have much to do with the selection of casts and the arrangements of scenario.

"We are indeed highly pleased in being able to secure the services of so distinguished an actor as Mr. Barrymore," Mr. Warner said. "We believe that the public is desirous of seeing real artists in the better class of motion pictures, and we propose to continue with our original policy of giving to the public the very highest quality of entertainment which it lies within our power to make.

"We are sparing no expense in engaging the best stage and cinema artists, and we have expended quite a vast amount of money in this latest contract with Mr. Barrymore. We do not care to state specifically he amount involved, but the people who know the Barrymores and their histories on the American stage will be able to judge for themselves."

Ascher-Grand in Producing Venture

Boston Exchangemen, Now on Coast, Well Financed, Is Report

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Harry Ascher, of American Feature Films Corporation and Al Lichtman Exchange, and Sam Grand, of the Federated Film Exchange, both of Boston, have arrived here and will be interested actively in a producing venture in which New England money will be interested. Nothing of an official nature nor anything concerning the definite plans of the two have been made known. The two are at the head of their own enterprises that are financed by Boston capitalists, interested extensively in picture distribution and theatre-operating enterprises.

This information is not at all surprising to those close to Sam Grand, who was one of the most interested parties in Federated Film Exchanges, Inc., of America. Grand has been indirectly interested in independent production for some time. He is now standing guarantor for several independent producers, giving enough advance to allow the latter to make pictures. This advance is made in conjunction with a similar arrangement with other local distributors such as Ben Amsterdam in Philadelphia and Joe Friedman, of Chicago.

Grand is still active in handling the affairs of the Federated group, which is said to have lost considerable money through that venture. The exchanges involved are said to have dumped an amount running close to a million in the Federated proposition. These have during the past year made an effort to get back some of their money through the release of short subjects. Just how much of the money lost in the original venture, if any at all, has been returned through this effort has not been made known. However, Sam Grand, one of the heaviest losers, has been very active in the matter, as have also Ben Amsterdam, Joe Friedman, Harry Friedman and others.

Harry Ascher's organization in New England handles the distribution of the Universal, Al Lichtman Corporation and independent productions. He is interested by powerful interests, his exchange having developed into one of the best and best paying propositions in the business. Those who are said to be interested in the reported production project linking the names of Grand and Ascher are said to have been similarly interested in production in the past.

Reports gathered here have it that they propose organizing a production combination that will turn out independent productions at regular intervals and that already Mr. Grand is able to guarantee proper physical distribution in about 75 per cent. of the country through independent exchanges.

Exploitation on "Little Church" Covers An Entire State

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—(Special).—With the booking of the Warner Brothers' classic of the screen, "Little Church Around the Corner," Manager Reid of the Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I., launched one of the biggest newspaper and exploitation campaigns in the history of the city.

Fifty of the best twenty-four sheet boards in the city were secured. Manager Reid also utilized the local dailies by running for a number of days pictures of the prominent members of the cast in character poses clear across the page. Mercantile co-operative cut-out cards were placed in leading store windows, door knob hangers, regulation window cards, and heralds were distributed throughout the city.

Campaigns of a similar nature are being planned by scores of other theatres that have booked the feature, according to reports received at the Warner offices. It is declared by exhibitors who have seen the production that the theme and general excellence of the feature, in addition to the large cast of prominent screen players, is worthy of the highest commendation.

"Rags to Riches" Sets New Mark

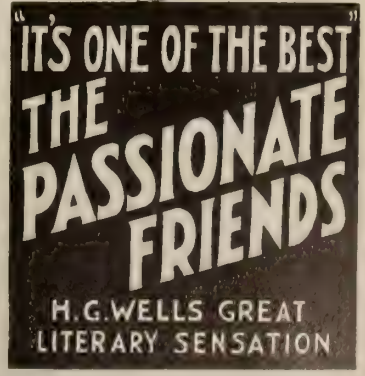
The engagement of the Warner Brothers classic of the screen, "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production featuring Wesley Barry, at the leading theatres throughout the country is shattering many box-office records, according to telegrams received by Harry M. Warner.

Two particular instances are cited in telegrams from the Ritz and Park theatres in Detroit. Charles Komer, manager of the Ritz, wired: "'Rags to Riches' just completed phenomenal engagement shattering all former house records. Must congratulate Warner Brothers for giving us pictures of this calibre."

Foreign Sale

Foreign rights are selling quickly on the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series of Box Office Winners, and almost all the foreign territories have already been disposed of. Another sale was made this week, when English rights were taken over of "Only a Shopgirl" by the Walturdaw Company, Ltd., of London.

PRES COMMONWEALTH FILM CORP.



Omaha Hears Independents Have Signed Larry Semon

OMAHA—(Special)—Reports current in film circles here that are usually well advised have it that the A. Blank Enterprises already have closed for the distribution of the 1923-24 product of Warner Brothers. The Warner output for next season, according to reports received here from New York, will include 26 productions. These will include the David Belasco product and others. According to this same report, the Warners, in addition to John Barrymore, are believed to have signed a David Belasco star. Several others now associated with national production companies are also said to have been engaged.

One report heard in local film circles is that Larry Semon, one of the best Vitagraph stars, has been engaged by Warner Brothers to play the titular role in "Little Johnny Jones," based on the George M. Cohan production of the stage. It has been generally believed here that the Warners had intended starring Wesley Barry in this production. Wesley Barry will be starred in "George Washington, Jr.," another G. M. Cohan special which the Warners will screen.

Another important report that bears out the contentions of independents relative to their meteoric progress comes in the form of a persistent rumor, also concerning Warner Brothers. This report has it that negotiations under way for several months have virtually been successfully terminated and involve the services of Lenore Ulric, who will play the leading role in David Belasco's "The Gold Diggers," which will be one of the De Luxe releases of Warner Brothers next season.

Exhibitors in this territory are looking forward to an unusually brilliant season in 1923-24. The current season has been an exceptionally good one, financially and artistically. Never in the history of independents here has the market been so chockful of classy independent pictures. Most of the higher class independent pictures are making money, too, and the demand, according to exchangemen, is greater than the supply.

Business in general has been very satisfactory here, everything considered. This territory was hard hit by the depression of the past few years, and, in fact, many of the exchangemen who are doing a big business are dumping their profits into the hands of creditors. Generally, however, the situation insofar as independents are concerned, is improving satisfactorily to everybody concerned. One thing the local independent has learned this season has been that only with big productions—productions that can be sold in competition with the national distributors' product—can they do a paying business with exhibitors, who are shopping for their pictures and not buying carelessly.

Just what the status of "dope" pictures here will be has not been yet definitely ascertained. Several exchangemen who have been approached by representatives of concerns handling these pictures have sought to "feel out" the public and authorities, but so far they have learned nothing that warrants them even taking a chance. However, most of the exchangemen and exhibitors are "sitting tight." Several exchanges, though, have secured options on such pictures merely as a protective measure against their acquisition by the opposition.

Prints and advertising matter on "Notoriety," Crescent's new special release, will soon be in. The greatest array of novelties ever gotten up on a feature will be had to help exploit the picture. Will Nigh, who produced "School Days" and "Why Girls Leave Home," is certainly entitled to a lot of credit in following up these two big money makers with another real attraction. It contains an all-star cast including the following: Mary Alden, Maurine Powers, Rod La Roque, Mona Lisa, J. Barney Sherry, Richard Travers, John Galsworthy, Andrew Randolph, Ida Waterman and George Hackathorne.

Crescent Film Exchange has consummated a deal with William Steiner for his new series of six Neal Hart Productions, consisting of the following subjects:

The Secret of the Pueblo; In the Devil's Bowl; Salty Saunders; The Fighting Strain; Below the Rio Grande; and The Forbidden Range. The deal was closed immediately following the screening of the first release, "The Secret of the Pueblo."

While screening a picture at the Fontenelle Exchange last Tuesday, "Bill" Winthrob was slightly burned about the hands when one of the reels of film caught fire. The reel was entirely destroyed but no other damage was done to speak of. The sprinkler system worked perfectly, and probably averted what might have been a much more disastrous fire. Mr. Winthrob was working on one of the other machines when the accident occurred.

The Crescent Film Company has just contracted for a set of one reel cartoon comedies, reputed to be the most entertaining series and laugh producers ever put into pictures. This series is called "Felix the Cat," by Pat Sullivan, the eminent cartoonist.

Grauman Signs Nigh's "Notoriety"

Will Nigh's first production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North of "Notoriety" has succeeded in winning a booking at Sid Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre of Los Angeles. A wire received from George Montgomery of the Supreme Film Co., local distributors of the society drama in the Los Angeles district, states that this is the first time that a state-right feature has been booked at the famous picture temple. To date Grauman's foremost theatre booked Paramount pictures exclusively.

The entrance of "Notoriety" into the country's most representative screen playhouse is an encouragement to independents as a whole. It is taken as a sign of the high standard of independent product, and leaves the door open for further independent productions of similar merit to make their way into that house in the future.

Grauman, known in the industry as a pioneer showman, booked "Notoriety" because of its box-office draw first, and its exploitation possibilities afterward. A believer in the maxim that half the success of a picture is in its presentation, Grauman accepted Will Nigh's special as an unusual medium for high class exploitation. The theme of the picture and its treatment is one especially suited to the elite patronage of the Million Dollar house.

An elaborate prologue is in preparation, on a scale as lavish and original as all of Grauman's presentation preludes to his shows. The timely interest of "Notoriety" in daily life will be featured.

Two Sales for "It Might Happen to You"

Following the announcement concerning the re-entrance of Weiss Brothers in the field of state right distribution, sales have been consummated via this channel for "It Might Happen to You." This five-part novelty comedy drama has been sold to Pearce Films, of New Orleans, for the territory of Louisiana and Mississippi and to the Standard Film Service of Baltimore, for the territory embraced by Washington, D. C., Maryland, Delaware and Virginia.

Arrow Closes Big Deal With Merit Changes

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces the consummation of negotiations with I. E. Chadwick of Merit Film Corporation whereby that organization acquired a large number of the Arrow productions for distribution in the upper part of New York State.

Productions in Deal

The productions included in this deal are "Man of the North," a Ben Wilson serial starring Ann Little; "The Fighting Skipper," a Forday serial starring Peggy O'Day with Jack Perrin and Francis Ford who is also the producer and director of the serial; "The Deceiver," a story of the far North with Carol Halloway; "Headin' North," a Western, starring Pete Morrison; "The Stranger in Canyon Valley," a Western, starring Edyth Sterling; four Neva Gerber productions produced by Ben Wilson; "Chain Lightning," a story of the race track starring Ann Little; "High Speed Lee," a drama of the Long Island smart set, produced by Atlantic Features, starring Reed Howes; "One Eighth Apache," "Back to Yellow Jacket," and "A Motion to Adjourn," three Peter B. Kyne productions, starring Roy Stewart and produced by Ben Wilson; "Man and Wife," an F. & M. production directed by John L. McCutcheon, with an all star cast including Robert Elliott, Norma Shearer, Maurice Costello, Gladys Leslie; "Night Life in Hollywood," an A. B. Maecher production, and "The Innocent Cheat," a Ben Wilson special co-starring Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham.

Places Merit in Front Ranks

As has been said, this is one of the most important contracts closed for the upper New York territory in some time and definitely places the Merit Film Corporation in the fore front of the independent exchanges in that territory.

Work Finished on "The Call of Roaring Falls"

Work on "The Call of the Roaring Falls," has been started by the Capital City Players at that company's studios, Washington, D. C. The story was written for this independent organization by Miss Agnes Hay, whose scripts have been produced by Universal and other large organizations.

According to A. H. Fowle, president of the Capital City Players, the cast assembled for this production includes such players as J. Martin Drownee, P. Franklin Ward, Maybelle Wynne, Grace Danforth and So-Lot Dowanee, a full blooded Mohawk Indian. Leslie Kendall will direct this production.

"The Call of the Roaring Falls," is the first of this company's five reel productions, its releases heretofore having been confined to short subjects.

Big Opening Slated for New Arrow Film, "Lost in Big City"

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces that the Blazed Trail special production, "Lost in a Big City," will receive its premier showing at the beautiful U. S. Theatre, Paterson, where it will play the entire week of February 6.

This production which was adapted to the screen by L. Case Russell from N. S. Wood's famous stage play of the same name, was directed by George Irving and stars John Lowell who is said to have duplicated his splendid work of "Ten Nights in a Barroom." Practically the entire cast that appeared in "Ten Nights in a Barroom" appears in "Lost in a Big City," with the addition of Ann Brody, Edward Phillips, Evangeline Russell and Whitney Haley. Other favorites who will be recognized are Edward Keller, Jimmie Phillips, Charles Beyer, Baby Ivy Ward, Leota Miller and Charles Mackey.

Manager Adams of the U. S. Theatre is planning an intensive exploitation and advertising campaign for this premier in which he will be assisted by representatives of the Exploitation Department of the Arrow Film Corporation.

It will be recalled that "Lost in a Big City" was given a pre-release showing for one day at The Glove Theatre, Gloversville, New York, where the picture was made and in this instance it not only shattered the box office record of that house for any single day's showing by several hundred dollars but received the unique tribute of the unanimous endorsement of the four trade paper representatives who journeyed up to Gloversville to attend the showing. These gentlemen were not only lavish in their praise of this latest Arrow special, but predicted that it would break the box office records established by Blazed Trail's big success of last year, "Then Nights in a Barroom."

It is announced that John Lowell, star and producer of the picture, and Baby Ivy Ward will appear in person at the U. S. Theatre during this showing.

Rapf Reveals Trend of Coast Production

The mediocre picture is a thing of the past and the general production activity on the West Coast indicates that a high standard is being set by the majority of producers, according to Harry Rapf, the producer of a number of Warner Brothers' classics of the screen, including "Brass," directed by Sidney Franklin and adapted from the novel by Charles G. Norris. Mr. Rapf arrived east last week with Sam Warner, production manager of the Warner Coast studios.

"There is no denying the fact that the majority of the producers on the coast are all striving to produce high class productions," said Mr. Rapf. "I have always made it my business to see and watch every picture that is produced, and never in my experience in the business have I seen anything finer tha nwhat is being attempted at the present time. It simply means that we are all geting away from the cheap production.

"More pains are being taken in the making of a feature; the best actors and actresses are constantly in demand. We are finding it extremely difficult to engae the proper people for difficult to engage the proper people for our pictures. Any player of prominence is virtually at a premium. Good directors, and by good I mean men of vision, men who know their business, are scarce indeed.

"These facts indicate to what measures producers are being pushed in order to properly film a picture. Nevertheless, the productions being made today will more than satisfy the craving for bigger and better pictures on the part of the public. And exhibitors throughout the country will testify that the calibre of the pictures they are booking are far superior to anything they have ever shown in the past.

"As far as the Warner Brothers are concerned the future production schedule is by far the most wonderful that has been planned by any independent producing concern in the business. Two factors are involved in the production of the eighteen classics, namely, the acquisition of popular novels and stage plays, and engaging the best players and directors available. With these assets, coupled with a conscientious, painstaking effort on the part of every producing unit, the entire array of features will set a standard that will be hard to beat."

"Temporary Marriage" New Principal Film

Eastern Distribution Manager Irving Lesser of Principal Pictures Corporation has started in full motion the machinery that will exploit its latest release, "Temporary Marriage," the first picture Sacramento Pictures Corporation has contributed to the Principal lineup. William H. Jobelman, Vice-President and General Manager of Sacramento Pictures Corporation, in a telegram received by Mr. Lesser characterized the picture as "one of the greatest ever offered good substantial independent exchanges."

The cast is an all-star one with some splendid box office names. Principal Pictures Corporation will spare neither money, time nor effort in properly exploiting this special.

The all-star cast is headed by Kenneth Harlan, hero of many successful productions and today ranking among the most popular screen leading men. Others in the cast include Mildred Davis, who has married Harold Lloyd; Tully Marshall, concededly the greatest character actor in the picture business, Myrtle Steadman, Stuart Holmes and Maude George.

Trixie Friganza Feature Arrives

Announcement was made at the offices of Principal Pictures Corporation this week that the first print of the latest release of that concern, "Mind Over Motor," starring Trixie Friganza, one of the most noted artistes in this country, had been received. Eastern Distribution Manager Irving Lesser is now making arrangements for the screening of this production to the critics and exchangemen, many of whom have been in negotiation with him since annoucemet first was made of the acquisition of this special by Principal.

Arrangements have been made whereby virtually 80 per cent of the country's territorial rights have been disposed of. However, these buyers realizing the value of the star, who is one of the highest-salaried artists on the Keith circuit, have already inaugurated a campaign exploiting the picture.

Buys Five New Arrow Features

SEATTLE — (Staff Special)—Arrow Photoplays Company has purchased five "Big Boy" Williams feature releases for the Pacific Northwest. This is the first time these releases have entered this territory. Prints of the first picture are due some time in February.

L. N. Walton, Portland manager of Greater Features, Inc., exchanges, has announced the arrival of a nine-pound son.

F. M. Brockell, general manager of distribution for First National, was in Seattle last week and inspected the local exchange.

Al Rosenberg of De Luxe Feature Film Company has purchased six specials from Charles C. Burr of Mastodon Films, Inc. The pictures are "Sure Fire Flint," "Secrets of Paris," "The Last Hour," "Are You Guilty?" "Luck" and "Oh Ye Fools."

Al Rosenberg's exchange is also handling the output of Principal Pictures Corporation and Al Lichtman Corporation.

State Rights News from Kansas City

KANSAS CITY—(Special) — M. A. Kahn, manager of the Crescent Film Exchange, was in the office last week for the first time in two weeks. He left again last Monday night to rejoin the Warner Bros.' float, which is still traveling around through Kansas. Mr. Kahn reported the float was making a big hit in every town, and that practically all of the key towns had been closed on the Warner Bros. Classics. The towns closed in Kansas during the last trip are: Wichita, Augusta, Winfield, Arkansas City, Newton, Florence, Ottawa, Atchison, Manhattan, Emporia; and Webb City and Carthage, in Missouri.

P. W. Meyers is the new booker at the Standard Film Company. He has never been in this territory before, but has had several years' experience in Dallas and Atlanta.

F. Bund, Jr., manager of the Kansas City branch of the U. S. Army Motion Picture Service, at 1114 Broadway, visited the Keystone Press office last week to order some heralds for some of the pictures the soldier boys in the camps are going to see.

Sam Werner, of United Film Exchange, will release the Hope Diamond Mystery serial about February 15. He has the Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois rights on the picture.

"Main Street" Nearly Ready

"Main Street," the Warner Brothers seventh and last classic of the screen to be produced this season, is rapidly nearing the stages of completion under the direction of Harry Beaumont, according to Sam Warner, production manager of the coast studios.

Mr. Warner stated that the coast studios are being enlarged in order to accommodate a number of producing units for the coming series of eighteen productions. The stage will be fully 300 feet long, with a depth of 120 feet, and containing sixty-four dressing rooms. The exterior of the building will have a frontage of 500 feet, and a portion of this space will be utilized by two projections rooms and four cutting rooms.

The property room, a number of other stages and the generating room will be in the rear of the building, the administrative offices of which are being sumptuously invested with all modern appliances. Construction of the new additions has been under way for a number of weeks, and Mr. Warner expects to have everything in readiness by the early part of next month, when production of the first of the new series of pictures will be started.

W. Ray Johnston, vice-president of the Arrow Film Corporation, made a flying trip to Pittsburgh the latter part of last week, and after visiting a number of the exchanges, reports that he finds that both the exchanges and exhibitors are doing a very nice business on Arrow pictures.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, is in receipt of advice from W. J. "Bill" Mahoney, the live-wire manager of the Rialto Theatre of Providence, that the big Arrow-Burton King special, "The Streets of New York," enjoyed one of the most successful engagements in that theatre in a long time.

His telegram follows:

"Just closed a week's engagement at the Rialto Theatre, Providence, of Burton King's production, "The Streets of New York," to the second biggest week the house has ever had. If it had not been the first week of Lent, I would no doubt have broken the house record. When you can stand them up Ash Wednesday this alone will tell you how well the Providence theatre-goers like 'The Streets of New York.

W. J. MAHONEY."

Dearth of Stars and "Names" Real Problems for Independents

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Contrary to general belief in some circles in picturedom, the fact remains that never before were real "box office stars" and "big names" so much in demand among independent producers, who today are giving heretofore unheard of salaries for the services of such players. It is almost impossible to get "big stars," most of the latter now working on two pictures at one time, while three are known to be working on three.

Many of the producers turning out pictures for distribution through national releasing organizations are reaping a lucrative harvest "farming out" stars to independent producers, who seem to be starving for the want of big names. Realizing the necessity of big productions with equally strong individuals in the cast, independent producers are sparing no cost, but this effort has required more than ordinary patience, for the stars in demand, realizing their need at this time, are cleverly and in business-like fashion making demands for unusual salaries.

Claire Windsor, Lon Chaney, Milton Sills, Edith Roberts, Marie Prevost, Kenneth Harlan, Wallace and Noah Beery, Tully Marshall, Harry Myers, Louise Fazenda, Otis Harlan, are a few who have been working overtime on independent productions. Such producing units as those maintained by Warner Brothers, B. P. Schulberg, Tom Forman, Phil Goldstone and others, producing regularly, in order to safeguard their interests and so that they are assured the services of established stars, have placed "good names" under contract. When unable to utilize them, these stars, as in the case of the national producers, they are "farmed out" to other producers.

The "farming out" process has proven a lucrative venture for those involved. Lon Chaney, Tully Marshall and others are "freelancing," signing for individual pictures. Chaney is said to be drawing down a salary of $300 a day for his services, with scores rushing for him at this price.

In fact, the demand for stars or anyone with a "name" is so great that many old-timers are returning back to the fold. Supporting cast players, however, seem available in as large numbers as before, although those of distinctive "types" are being held under contracts and their services are available only through negotiations carried on with their contract holders, the latter setting the salary figure and in many cases demanding a bonus of "service charge."!

"Has the World Gone Mad?" in Big Foreign Deal

Word came from the office of Equity Pictures Corporation late this week that the first foreign deal had been consummated on their new Special production, "Has the World Gone Mad." By the closing of this contract, Equity has disposed of practically the entire South American market—the only part left open being the northern strip of small countries including Colombia, Venezuela and the Guianas.

The contract was closed between Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation, and Jacob Glucksman after a screening in the Equity projection room. The territories covered by this deal comprise the countries of Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. Mr. Glucksman expressed his absolute confidence in the success of the picture in each of the above countries, due to the fact that the production not alone deals with the trouble and eccentricities of American life, but is applicable to the society life of any country in the world today.

Principal Pictures Has Foreign Dept., Roth in Charge

Principal Pictures Corporation, through its officers, Sol Lesser, Irving Lesser and Michael Rosenberg, announced the establishment of a foreign sales department. This department which will be under the supervision of Eastern Manager Irving Lesser, will be in charge of Max Roth and will function from the New York offices on the tenth floor of the Loew State Theatre building in New York City.

According to the announcement made this week, the foreign department will negotiate for sales of foreign rights to independent productions distributed by Principal Pictures Corporation. Already this department has closed a number of important deals. One of the most important deals involved the British distribution of Principal pictures in England and provinces by S. L. Newman of London. Mr. Newman's concern already is handling the first two big Principal releases, "Environment" and "The World's a Stage."

This week Mr. Roth announced that he had closed with Luise R. Searenno and R. Gonzales Soto of Mexico City for the Mexican Rights to "Environment" starring Milton Sills and Alice Lake, and "The World's a Stage" with Dorothy Phillips.

Many Stars of Other Days Are Returning

The demand among independent producers for "names" is so great that many stars of former days who have been in retirement for some time have been encouraged to stage "comebacks." Others who have been seen in State rights pictures on and off are also having no trouble getting contracts. However, player agencies in New York are scouring around for "names" for insertion in "all-star casts" productions.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, once idols of the motion picture theatregoing public, are working in a picture that is said to be financially backed by the B. F. Keith interests. The Bushmans have been appearing in vaudeville for many years and are considered a standard act on the Keith and Orpheum circuits.

Tom Santschi, another star of other days, is having no trouble getting engagements. He has been appearing in Preferred Pictures that B. P. Schulberg has been making for Al Lichtman Corporation. Maurice Costello, the idol of years ago, also is back working regularly. Gladys Brockwell is starred in an anti-dope picture, "The Drug Traffic," which will be released next week. Alice Joyce, another favorite of bygone days, is reported about ready to make her re-appearance in pictures.

George Wiley Sells "Salome"

George H. Wiley, who is handling Malcolm Strauss' "Salome" in its distribution through independent exchanges, has just started out on a two weeks' trip in the interests of that spectacular production, which will take him to all the principal cities in the Middle West and South.

He is taking a print of Malcolm Strauss' "Salome" with him, and this will be the first opportunity afforded exchangemen in those territories to view the picture, enthusiastic comment on which has preceded it.

Russia Studios Getting Busy; Foreign Gossip

According to Charles Recht, a representative of the Russian Soviet Government in New York, the picture business in Russia is improving immensely in every way. The government has established a department supervising the motion picture industry in that country. Most of the pictures made in Russia, however, are not considered suitable for showing anywhere excepting in Russia, where the demand for home product is not so great, but where foreign pictures are practically extinct. Foreign experts in motion pictures have been brought to Russia to take charge of production.

The enterprise undertaken by Frank V. Chamberlain, formerly of Famous Players, involving the production of pictures in China, is making rapid headway, according to latest reports. Many American and Chinese business men are involved in the venture, of which Chow Tsu Chi is the president. The company has been incorporated primarily for the purpose of developing the industry in China, where there are 5800 cities and a population of 433,000,000 people.

Sam Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol Theatre in New York City, is in Europe studying exhibition conditions in European countries.

Al Lichtman of Al Lichtman Corporation, sailed from New York last Saturday for England. From England he will go to the continental countries, where he will make distribution arrangements for Preferred Pictures. He will be gone six weeks.

Granger in England has acquired the rights to another new German picture entitled "Dr. Mabuse." "Passion" and the Mae Marsh picture, "Paddy the Next Best Thing," are doing well in British kinemas.

No fewer than four legitimate theatres and halls in London are showing pictures. "Robin Hood" is at the London Pavilion; "The Virgin Queen," J. Stuart Blackton's latest picture, at the Empire; "Prisoner of Zenda," at the Palace, and "Paddy the Next Best Thing" at New Scala.

Something like 150 Italian-made pictures are in circulation in this country and being shown in Italian picture houses in leading cities of the East and Middlewest and in California.

Hamilton Theatrical Corporation, in which Adolph Zukor of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is interested, has announced that it will not reissue any of the old Pola Negri films which it acquired in the big foreign deal of several years ago. Pola Negri is making pictures under the Famous Players banner, her first release being "Bella Donna."

Motion picture business in Austria has improved surprisingly well during the past few months, according to dispatches that have reached New York via Paris.

Independent distributors in Europe have taken up American exploitation ideas and are applying them to current runs. This is particularly noticeable in England, where Warner pictures and "What's Wrong With the Women?" are being given an exceptionally strong play.

Five American motion picture stars in New York this week declined tempting offers from European producers, who are seemingly intent on getting all the good American material possible.

Rathner Appointed

Harry Rathner, special sales representative of Principal Pictures Corporation, while in Omaha this week closed a deal with Liberty Films, Inc., of that city, whereby that firm will handle the distribution of "Environment," starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills.

Smalley Added to "Temptation" Cast

Phillips Smalley's is the newest well known name to be added to the all star cast which has been lined up by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for their third box office winner, "Temptation." It is announced that Smalley has been signed up for the "heavy" role, thus adding even greater prestige and box office value to the fine cast, which includes in addition Bryant Washburn, Eva Novak, Vernon Steele and June Elvidge. Phillips Smalley has a large following among film patrons, and has also made a success on the stage. Starting as one of the pioneers in the film business, he is one of the few men who have not only retained, but added to their popularity. He did much fine work in big superfeatures such as "Hypocrites," "Where Are My Children?", "Idle Wives" and others.

"Last Hour" Sets Many New Records

Reports from various exchanges to C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., indicate that "The Last Hour," the Edward Sloman production released through Mastodon, is piling up unusual records in the way of bookings.

Only a short time ago Sam Moscow of Boston booked thirty-two first run theatres in New England immediately after a screening of the feature and now comes word from Mountain States Film Attractions of Denver, reporting bookings for many of the finest theatres in Colorado and New Mexico.

"The Last Hour" will soon be shown in such houses as the Princess, Queen, Denver; the Rialto, Colorado Springs; the Rialto, Pueblo; the Sterling, Greeley; the Curran, Boulder; the West, Trinidad; the Rialto, Sterling; the Cover, Morgan; the Coronado, Las Vegas, N. M., and the Princess, Roswell, N. M.

Many New England theatre owners have wired Mr. Burr attesting the fact that "The Last Hour" has more than pleased their patrons. For instance, Ed. Fay of Fay's Theatre, Providence, R. I., wires, "Have just seen and bought the 'Last Hour.' I honestly consider this the season's best independent." George W. Allen, Jr., of the Capitol Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., wired as follows, "'The Last Hour' opened to capacity and stood them up balance of the week. Sell Moscow more like this one."

From the Denver territory comes this word: "'The Last Hour' opened Thursday in Denver and notwithstanding the fact that we have had two heavy snowstorms during the last week, the picture pleased everyone and is doing considerable business."

Both the East and the West have taken to "The Last Hour," it seems. The feature is an adaptation of the story, "Blind Justice," by Frank R. Adams, and features Milton Sills and Carmel Myers.

"None So Blind" Scoring Big In Gotham Section

"None So Blind," Burton King's second Arrow release, received its premiere showing on Monday, when it opened day and date at Frank Hall's four New Jersey theatres, the State, Strand, Ritz and Twin-Capitol. Business at all openings, in spite of the bad weather break, was reported good on Tuesday morning. In addition to these showings it will, starting February 24, be shown at all the Sydney S. Cohen theatres in New York and the Fay Theatre in the Bronx.

Special exploitation on "The Drug Traffic," starring Gladys Brockwell, Barbara Tennent and others, has been started in the New York territory by Renowned Pictures Exchanges, which own that production in New York State. Paul Gray has been signed to do the special exploitation.

I. E. Chadwick of Merit Pictures Exchanges of New York City and Buffalo has acquired considerable new product for his offices. Most of the pictures are Arrow specials.

Al Fineman of W-B Exchange of New York has started exploiting "The Little Church Around the Corner," the latest Warner special, which will be shown at the Strand Theatre in New York the first of next month.

Capital Film Exchange of New York City has acquired the Greater New York and northern New Jersey rights to "Is Money Everything?" starring Miriam Cooper, Martha Mansfield and Norman Kerry.

Arrow Film Exchange in New York announced this week that the metropolitan premiere showing of John Lowell's next starring vehicle, "Lost in a Big City," will be staged at Adams Brothers' United States Theatre in Paterson, N. J., next Monday.

Melvin Hirsh, of Aywon Film Exchange announced that his exchange had purchased the metropolitan rights to "Love's Old Sweet Song" an Oscar Lund production.

W-B Exchange has purchased "The Tie That Binds," a special with Barbara Bedford, Robert Edeson and others for distribution in New York.

Paul J. Rainey's "The Heart of the Jungle" has been acquired by Merit Exchange of New York.

First Runs On "Only a Shop Girl"

"Only a Shop Girl," C. B. C.'s second big Box Office Winner, is proving a big hit in the San Francisco and Los Angeles territory, according to advices from Profress Features, the territorial holder there.

W. O. Edmunds of that company notifies that the feature is playing the best houses in that territory and that it has just been signed up for runs at Loew's State Theatre in Los Angeles, and Loew's Warfield in San Francisco.

Maryon Aye Is Put Under Contract

Maryon Aye, one of screenland's fairest feminine players, has affixed her name to a contract with Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, whereby she will enact important roles in the forthcoming Sol Lesser productions, the first of which is George M. Cohan's famous stage play, "The Meanest Man in the World," starring Bert Lytell.

Miss Aye needs little introduction to the film world, having appeared in productions for Vitagraph, William Fox, Universal and many other large organizations. She made a series of eighteen Western productions for the Lesser organization in which she was starred, and she is at present working with Marshall Neilan on his production, "The Ingrate," at the Goldwyn West Coast studio.

Many Sales On New Drug Drama Film

Independent exhangemen throughout the country this week deluged the New York offices of Harvey Gates distributing his latest production, "The Drug Traffic," with Barbara Tennant, Gladys Brockwell and Bob Walker. The production, the first print of which will be delivered in New York the first of next week and Prince Ready for general exhibition on Feb. 28, has created considerable discussion in film circles.

The following sales were announced this week:

Renowned Pictures Corporation for New York State, New York City and Northern New Jersey.

G. Meyers of Excel Amusement Enterprises of Williamsport, Pa., for Delakware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

H. Leiber of Indianapolis for Indiana.

Liberty Films, Inc., of Des Moines for Iowa.

Southern States Film Corporation of Atlanta for entire South and Southwest.

Mountain States Film Corporation of Denver for the Rocky Mountain States.

Twentieth Century Film Corporation of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

Arrow Makes Foreign Sales

David J. Mountan, Foreign Manager of Arrow Film Corporation, announces the sale of the following pictures to Universal Pictures Corporation for Brazil:

"The Streets of New York," starring Barbara Castleton and Edward Earle; "The Price of Youth," with Neva Gerber; "God's Country and the Law," with Gladys Leslie; "Impulse," with Neva Gerber; "A Motion to Adjourn," with Marjorie Daw and Roy Stewart; "Bonnie May," with Bessie Love.

"The Innocent Cheat," with Kathleen Kirkham and Roy Stewart. "Night Life in Hollywood," an Arrow special; "The Hidden Light," with Dolores Cassinelli; "Penny of Top Hill Trail."

Mr. Mountan states that further developments of large magnitude are nearing completion and will be announced within the next few weeks.

Metro Film Highly Praised by Critics

Reginald Barker's production of "Hearts Aflame," opened at the Rialto Theatre February 4. This big photoplay is a Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction.

"The Evening Post" says: "Interest in the film registered 100 per cent." The realism of the forest fire scenes is pointed out by "The Tribune" reviewer who writes: "A woman sitting in front of us turned around and said: 'I was caught in a forest fire once, and that is so real that it frightens me to look at it.'"

The critic for "The Evening Journal" says: "The forest fire, of course, is the climax of 'Hearts Aflame,' which was adapted from Harold Titus' novel, 'Timber,' but there are other sequences which set one's nerves a-tingling." Quinn Martin, in "The World" calls the forest fire one of the best.

"The Globe" credits the director with a large part in the success of this Louis B. Mayer production for Metro, saying: "There is no other director who can do so much with a storm or fire scene as Reginald Barker, and in his current effort he has excelled even himself."

"Reginald Barker," says "The Sun," "has turned out an unusually clever motion picture, one that adds to his reputation as a leading screen director * * *. The forest fire is a startling spectacle."

Old Songs Tied Up with Carewe Film

Old time popular songs are having their inning again with the showing of Edwin Carewe's picture, "Mighty Lak a Rose." Strains of "Mighty Lak a Rose" song are heard all through the picture and First National has interwoven in its elaborate music cue other songs that have been sung and whistled for years. Among these are "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "The Bowery," "Molly O," "Where Did You Get That Hat?" "Sidewalks of New York," "Comrades," "Rock-a-bye Baby," and many others.

The cue was arranged by James C. Bradford.

The whole idea of the Carewe production is based on the power of music as an influence for good. Therefore with the aid of the suggestions in the cue sheet, many exhibitors are using an "Old Song Number" as part of their program before flashing "Mighty Lak a Rose," on the screen.

Tie ups with music and department stores are said to be having a fine effect for exploitation.

Pola Negri to Star Again for Paramount

As a special reward for her success in "Bella Donna" Pola Negri is to be given the biggest picture ever made by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president in charge of production.

The picture will be "Don Caesar de Bazan," and plans are already under way for its production, which will begin as soon as Miss Negri finishes her present picture, "The Cheat."

The success of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Robin Hood" and "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has indicated that the public is ready for the biggest dramatic pictures of which the screen is capable, Mr. Lasky said, and plans which he has inaugurated since his arrival in New York recently call for a production made on a scale never before attempted in the studio.

"Don Caesar de Bazan" was written in the middle of the last century by Adolphe d'Ennery, author of "The Two Orphans," in collaboration with P. S. T. Dumenier.

New Juvenile Star in "The Pilgrim"

Formerly known to fame by virtue of large shuffling feet, a trimmed mustache and a smileless countenance, Charlie Chaplin, whose next picture "The Pilgrim," is to be released by First National, is coming to have a new name as a maker of juvenile stars. This growing reputation and the release of "The Pilgrim" are simultaneous, for it is in this production that Chaplin introduces his latest "find," young Dean Franklin, or Dinky Dean, as he is popularly known.

Followers of the silent screen recall how little Jackie Coogan made a meteoric rise to fame by appearing in "The Kid." When on the completion of "The Kid," he was able, by virtue of the reputation acquired in that picture, to jump into a series of starring roles that have netted him a fortune, he established a record for juvenile affluence.

DRIVEN

"DRIVEN" REACHES HEIGHTS OF BEST AMERICAN FILMS

By P. W. GALLICO.

Title of picture, "DRIVEN."
Produced and directed by CHARLES BRABIN.
Released by UNIVERSAL.
Presented at the CRITERION THEATRE.

"Driven," to us, stands out as one of the best photoplays we have ever seen from an American producer. This is a tall statement, but we stick to it. It is powerfully dramatic, brilliantly acted and directed, and makes no concessions.

The producer set out to tell a story of the kind of people who inhabit the mountain regions of the South, and he did it unflinchingly. It is not a pretty picture, but it is an honest picture.

The story is so simple it can be told in a few words. A drab, miserable mother of a vicious mountain brood sells information which leads to its being wiped out in order to assure happiness to her youngest son.

We can recall, perhaps, only two other photoplays in which the inevitability of circumstances has been as powerfully rendered in a series of pictures as it is in "Driven." There is more real despair and heartbreak in this short film than in all the rest of the so-called "heart" and "mother" pictures put together.

Burr McIntosh

Acting honors belong to Emily Fitzroy, whose portrayal of the woman of the mountains whose family have crushed everything but life out of her is a marvelous bit of acting. Charles Emmet Mack is seen as her youngest son, who is different from the others. With Elinor Fair, he shares next honors in this remarkable picture. Miss Fair plays Essie, the girl, thrown in with the brutal family of Tollivers when one of them murders her father.

Elinor Fair and Charles Emmet Mack

George Bancroft and Burr McIntosh have the other two telling parts, Bancroft, as Lem the killer, who desires Essie, and McIntosh as Paw, the head of an unholy family of moonshiners.

We haven't the space to be as enthusiastic about this film as we would like to. We suggest that you see it.

The photography is excellent, because it does just what it should. It helps to tell the story. The love element between Tommy and Essie is handled as charmingly as we have ever seen it done. It is a picture of life. It is.... oh, well, see for yourself.

New Prints and Aids on Fox Masterpieces

Because of the perennial and ever-growing demand on the part of exhibitors, educational institutions and civic and social organizations for the list of dramatic masterpieces which have been produced by Fox Film Corporation during the past few years, announcement is made this week at the New York offices of a general preparation of new prints, posters and accessories for these pictures.

It is this intensely earnest manifestation of the public's appreciation of these features over a period of many months that brings the renovation of the films and the construction of the more efficient presentation plans.

The subjects included in the list are: "Evangeline," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Les Miserables," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," "Treasure Island," "The Babes in the Woods," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "If I Were King" and 'Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp."

In each instance special material has been selected for a pictorial one-sheet, designed to meet the needs and exigencies of both theatrical and non-theatrical exhibition. Comprehensive press sheets have been arranged for each picture. They contain news stories, exploitation and presentation ideas, advertisement lay-outs and many suggestions of benefit to the exhibitor.

On "If I Were King" an elaborate and beautiful 24-sheet has been devised that offers five different cut-out possibilities.

"The Flirt" Breaks Records in Pittsburgh

"The Flirt," the Hobart Henley production made for Universal-Jewel release, is just closing the last of its four weeks' run in the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh. It is said to have broken many records there. Though it originally was planned to run the picture only one week, the crowds which flocked to the Cameo were so great that the addition of an extra show late in the evening did not lessen the box office line.

The run was first extended to a second week, then to a third and finally to a fourth. Latest reports from Pittsburgh indicate that the attendance, not now as good as during the first week or so, still keeps the house filled. But for the obligatory presentation of another picture beginning next week "The Flirt" might continue in the Cameo for a longer run.

It is of particular note that during the first week's run of "The Flirt" in the Cameo it also was shown in the Alhambra Theatre in East Liberty, a suburb of Pittsburgh. There, too, the picture played to a land office business and was held over for a second week. This has happened only three times during the history of moving pictures in East Liberty. The other two holdovers were "Smilin' Through" and "Grandma's Boy."

"Adam's Rib" Shown; Evokes High Praise

Cecil B. DeMille's latest production for Paramount, "Adam's Rib," by Jeanie Macpherson, had its world premiere at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, last Sunday, and registered the greatest triumph of the producer's career, according to the Los Angeles newspapers, all of which gave high praise to the picture.

Guy Price, in the Evening Herald, said: "For novel daring in the production of forest and cave-man sequences in the midst of a portrayal of twentieth century life it is doubtful if this picture has ever been equalled. Cecil B. DeMille deserves great commendation as a director. The excellence of the photography cannot be gainsaid. Milton Sills wins the unrestricted approval of all spectators, Elliott Dexter made the most of his part, Theodore Kosloff is a success and Anna Q. Nilsson and Pauline Garon are well suited to their roles."

Edwin Schallert, in the Times, said: "DeMille is more clever than usual in 'Adam's Rib.' It is just full of fascinating stuff."

The Express said: "'Adam's Rib' stirs up a Pandora's Box of sophistry and brilliant technic. It is a fascinating study in directorial psychology and cunning craftsmanship."

Plays Opposite Gibson

Laura LaPlante, who has been "in training" at Universal City for nearly two years, playing chapter films, western and comedy leads, is now playing her first feature leading role for Universal opposite Edward (Hoot) Gibson in "Katy Didd," a story written, scenarized and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

Carewe Film Plays to Big Business

"Mighty Lak' a Rose" directed by Edwin Carewe, the first Associated First National production, is said to have lived up to all its advance expectations made by the reviews of trade paper critics, in its opening run at the Garden Theatre, Paterson, N. J.

According to the letter received by Richard Rowland, general manager of First National from Jacob Fabian, whose chain of theatres includes the Garden, "Mighty Lak' a Rose" went into this 1,200 seat house absolutely "cold," against stiff opposition, against snow and sleet and despite these obstacles created a box-office record that has been surpassed by only one attraction in recent months.

The most commendable feature of the financial report, Mr. Fabian states, is that with the exception of Wednesday when a big storm took place, the box-office receipts showed a continual increase from the opening Monday through Saturday, demonstrating the powerful word of mouth advertising given this attraction by those who had seen it.

On this point Mr. Fabian writes: "Usually in one week stands in this house business drops down on Thursday and Friday over previous days, but the figures show that Thursday and Friday were, next to Saturday, the picture's best days."

Many Bookings for "Woman of Bronze"

The success of "Enter Madame" and "The Hands of Nara," the two most recent Metro releases, starring Clara Kimball Young, has brought about exceptionally heavy bookings for "The Woman of Bronze," the latest photoplay in which this popular star is soon to be seen. Although this picture is not yet ready for general release, bookings in unprecedented volume have been already recorded, and their number is growing readily, it is stated.

"Enter Madame," Miss Young's most recently completed motion picture released by Metro, ran for forty-five weeks on Broadway as a stage play. It is the work of Gilda Varesi and Dolly Byrne. As a photoplay for Miss Young it won widespread approval, it is said.

"The Hands of Nara," based on the novel by Richard Washburn Child, preceded "Enter Madame." It, too, has had a notable record. Its author is a distinguished American novelist; at the present time the American ambassador to Italy.

"Eili, Eili" Scores a Popular Triumph

"Breaking Home Ties," the feature based on "Eili, Eili," the song-prayer, has scored a notable success in New York and is still going strong, says Associated Exhibitors. Though it already has had runs in a large number of theatres, and has played second engagements in some, nearly sixty additional houses have contracted for showings in the near future, and other bookings are being made daily, it is stated.

The production offers unusual opportunities for exploitation features, it is said, and many clever ideas have been adapted in the arrangement of special displays and prologues.

The British Embassy Lauds First National

For the second time within a period of a few months a First National attraction has won the attention and praise of the British Embassy at Washington.

Only a short time ago Sir Auckland Geddes personally witnessed and endorsed Jackie Coogan's production of "Oliver Twist." More recently a special showing was arranged for the members of the embassy and a few invited guests for "The Hottentot." Following this showing, which was given before an audience of men versed in horsemanship, Hugh Tennant wrote the following endorsement for the British Ambassador:

"I am asked by the Ambassador to convey to you his warmest thanks for your kindness in entertaining the members of the staff of this Embassy. The Ambassador and all those present were delighted with 'The Hottentot' and all agreed that it was by far the best picture of horse racing that they had ever seen on the screen and, as you know, this Embassy contains some first-class horsemen."

Cruze Finds Girl to Lead in Big Film

James Cruze has found the very girl he wants to play the leading role in his big Paramount all-star production, "Hollywood," which he started at the Lasky Studio, Monday, February 12. The director declines to announce the young woman's name as yet and will not divluge anything concerning her beyond the fact that she is strikingly beautiful and never has appeared in pictures before.

For days Cruze prosecuted his search for the exact type he wanted in the department stores of Los Angeles. The telephone at the studio casting office as well as the one at Mr. Cruze's residence rang almost constantly with applications from girls who hoped to get this great opportunity for fame and fortune. The director made screen tests of a number of the applicants and interviewed hundreds of girls, and there is intense interest throughout the film capital in the announcement of his choice, which is expected in a few days.

Walter Woods has written the scenario from Frank Condon's novelette, "Hollywood, and the Only Girl," and will be the production editor. The story, according to Paramount's announcement, carried with it no propaganda, no expose of the secrets of picture-making. It is not a moving picture tour of Hollywood, but on the other hand is a real, fast-moving story, a human love romance of a girl who wants to get into the movies—and doesn't succeed.

Big Stars Engaged for "The Spoilers"

Four screen stars of international fame have been engaged for Jesse D. Hampton's new screen version of Rex Beach's great Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," which he is making at the Goldwyn studios for distribution by the corporation.

Milton Sills has been engaged to play the part of Glenister. Anna Q. Nilsson will be the Cherry Malotte. Bryant Washburn, a star in his own right, is cast for Attorney Wheaton, and Wallace MacDonald, one of the most popular of the younger film stars, will have the role of the Bronco Kid.

Other big names will be added to this array of talent, making it a cast comparable to the very best that has ever appeared in a Goldwyn picture—and Goldwyn casts are noted the world over for their excellence.

Lambert Hillyer is ready to begin photography as soon as the "Western Street," the biggest ever constructed for a photoplay, now under way on the Goldwyn lot, is completed.

Palmer Corp. Enters Production Field

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation has entered the producing field. Camera work has begun upon "Out of the Night," the first of the series of big photodramatic features to be produced. "Out of the Night" was written by Mrs. Ethel Styles Middleton, of Pittsburgh, who trained herself in screen technique through the Palmer educational department. Joseph De Grasse has been entrusted with the direction. Lloyd Hughes has the leading role. Lucille Ricksen plays opposite him. George Hackathorne, Myrtle Stedman, Philo McCullough, Claire McDowell, Frankie Darrel and Muriel MacCormick make up the supporting cast.

"Our avowed policy of strict honesty and truth-telling begins with this announcement," said President Roy L. Manker. "We say, therefore, that we do not guarantee to turn out a 'world beater' in our first production. We have a splendid story that is the selection from a great process of elimination which brought forth from so-called 'outside' writers nearly a hundred photoplays so good, so original, and so effective from the motion picture standpoint that the final choice was a matter of extreme difficulty. Upon the foundation of this masterful story we shall build a production that has all the other advantages we can obtain for it in the entire industry.

"Our policy is nothing short of a declaration of independence that may be interpreted as predicating the beginning of a new era in motion picture making. We hope to prove that the talented, trained 'outside' author is capable of supplying a fresh, virile, inspiring screen literature, a literature peculiar to the motion picture. Moreover, we are creating the precedent of paying these hitherto unrecognized authors a royalty upon the profits of the pictures; one thousand dollars in advance and 5 per cent. for five years. Payment on the royalty basis insures a just and adequate compensation for the fruits of creative genius."

Read what the New York TIMES said about EXTRA! DRIVEN

Driven," the motion picture of Southern mountaineer life which opened an engagement at the Criterion Theatre yesterday afternoon, is one of the most genuine films ever shown on Briadway. Except for its ending, which is, in part, a concession to the popular taste for theatrical hokum, it is convincingly sincere. And, most important of all, it is intensely dramatic. It is dramatic because it is rooted in reality, in a true situation, and grows logically, inevitably, up from its solid ground.

And it is unusually well made. Charles J. Brabin, who broke away from the movie millyard to do something he wanted to do in motion picture creation, went down into the Southern mountains to make this film. He sought a natural setting, he took competent players with him, and he grasped the fundamentals of life in the mountains before he used the camera. Then he made the picture. He brought technical skill and an instinct for cinematographic expressiveness to his task, and the result is a story in living pictures, pictures that you can't get away from and are not likely to forget for a long time. There are scenes in "Driven" that reach the summit of cinematographic power. It is impossible to imagine how the things they say could be more effectively told.

As the mother in the mountains, Emily Fitzroy gives a thrilling performance. Her life is dead. She is broken. Her face is forever set in weariness—except when it blazes in resolution. And when it blazes, the spectator sits up in his seat. He feels the fire. The others in the cast are also good. Elinor Fair, as the girl, is appealing, and Charles Emmett Mack, though not altogether a happy selection for his rôle, still gives it the essential character it demands. He weakens it chiefly in the close-ups, of which might be fewer. Burr McIntosh, as the father and George Bancroft as Lem are true to their type and make themselves plain. Altogether, the acting is excellent.

List First of Big Leah Baird Films

When the first of three big 1923 specials featuring Leah Baird is released by Associated Exhibitors, March 18, it will bear the name, "Is Divorce a Failure?" This picture, adapted from a well known play by Dorian Neve, bore the working title, "When Civilization Failed," during the process of production, but Miss Baird has decided upon the new name as expressing more definitely the question which is propounded in the unfoldment of the story.

"I am fully convinced from conversations with many prominent screen players that there is a growing tendency toward more serious thought, especially among our women stars," says Miss Baird. "Moreover, I have always been in sympathy with the high purposes of the Federation of Women's Clubs, and now that it is launching a nation-wide campaign for revising the country's marriage and divorce laws, I believe this new title will be accepted as most timely."

The plot concerns a woman who obtains a divorce decree in Reno, but regrets her action when the former husband and the man who has fascinated her are shown to her in vivid contrast. The comparative test is arranged by a lawyer who is friendly to both the ex-wife and the ex-husband. He contrives for all three persons to be passengers on the same steamship in a cruise in Southern waters, though in the beginning only the "third party" knows of the presence of the others.

Preparing for Next Big DeMille Picture

Clare Beranger, author and scenarist of the William DeMille productions for Paramount, is at present on her semi-annual trip to Los Angeles from New York and is in conference with Mr. DeMille. She brought her screen adaptation of "Only 38," by A. E. Thomas, suggested by the story by Walter Prichard Eaton, which will be Mr. DeMille's next production.

While in conference with Mr. DeMille, Miss Beranger is making plans for the story to follow "Only 38." Mr. DeMille and Miss Beranger are also editing and cutting "Grfumpy," the recently completed production, adapted from the stage play of Horace Hodges and T. W. Percyval. The cast of the coming DeMille production will be announced later.

To Start New Play

Agnes Ayres arrived in New York this week from the Coast to take a leading role with Antonio Moreno in "The Exciters," a Paramount picture which will be started next week at the company's Long Island studio under the direction of Richard Ordynski. John Colton, author of "Rain," is adapting the stage play to the screen.

Many Contracts for "Bill of Divorcement"

Jensen & von Herberg closed a contract this week with Associated Exhibitors for a week's run of the Associated feature, Constance Binney in "A Bill of Divorcement," in their big Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore. Almost simultaneously, Skouras Bros. booked this attraction for their circuit of St. Louis theatres including the New Grand Central, Pageant, the Grand Florissant, the Shenandoah, the Lindell, the Manchester, the Lafayette, the Gravois, the Novelty and the Maffitt.

Another recent contract was closed by the Stanley Amusement Company, calling for a week's engagement in one of its big Market street houses in Philadelphia. Among many other bookings for runs of a week each are those of Jake Laurie's Modern and Beacon Theatres, Boston; Keith's, Portland, Me.; Ed Reed's Strand or Modern, Providence, R. I.; J. Dittmar's Rialto or his Majestic, Louisville, Ky.; I. Frankel's Palace, Cincinnati; I. Libson's Palace, Indianapolis, and C. E. Rogers's Grumps, Columbus, Ohio.

Among yet other contracts for important runs, according to a statement by Associated Exhibitors, are those of Proctor's Grand Theatres in Albany, Schenectady and Troy, N. Y., and J. M. Griswold's Savoy, Syracuse; I. Libson's Strand, Dayton, Ohio, and the Palace, New Orleans, on the Orpheum circuit.

"Dangerous Age" Picked as Model

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation out in Los Angeles are using John M. Stahl's production, "The Dangerous Age," produced by Louis B. Mayer and released by First National, as a model in screen story construction and have sent out letters to 10,000 photoplay students to see the picture and in towns where it has not been played to urge the exhibitors to show it.

The Palmer people declare that "The Dangerous Age" is an outstanding argument in favor of the original story for screen production and since this organization teaches scenario writing its students are naturally interested in a picture that was not based on a book or a play.

Thomas H. Ince, Rex Ingram, G. Gardner Sullivan, Rob Wagner, J. L. Frothingham, James R. Quirk and Allen Holubar are on the advisory council of the corporation.

E. Fred Franklin, of the photoplay organization, has sent the following letter to Mr. Stahl who selected and directed "The Dangerous Age":

"From our view point as unqualified champions of the original story for screen production, your picture 'The Dangerous Age' is a splendid piece of photodramtic art.

"So inspired are we by the exceptionally fine handling of an original story we are sending in a letter to approximately 10,000 students of the screen, many of whom are Palmer students our urgent request that they see the picture and request its showing where it has not already been booked."

Tie-up Results in Big "Nanook" Run

How the run of "Nanook of the North," at the Strand Theatre, Kansas, made a new and lively chapter in the history of that enterprising city, is told in public school records sent to Fathe. Under an arrangement between the Strand management and the High School Faculty and Grade Teachers' Clubs, practically every public school teacher in Emporia served as an advance ticket-seller for the "Nanook" engagement. Result: overflowing audiences. The proposition, posted on all school bulletin boards, read:

"The High School Faculty Club and the Grade Teachers' Club are needing money to fianance various projects. We have a very favorable contract with the Strand, provided we will get back of the canvass for the sale of tickets, and go after it. If we work, Mr. McClure will guarantee us a minimum of $100 for our share. He thinks it ought to be more. Our share to be divided between the two clubs in proportion to the amount of money turned in for the sale of tickets."

Following is from the school teachers' official endorsement of "Nanook": "Unlike anything you ever saw, taken in a country where no motion picture camera ever went before, a land where zero is warm most of the year, far to the north where the screech of locomotive is never heard, but where it is just one thrill after another. A human, gripping picture, replete with dramatic situations and surprises; a masterly presentation of life, love, and the unending struggle in the icy wastes of the actual Arctic."

"Supreme Passion" Listed for Release

Tom Moore's most celebrated poem, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," is the basis of the story told in "The Supreme Passion," a highly romantic drama which Playgoers Pictures has set for release February 25. The authors of this six-part feature are the well-known playwrights, Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey. The former has written such powerful dramas as "The Eternal Magdalen," "The House Without Children," and "Decameron Nights," while Mr. Dazey is the author of "In Old Kentucky" and many other stage and screen successes.

Among the featured players in "The Supreme Passion" is Alice Dixon, seen recently in support of Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends," and Thomas Meighan in "Back Home and Broke," and, before entering motion pictures, known all over the world as the Coco Cola Girl. The leading male role is played by Robert Adams, who introduced Booth Tarkington's delightful "Clarence" to theatre audiences in the West.

The story is of a girl who wants to make sure that the man she marries will love her, even after her beauty is faded and gone. The method she employs to determine whether she is loved for her physical or her spiritual beauty is clever and courageous.

Goldwyn to Handle Mills Picture

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has just closed a deal with Frank B. Mills whereby he will produce for Goldwyn distribution a romantic photoplay called "What Shall It Profit?" It is an original story by George D. Baker.

The story tells of a prince of a mythical European kingdom who falls in love with an American girl in Paris, to which city he has fled when his father wanted to arrange a marriage with the princess of a neighboring kingdom. The prince is forced to return when war is declared and join his regiment. The king wins his war but loses his son, who is killed in action.

It will be seen that the story is of the romantic type of "The Prisoner of Zenda" and other tales of happenings in mythical countries which have come back into popular favor.

Dustin Farnum in "The Buster"

In "The Buster," a Fox picture starring Dustin Farnum, which will be released February 18, the author, William Patterson White, has taken one of the modern athletic young women of Eastern society and set her down in the rough-and-ready surroundings of the untrammeled West. Her readiness to show the foreman of the ranch where she is staying that she is able to take care of herself on all occasions fills the picture with breezy action. Doris Pawn plays the girl and Dustin Farnum is the ranch foreman.

Press Critics Laud New Metro Picture

"All the Brothers Were Valiant" was acclaimed with the highest praise by Washington's motion picture critics, says Metro. They were unanimous, it is stated, in their approval of this thrilling sea tale adapted from the story by Ben Ames Williams. The story, the acting and the direction of this production came in for unstinted commendation.

"The Washington Post" says: "It may be on account of the appropriate title, or the name of Lon Chaney on the billboard; or because of apt direction, or the humanness of the characters; or possibly because the world still loves romance and melodrama of the sea; or it may probably be an accumulation of all these causes that resulted in the Palace throwing open doors to capacity audiences last night and hanging out the 'S. R. O.' sign when the premiere of 'All the Brothers Were Valiant' opened and promised a week's full house run."

The reviewer for "The Washington Daily News" writes: "Of all the * * * salt water dramas we have visioned in the past couple of years, the best is 'All the Brothers Were Valiant.'" "The Washington Times" says: "A Metro stamp is upon the film, and it lives up to usual Metro standards."

This photoplay is taken from the novel of the same name by Ben Ames Williams. The scenario was written by Julian Josephson. Robert Kurrle photographed the picture.

Tourneur Finishes Work on Big Film

Maurice Tourneur has finished "shooting" the scenes for his new First National release, "The Isle of Lost Ships," adapted from Captain Marriott's celebrated novel of stirring sea life. All kinds of experts are being called in from the outside world these days to assist in the details of picture making.

During the filming of "The Isle of Lost Ships" Tourneur had the help of an admiral of the U. S. Navy and a former captain of submarines. The sea scenes were made off the Santa Barbara coast, to which old hulks of vessels were hauled from as far away as San Francisco, where Tourneur's scouts discovered an old ship graveyard. Thirty odd ships in all were salvaged for filming purposes.

"Within the Law" to Be Big Picture

Reports from the coast indicated that Joseph M. Schenck intends to make "Within the Law" the most elaborately staged picture in which Norma Talmadge has ever starred. He has had a special art director design the sets he has had a captain of police assist Frank Lloyd in the details of the acting of the crook characters, he has engaged Willard Mack to keep production generally.

The cast in support of Miss Talmadge contains names that are known to all picture lovers. Among them are Jack Mulhall, Lew Cody, Eileen Percy, Joseph Kilgour, and Helen Ferguson.

"Within the Law" will contain, it is said, one of the most brilliant dinner-dances ever screened. The event takes place at a yacht club and for this was built a duplicate of one of the world famous New York yacht club dancing halls, containing accurate reproductions of dozens of trophies.

In these Director Lloyd will have 125 actors and actresses. All of the gowns of the women over sixty were especially made by Mr. Schenck's costuming department after London, Paris and New York models. The gown Miss Talmadge wears in these scenes is of jade green and was one of the many purchased by the star on her recent trip to Paris. Mr. Schenck watched every detail of the picture. He even had special cigarettes made for Jack Mulhall and on these were engraved Mulhall's screen name, Dick Giler.

The background for another big scene, the court room, was built from photographs and drawings of one of the courts of General Sessions in New York. Artists worked for days, it is reported, making exact duplicates of the painting of Justice and other famous paintings that hang in the court.

"Within the Law" will probably be released by First National some time in April or May.

Title Changes

C. C. Burr's latest All-Star comedy "The Nuisance," released through Hodkinson has been changed to "The Busybody." This was done to prevent confusing it with a comedy that was produced sometime ago under the same title.

U. Ono has bought from Associated First National twelve Mack Sennett comedies for distribution in Japan. The comedies are "Bright Eyes," "Gymnasium Jim," "Love and Doughnuts," "Be Reasonable," "By Heck," "Duck Hunters," "On Patrol," "Step Forward," "Ma and Pa," "Homemade Movies," "Bow Wow," and "When Summer Comes."

A. Holubar Finishes "Slander the Woman"

Allen Holubar has completed "Slander the Woman," which is set for April release by First National. Dorothy Phillips is the star of the pictures. The picture was made at the United Studios in Hollywood and in the Canadian Northwest. Supporting Miss Phillips are Lewis Dayton, George Siegman, obert Anderson, Mayme Kelso, Yuez Seabury and W. A. Orlamond. Byron Haskins did the camera work.

"Red Darkness" Is Gilbert's Next

Following "Truxton King," the romantic story of George Barr McCutcheon, which was released by Fox Film Corporation on February 18, John Gilbert will be seen in "Red Darkness," a story by George I. Wortz.

In the new Fox production Gilbert interestingly portrays the character of a "Raffles" disguised in the clothes of a wandering holy man.

"Red Darkness" was directed by Jerome Storm from a scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland. The supporting cast includes Billie Dove, D. R. Hatswell, George K. Arthur, Wilton Taylor, Ruth Boyd and Luras C. Luke.

Laura La Plante in Leading Roles

Universal announces the elevation of Laura La Plante to leading roles in Universal features. Her first leading woman work in Universal Attractions will be in support of Hoot Gibson in "Dead Game," a story written by Edward Sedgwick, who will also direct it.

Newspaper Praises Film in Editorial

The Denver Times has commented editorially and praisefully upon Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood."

Mr. Fairbanks' latest United Artists' release was being shown at the Colorado Theatre, later being transferred to the American. Not only did this photoplay win extensive editorial comment in the Times, but it also drew flattering paragraphs from "Observer," who writes a column on the first page of the Denver Express under the title, "Getting Down to Brass Tacks."

"As an historical narrative, recreating the scenes and atmosphere of the Middle Ages and presenting to modern eyes a vivid and fascinating picture of the age of chivalry, 'Robin Hood' quite justifies, in our opinion, all the glowing comments made upon it by the dramatic critics of the East," wrote George Sanford Holmes in the Denver Times.

"What this world needs, among a lot of other things, is wholesome romance," said "Observer," in the Denver Express. "Then we would get away from the hollow flapperism seeking excitement in the artificial glare of sensationalism. I think I've found what I've been looking for in Douglas Fairbanks' 'Robin Hood.'"

Two Leading Women in "Bright Shawl"

Richard Barthelmess will have not one but two leading women in his picturization of Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, "The Bright Shawl" which he is now making under the direction of John Robertson for Associated First National release.

Mary Astor has been added to the cast and will find herself very much of a leading woman in the end for the picture closes on her in Barthelmess's arms while Dorothy Gish who has been vamping her way gaily through the earlier scenes will have "died."

Miss Gish admits it is the first time she has ever "died" in a picture. It is also her initial appearance as a "vamp."

Inspiration Pictures under whose guidance Barthelmess is starring has given "The Bright Shawl" an elaborate production scenically. Many of the big scenes were taken in Cuba where Hergesheimer planted his story.

It is gay with the life and color and love and intrigue of old Spain and will show Barthelmess in a much more romantic role than was the case in his recent photoplays.

Barthelmess has had a big success since becoming a star. His pictures "Tol'able David," "Sonny," "The Bond Boy," "Fury," have won the praise of exhibitors generally.

"The Bright Shawl" will be released by First National about April.

Negri's "Mad Love" Arouses Enthusiasm

Goldwyn's Pola Negri picture, "Mad Love," which will soon be released, recently had a studio showing at Culver City, just after Katharine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell had completed the editing and titling of the film. Many of the famous men and women of the industry were present and expressed unbounded admiration for the art of the Polish star as exhibited in this great photoplay.

Many letters and telegrams were received by Abraham Lehr, vice president in charge of production at the studios, and by F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, in New York, expressing the sender's enthusiasm for "Mad Love" and its star.

Rupert Hughes, who knows a great deal about motion pictures, both as author and director, and who has made some of the best of recent American pictures, wired the home office as follows:

"The always wonderful Pola Negri is wonderful once more. She loves, hates, laughs, grieves, lives with a peculiar intensity. She burns through iron like an acetylene flame white hot. Too many of our actresses rather dream their roles than set them on fire. Pola Negri's business in life and art is not repression but expression."

Frank Mayo, one of the film's best known stars, telegraphed:

"Miss Negri gives the very best performance of her career."

Dagmar Godowsky, well-known dancer and picture player, wired: "Miss Negri's acting is superb. It is a real contribution to the screen."

And that is the tenor of the many messages which Goldwyn has received concerning this picture. Exhibitor interest is most keen in it; they know through the mysterious channels through which such information is disseminated that "Mad Love" is a great picture superbly acted by Miss Negri and they are booking it heavily.

Famous Artist to Color Prints

Gustav Brock, famous Danish miniature artist whose recent exhibition at the Ehrich Galleries in New York attracted wide attention, has been engaged by Cosmopolitan Productions to do the hand coloring on the prints of Marion Davies' latest picture, "Adam and Eva."

Hunter, of Canadian Releasing Corporation, returned to Toronto last week after completing arrangements in New York for the tour of the opera company which will present "The Bohemian Girl" in conjunction with the Harley Knoles picture of the same name distributed by American Releasing Corporation.

Beginning April 16 at the Royal Alexandria Theatre, Toronto, the company will cover all of Canada, the tour lasting all summer.

New Paramount Film

Waldemar Young has begun the adaptation of "Salomy Jane," from Paul Armstrong's play based on Bret Harte's story, which will be George Melford's next production for Paramount following "You Can't Fool Your Wife," now in production at the company's Long Island studio. "Salomy Jane" will be produced at the Lasky studio on the Coast.

Mulhall Signed

Joseph M. Schenck has signed Jack Mulhall as leading man for the pictures made by Norma Talmadge during the coming year. Mulhall is at present leading man in Miss Talmadge's picture, "Within the Law," being made on the coast for First National release by Director Frank Lloyd. Miss Talmadge's next picture will be "Ashes of Vengeance."

Committee Praises Associated Films

Associated Exhibitors bats 1.000 per cent. in the current number of the Photoplay Guide, issued by the National Committee for Better Films which contains a list of the picutres viewed by the Committee in January and its opinions of them. The National Committee for Better Films is affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

Eighty-four pictures were reviewed during the month, of which only twelve are marked with a start, which, the Photoplay Guide explains, "denotes a particularly good picture." But two Associated Exhibitors features were seen by the reviewers and each of these won the committee's designation, "particularly good."

These two are "Alice Adams," Florence Vidor's picturization of Booth Tarkington's prize-winning novel, and "Is Divorce a Failure?" the first of the big 1923 specials featuring Leah Baird. "Is Divorce a Failure?" is set for release March 18 and "Alice Adams" April 8.

Fox Film Theme of Sermon

The Rev. Fred P. Corson, pastor of the Community Church in Jackson Heights, New York City, recently selected the title of the William Fox special, "The Town That Forgot God," as the topic for his Sunday night discussion.

This was one of four addresses on subjects which seemed to be of particular interest to the members of this church.

In announcing this lecture the following message was used on small white cards which were distributed at the church the previous Sunday:

"These four addresses on Civic Righteousness, International Understanding, Personal Endeavor, and Individual Outlook turn the light of the Christian religion upon problems which are daily agecting the individual."

Booked for Many New York Houses

"Poor Men's Wives," Gasnier's production for Preferred Pictures released by Al Lichtman, which played recently to large crowds for two weeks at the Criterion is scheduled to play at many New York theatres in the not far distant future.

The feature will next be shown on the Keith, Moss and Proctor circuits through Greater New York. Other houses who have contracted for this all star attraction which is a companion piece to the first Al Lichtman release, "Rich Men's Wives," are The Morningside, the Ideal, the Tivoli, the Arena, the Village, the 72nd Street, the Regent, the Ritz, the Eagle, the Clinton, the New Strand, the Palace, the Royal, the Majestic, the Stanley, the 79th Street, the City Hall, the Washington and the Savoy.

Exclusive Views of Constantinople

What are said to be first and exclusive motion picture mid-air views of the troubled city of Constantinople are screened in the current issue of Pathe News No. 14. They are described as being attractively comprehensive while rich in detail. The pictures were taken from a French Army airplane by Pathe News Staff Cameraman Ercole, whose films of scenes in the Graeco-Turkish war are celebrated for their importance and graphic character.

The Pathe News film shows the camera's approach to the historic capital of the old Ottoman Empire from the Bosphorus and the Golden Horn. The panorama then presents clear and detailed views in the following order: Pera, the European section of the city, where most of the foreign ministers and ambassadors have their residences. Then comes the famous Galata Bridge, crossing to Stamboul, the ancient Asiatic section, scene of centuries of alternate Greek and Turkish rule.

"Does It Pay?" Heads Fox List

"Does It Pay?", a drama of domestic relations of today, with Hope Hampton in the leading role, which will be exhibited as a super-special program, heads the March release program of Fox Film Corporation. Included on this same schedule are two feature pictures starring Tom Mix and William Russell, an Al St. John two-reel comedy and two Sunshine Comedies.

"Does It Pay?", which will be released March 4, was directed by Charles Horan from a story by Beatrice Dovskie. This production convincingly and dramatically answers the question asked by the title. It deals with a vital problem of modern life that often finds it way to the front pages of the sensational newspapers.

Robert T. Haines plays the erring millionaire, and others in the cast include Florence Short, Walter Petri, Peggy Shaw, Charles Wellesley, Mary Thurman, Claude Brooke, Pierre Gendron, Roland Bottomley, Marie Shotwell and Bunny Grauer.

"Three Jumps Ahead" is the title of the new Tom Mix feature, which was written and directed by Jack Ford. The Western star exceeds his previous versatile stunts in this picture, which is replete with hazardous scenes. Included in the action of this story is a leap by Mix and his horse, "Tony," over a canyon twenty feet wide and ninety feet deep. Alma Bennett will be seen in this picture as the new leading lady for Tom Mix. The supporting cast includes Edward Piel, Joe Girard, Virginia True Boardman, Margaret Joslin, Frank Forde, Harry Todd, Lon Poff and Buster Gardner.

"Good-By, Girls," is the title of a fast moving adventure story starring William Russell, which is scheduled for release March 11. Jerome Storm directed the production from the story by George Foxall and a scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland.

The others in the cast include Carmel Myers, Tom Wilson, Fay Holderness and Bob Klein.

Al St. John will be seen in a likeable comedy, "The Salesman," which will be released March 11. Friendly Al gets into all sorts of trouble trying to wait on customers and, at the same time, prevent his rival from devoting too much time to his girl.

The Sunshine Comedies are "The Fourflusher," which will be released March 4, and "Clothes and Oil," which will be released on March 18.

"Clouded Name" Latest Playgoers Film

A young actress, who is regarded as one of the prettiest girls on the screen and who many persons believe is in the direct line for promotion to stardom, plays the leading woman's role in "A Clouded Name," Playgoers' current release. She is Norma Shearer, who, with Gladden James and little Yvonne Logan, is featured in this five part offering.

Miss Shearer will be remembered as Eugene O'Brien's leading lady in "Channing of the Northwest," and as a featured player in the Iroquois production, "The Devil's Partner." She plays prominent roles also in Ernest Shipman's "Blue Water" and Arrow's "Man and Wife," which are yet to be released. Besides her beauty and her talent, as acclaimed by reviewers of all the pictures in which she has been seen, Miss Shearer is of that type of innately refined, essentially feminine young woman whose personal appeal is universal.

Take "White Rose" Scenes in South

D. W. Griffith and his company of players making "The White Rose," the forthcoming Griffith photoplay, were guests of the city of New Orleans at the annual Mardi Gras festivities there last week. While taking scenes at New Iberia, La., Mr. Griffith and his party were invited up to New Orleans for the Mardi Gras.

While in Louisiana "The White Rose" company will take scenes in fourteen small towns. The story involves the lives of several young people in a small town in the South, and is founded on one of the most romantic stories told of the picturesque life there in the days of the plantations' social glory.

More Players Added to "Spoilers" Cast

Jesse D. Hampton, who is producing a new version of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," at the Goldwyn studios for distribution by that firm, is adding more great actors to his cast.

Mong as Stuyre, Alec B. Francis, Louise Fazenda and Kate Price.

Those previously announced were Milton Sills as Glenister, Anna Q. Nilsson as Cherry Malotte, Bryant Washburn as Attorney Wheaton and Wallace MacDonald as the "Bronco Kid."

"Down to the Sea" Packs N. Y. Cameo

Meeting with every expectation held by officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the Elmer Clifton production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," made its bow to the New York public last Sunday and smashed all box office and attendance records at the Cameo Theatre, crowding it for five complete performances. It was a wonderful tribute paid to the enthusiasm and confidence shown by everyone connected with this production.

According to Manager DeRosa of the Cameo Theatre, waiting lines of motion picture fans extending from Broadway to the box office, braved the extreme cold and waited patiently for an opportunity to see this sensational romance of old whaling days. This line continued from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock at night. The crowds found that all that had been said in praise of this production was true. Many enthusiastic comments were heard in the lobby after each show, according to the management. All of the leading newspaper critics of New York were lavish in their praise of "Down to the Sea in Ships."

As an adveritsing campaign preceding the showing of this production at the Cameo Theatre, special teaser ads were run in all of the New York papers. On the day of the opening a mammoth papier mache whale was perched on top of the Marquee. A ripple machine running along the side of the whale gave the appearance of flowing water. At the same time the Knickerbocker Drug Store, at the corner of 42nd Street and Broadway, carried a window display showing relics gathered during the hunt for the whale, which plays an important role in the production. This display had attracted huge crowds for the past week.

The lobby of the theatre was decorated with harpoons, nets, rope coils, an dbeautiful oil paintings hung in the interior lobby. The program consisted of an overture followed by the Pathe Review and "Fun From the Press" produced by the Literary Digest. An attractive prologue introduced the feature attraction. This consisted of novel lighting effects flashed upon a back drop. The faint outline of a vessel, such as used in the production, was shown with port and starboard lights. It was a night scene, and, as the singer sang from off stage, the lights gradually came on giving the stage an appearance of early morning. The effect was very noticeable and caused considerable comment.

A monstrous size whale made out of cardboard and mounted upon a truck with large billing painted on each side was drawn through the busy thoroughfares announcing the appearance of this super-feature at the Cameo Theatre.

"The Christian" Held for Second Week

Because of the popularity of Goldwyn's Hall Caine picture, "The Christian," with the clientele of the Capitol Theatre, New York, as proved by the big attendance during the first four days of the week, Manager S. L. Rothafel decided on Wednesday afternoon of the first week's showing to retain the film as the feature for a second week. Its drawing power continues unabated as the second week's showing nears its close. Only four other pictures in the history of the Capitol Theatre have been held for a second week's showing.

A photoplay must have a great popular appeal when, with a seating capacity of 30,000 a day, giving six showings a day, a theatre fails to exhaust its patronage in a week's time. The big business done by this Maurice Tourneur production of "The Christian" at the Capitol is being emulated in the other first run theatres of the country, according to a statement emanating from Goldwyn.

"The Christian" began a showing of indefinite length at the Park Theatre, Boston, this week and opened to capacity audiences.

The film has been booked for a week at the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, commencing Feb. 25; for a week at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, starting March 5; is now showing at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta; for a week at the Capitol, Cincinnati, beginning February 25 and then for a week at the Strand beginning March 4; a week at the New Garrick, Minneapolis, and a week at the Garrick, St. Paul, both beginning Feb. 24; a week at the Lyceum Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., beginning Feb. 25; a week at the Palace, Wichita, Kan., starting March 26; for a week at the Parthenon, Toledo, O., beginning last Sunday; a week at the Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Ore., beginning March 3. It is at the Delmonte, St. Louis, this week.

New Title Selected

"Good-By, Girls," is the expressive title finally selected for the latest production starring William Russell, which the Fox Film Corporation will release early in March. This feature was adapted from a story by George Foxall and directed by Jerome Storm.

The supporting cast includes such well known screen players as Carmel Myers, Tom Wilson, Fay Holderness and Bob Klein.

"Robin Hood" Liked by Washington Elite

Douglas Fairbanks' photoplay, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," a United Artists release, which opened recently in Washington, D. C., at the Columbia theatre, is exerting its magnetic influence upon the official life of the national capitol, according to word just recevied by the star-producer from Frances Parkinson Keyes, noted magazine writer, and the wife of Senator Keyes, of New Hampshire.

It is quite likely, according to Mrs. Keyes, that most everybody of official consequence in big political circles will try to learn something of diplomacy and statesmanship from the dashing exponent of taking from the rich to give to the poor, as depicted by Mr. Fairbanks. Among the first of the nation's official family to attend a showing of the picture was Mrs. Coolidge, wife of the Vice President, who was a guest at a theatre party given by Mrs. Keyes. To Mr. Fairbanks Mrs. Keyes later wrote in part as follows:

"I cannot begin to tell you how much we enjoyed the performance, I am sure that if I were a small boy my idea of Heaven would be a performance of 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood,' and judging from the spirit of the audience I gathered this was the opinion of a good many."

Among others of note who have seen this Fairbanks feature are Mme. de Riano, wife of the Spanish Ambassador; Mme. Panaretoff, wife of the Bulgarian Minister; Mrs. France, wife of the Senator from Maryland; Mrs. Stanfield, wife of the Senator for Oregon; Miss Alice Page, daughter of the Senator from Vermont.

"Just Like a Woman" Listed by Hodkinson

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that the Grace Haskins production "Just Like a Woman" will be released March 15. This productino has been produced by Miss Grace Haskins, the youngest female producer in the field, and those who have seen an advance showing say that it provides a strong box office attraction for exhibitors looking for something different in the way of film entertainment.

The story of "Just Like a Woman" deals with a young girl, daughter of an actress, who is greatly looked down upon by two old maid Aunts, but who poses as a prim schoolteacher and forces her Aunts to go to the extreme in demonstrating their puritanical beliefs much to their discomfort. She makes a wager to win a young lawyer with whom she is in love. How she does this makes the story unusual in its appeal and decidedly interesting.

The production was made on the Coast and many novelties in the way of an exciting automobile race, some laughable comedy in and about a private school for girls, some real thrills and fight scenes in a small town on the Mexican border, and the two distinct character types portrayed by the leading feminine role, all combine to make this an unusual attraction.

The cast is composed of Marguerite De La Motte who plays the part of the girl who puts her aunts through the paces, Ralph Graves who plays the role of the ambitious lawyer and George Fawcett who enacts the picturesque character of the old Uncle.

Showing Gratifies Hodkinson Officials

Many contracts are being received by the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for exhibition of their products throughout the United States. According to the reports just received Jake Louri of the Modern and Beacon Theatres, Boston, Mass., has signed for "The Kingdom Within."

The Whitehurst interests in Baltimore, Md., have signed first run for "Second Fiddle," "The Kingdom Within" and "Bulldog Drummond," while the Stanley Booking Company of Philadelphia, Pa., has signed a contract to play "Second Fiddle."

The reports prove that Hodkinson products are meeting with popular favor by exhibitors, and all the Hodkinson officials feel gratified at the showing being made.

"The Headless Horseman" or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," the C. S. Clancy production starring Will Rogers as Ichabod Crane, will play first run at the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., and also first run at the Olympic Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. "While Paris Sleeps" is also scheduled for a first run presentation at the Olympic Theatre, in Buffalo.

Starts Three Big Pictures

Last week proved to be one of the busiest that the West Coast Paramount studio had experienced in some time, when three of the biggest pictures the company has ever made were started.

George Fitzmaurice's production of "The Cheat," with Pola Negri starred, Jack Holt featured and Charles de Roche in support, was started Monday. This famous picture, which was originally produced by Cecil B. DeMille some years ago, is by Hector Turnbull, the new adaptation being by Ouida Bergere.

Sam Wood started his Paramount production of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," starring Gloria Swanson, on Monday also. This picture was adapted by Sada Cowan from Charlton Andrews' adaptation of Alfred Savoir's play. Julia Crawford Ivers is production editor.

"Hollywood," James Cruze's production for Paramount, was the third picture to start during the week. The story is an original by Frank Condon, adapted by Thomas J. Geraghty, with Walter Woods as production editor. It tells of the adventures of a girl who comes from the Middle West to Hollywood with the hope of getting into pictures.

"Wife in Name Only" Has Big Players

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., formally announces the signing of Mary Thurman, Edmund Lowe, Arthur Hausman, Florence Dixon, William H. Tooker, Edna May Spooner and Ora Jones to enact some of the principal roles in its filming of "Wife in Name Only" which was started last week under the direction of George Terwilliger at the Pyramid Studio in Astoria, L. I.

The producers state that this representative cast, and other artists who will be added as the filming progresses, was decided on with the approval of many theatre and exchange managers in various territories, who were consulted; and that their picturization of Adeline Leitzbach's dramatization of Bertha M. Clay's famous novel, "Wife in Name Only" will be modernized and adequatley produced with exquisite settings by Ben Carre.

"Wife in Name Only" will be the sixth of the Pyramid Specials to be released through the exchanges of American Releasing Corporation, the others being, "My Old Kentucky Home," "His Wife's Husband," "Queen of the Moulin Rouge," "When the Desert Calls," and "What Fools Men Are," which was also directed by Mr. Terwilliger.

February 25 Date of "Java Head" Release

Paramount's feature scheduled for release February 25 is George Melford's production, "Java Head," which was adapted by Waldemar Young from the novel by Joseph Hergesheimer.

Leatrice Joy, Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, Raymond Hatton and Albert Roscoe are the featured players. The story is laid in Salem, Mass., in the late forties. The theme is essentially one of the eternal triangle. In this case the three corners are a young Chinese princess, a New England girl and a dashing sea captain engaged in trade with the Orient. To save the life of the princess the young mariner makes her his wife and brings her back to Salem, there to confront his curious family and neighbors and the girl he has promised to make his wife on his return. Only through bitter tragedy is the course of true love allowed to have its way.

The Melford production played successive weeks at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York and was accorded unreserved praise by the newspaper critics. The Tribune said: "Every minute of it was a delight to us."

The Herald said: "'Java Head,' as a whole, is a splendid picture."

"Entertaining and interesting," said the Globe, and the Sun: "George Melford has caught the spirit of the original story and of the period absolutely, and has made it one of the judicious film triumphs of the year."

Big Crowds Flock to Metro Film

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," which opened recently at Balaban and Katz's Chicago Theatre, played to one of the biggest Mondays in the history of the house, according to a telegram received at the Metro offices. The photoplay drew the largest crowds ever lined up for an opening at the Chicago Theatre, it is stated, and was received by motion picture critics with the highest praise.

Make Final Scenes

Frank Lloyd has taken the entire cast of "Within the Law" to San Francisco to "shoot" the final scenes of that picture in which Miss Norma Talmadge is the star. "Within the Law" will be released by First National.

Two Big Cities Laud Priscilla Dean Film

Premiere showings in New York and Chicago have established "The Flame of Life," Priscilla Dean's latest Universal-Jewel production, as one of the strongest pictures ever made by that popular star, Universal says. Release of this feature, which is a Hobart Henley production, adapted from the popular novel, "That Lass o' Lowrie's," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, was received with great acclaim by both press and public, it is stated.

Certain critics hail it as the best Universal feature presented in a long time, and especially as the best role Miss Dean has ever had for the display of her distinctive screen talents.

The picture had its New York premiere over the Loew Circuit, and its Chicago premiere in the Randolph Theatre. Commencing with the State and the New York theatres on Broadway, the New York run of the Dean Jewel includes more than a score of popular New York houses.

.P. W. Gallico, the motion picture critic of the New York Daily News, had the following to say regarding the premiere of "The Flame of Life" at the State Theatre: "Carl Laemmle, Universal chief, rings the bell a second time on Broadway this week, with 'The Flame of Life' at the State, although the clamor is not quite as pronounced as in the case of 'Driven,' his other offering. Still, it is sufficiently loud to call attention to the fact that of late this company has been offering the public some exceedingly fine photoplays."

Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Daily Tribune, said: "Again Priscilla Dean proves her right to the title of one of the screen's best actresses."

Genevieve Harris, in the Chicago Evening Post, was even more enthusiastic: "Here is the best picture Universal studios have turned out in a long time," she wrote, "and one of the most vivid and entertaining productions we have seen this season."

Hobart Hebley, who directed "The Flame of Life," was the man who made "The Flirt."

"Peg o' My Heart" Praised by Critics

Metro, with its production of "Peg o' My Heart" with Laurette Taylor, is in the position of a victorious political candidate getting additional confirmatory returns from widely scattered districts. East, south, west, north, Metro says, the newspaper reviews report a landslide for "Peg" and Metro. J. Hartley Manners' play, the reviewers agree, is even more delightful as a film offering than as a stage play.

Theodore R. Liuzza, photoplay critic of the New Orleans Item, after seeing the picture at the N. O. Strand, wrote: "The photoplay even excels in charm of characterization Miss Taylor's own inimitable Peg of the footlights."

Duke Adamshick of the Toledo, Ohio, News Bee, says: "With a touch of drama and a bit of comedy, 'Peg o' My Heart'. . . . is a very pleasing show and should keep the Temple Theatre packed this week. . . . The screen version excels the legitimate." Another Toledo newspapers, the Times, records that "Laurette Taylor makes her debut as a screen star with a loud and voluminous bang."

Davis, photoplay reviewer of the Cleveland, Ohio, Press, observes that while dozens of other actresses have attempted the same sort of role that Miss Taylor portrays, "we don't now recall any who has done it better than Laurette Taylor."

The Sunday Tribune of Tampa, Fla., reports of the showing of "Peg o' My Heart" at the Victory Theatre that Miss Taylor's portrayal is a decided contribution to screen artistry."

Engages DuRue

Eugene DeRue who formerly directed Lyons and Moran later a series of Bobbie Dunn comedies, has been selected to direct Jimmy Adams in a series of situation comedies for Century Comedies. Zion Myers will be assistant director. The first will be based on an original story and six weeks spent in production.

F. B. O. Starts First Anniversary Drive Continuing Through March

Film Booking Offices of America, which one year ago this month came under the control of P. A. Powers, announces this week its First Anniversary Drive, which will continue until the end of March. This drive is being carried on under the personal direction of Mr. Powers, F. B. O. managing director, and will bring the year-old producing-distributing corporation in touch with every exhibitor in the country.

According to the plans for this drive as outlined by Mr. Powers, special features will be inaugurated to arouse the enthusiasm of the sales force. One of these features will be the presentation to the exchange making the most sales of a huge silver loving cup, standing three feet high. This cup will remain as the possession of the winning exchange until the ensuing year, when it will pass into the hands of the new leader. It will become the permanent possession of the exchange winning it three times.

No sales force in the history of the industry has shown greater enthusiasm during a drive than the present F. B. O. force, according to Mr. Powers. "Our growth and our present strength," said the F. B. O. managing director, "after only one year's existence, is proof enough of the loyalty and energy of the sales organization which Harry Berman has built up. We found, when we first announced our plans for a First Anniversary Drive, that the spirit of the home office was reflected in each and every exchange; that the enthusiasm shown for our present F. B. O. product here in New York was equalled and excelled by the men in the field. It will be with a very willing hand that I will sign the checks aggregating $7,500 payable to this loyal and capable sales force. They are carrying out in every way the policy of exhibitor service which I announced as the foundation of the Film Booking Offices one year ago, and when I read in the exhibitors' reports in the various trade papers such phrases as 'F. B. O. with real service and businesslike methods is rapidly coming to the front' and 'Service and price right on all F. B. O. productions,' I feel that while we are only a yearling we are traveling at lightning speed towards success. And for this success our efficient sales force, as well as our high-class box office pictures, must be given credit.

"Our sales force has been instructed in this drive with only one slogan: 'contracts.' It is our object to bring F. B. O. into every theatre in the country; to introduce ourselves and our product and to prove our claim of service to the smallest and largest exhibitors. As a year-old organization we have not had the opportunity of meeting the number of friends that should be ours, but this First Anniversary Drive will widen our circle until it embraces the smallest theatre in the farthest town.

"Fortunately we are able to offer exhibitors during this First Anniversary Drive the finest array of productions which we have ever had in our history. They include such proven box office attractions as "The Third Alarm," "Thelma," "Fighting Blood" and "Canyon of the Fools." Our prospects for the coming months are even finer. 'Can a Woman Love Twice?' our next Ethel Clayton production, will be proved in dollars and cents the best drama Miss Clayton has ever produced. 'Fighting Blood,' our series of two-reel subjects, to be issued every second week, have a following of millions because of their publication in Collier's Weekly, and 'Daytime Wives,' a forthcoming special, has a vital theme and a tremendous appeal. These are only a few of the features and short subjects, built upon the idea of 'entertainment plus exploitation,' which will be issued through F. B. O. within the next few months. Others will be 'The Fourth Musketeer,' another H. C. Witwer story starring Johnnie Walker; 'Westbound 99,' Emory Johnson's big railroad drama; 'Divorce,' a new Jane Noval picture produced by Chester Bennett; 'Crashin' Thru,' Harry Carey's next Western drama, and our regular Plum Center and Carter DeHaven comedies."

Pathe Ads Get Good Display in Topeka

The Grand Theatre in Topeka, Kansas, and local advertisers are shown to have taken very kindly to the original enterprise of the Topeka Daily State Journal in running a display page with the big type heading: "Grand Pathe Contest."

The page is divided into twelve sections each containing a film-enlargement picture from the current issue of Pathe News beneath which is the matter supplied by the advertiser. Right and left at the top of the page are the publishers' announcements, which read: "See America at home the Pathe News way. Twice a week the Pathe reels at the Grand Theatre bring before your eyes the best pictures of the news events just as they happened. It's up to date education."

Orders 200 Prints of 'The Pilgrim'

The demand for Chaplin's new picture, "The Pilgrim," is so widespread that Associated First National has ordered 200 prints of the picture, which goes into the Strand, New York, February 25 for a two weeks' run.

It is expected that the number of prints on this picture will reach 225, which will be a record over even of the number ordered on "The Kid."

First National branch offices report many bookings already and the demand is for early dates, which may bring a First National record for day and date showings.

Of the 200 prints already ordered, 90 of them are for the New York exchange for use in Greater New York.

After the Strand showing, New York and the Bronx will get the picture March 21, many theatres playing simultaneously that week and the following weeks as the number of prints can be allotted. The Brooklyn Strand and a number of other Brooklyn houses will run it, it is said, simultaneously, beginning March 25.

The prints are being shipped out to the branches as fast as First National can get them.

Off to the Coast

Having completed the interior scenes of his latest Paramount picture, "You Can't Fool Your Wife" at the Long Island studio George Melford has left with his company for the west coast where the exteriors will be filmed. Those who went west with Mr. Melford were Leatrice Joy, Mrs. Joy, Nita Naldi, Pauline Garon, Lewis Stone, Mrs. Stone, Julia Swayne Gordon, John Daly Murphy, Margaret Kelly, Waldemar Young, author of the picture, Mrs. Young, Cy Clegg, assistant director, Bert Glennon, cameraman, Charlie Clark, second cameraman, Nan Herron, continuity clerk and Val Dixon, violinist.

Hiers Working Fast

Walter Hiers is making rapid progress under the direction of Joseph Henabery in "Sixty Cents an Hour," his new Paramount star picture, in which Jacqueline Logan plays the featured feminine role. This is a Frank Condon story adapted by Grant Carpenter and Ralph Block is production editor.

Girls Selected for Sam Wood Film

The last of the seven beautiful girls, selected from hundreds of applicants to enact the roles of seven wives in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," Sam Wood's production for Paramount starring Gloria Swanson, has been chosen by the director.

She is Maude Wayne, said to be one of the most beautiful blondes in Hollywood. With the selection of Miss Wayne, Director Wood has completed the choosing of what Paramount says is perhaps the most beautiful cast of girls ever assembled for a single picture. In addition to Miss Wayne he selected these six other girls as follows:

Majel Coleman, winner of a beauty contest in Cincinnati, Ohio; Thais Valdemar, a newcomer to Hollywood from Russia; Arita Gillman, judged Oregon's most beautiful girl; Christiana Montt of Chile; Irene Dalton, formerly model in Chicago, and Helen Huntoon.

Back After Long Absence

John Miltern, who is playing an important role with Thomas Meighan in "The Ne'er-Do-Well" under the direction of Alfred E. Green, is back at work in the Paramount Long Island studio for the first time since 1921 when he played a role in "Experience." Since that time Miltern has been in Europe making pictures for Paramount and has appeared in several pictures produced at the Lasky studio on the West Coast.

Begin Work on "Exciters"

Production of Martin Brown's stage play, "The Exciters," which was adapted for the screen by John Colton, author of "Rain," has been begun at the Paramount Long Island studio under the direction of Richard Ordynski.

Agnes Ayres and Antonio Moreno, who recently arrived in the East from the west coast, will be in the picture and other members of the cast are Burr McIntosh, Ida Darling, George Backus, Jane Thomas and Alan Simpson.

George Webber, who just finished photographing "The Snow Bride," a Paramount picture starring Alice Brady, will be the cameraman for this production and Al Smith will be Mr. Ordynski's assistant.

Agnew Signs With Paramount

Robert Agnew, whose work as the juvenile lead in a number of recent productions has stamped him as one of the most promising of the younger screen actors, has just signed a five-year contract to appear in Paramount pictures, it has been announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Mounds, Illinois

Everette Gardner, projectionist, Lyric Theatre, Mounds, Illinois, writes quite interestingly, as follows:

Dear Friend and Brother:—I presume you will wonder who it is takes the privilege of addressing you thus. However, I always take that liberty in addressing a brother projectionist, and while you may not now be actively working at it now, still you are, I think, master of the craft.

I am a new comer, but nevertheless have been a constant reader for many a day. With regards the BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION, it is the best God ever gave a man the right to publish. It is needed, for I know some "operators" (that is precisely what, and all they are) in this vicinity who scarcely have sufficient energy to pound sand in a rat hole.

I have worked in a few cities, but right now am a combined projectionist and manager in this small, isolated town. Was originally a member of local union 281, Paducah, Kentucky.

My present equipment consists of two Powers 6-A projectors, two 60 cycle, single phase, 110 volt primary, Ft. Wayne A. C. to A. C. Compensarcs. Have Gundlach projection lenses, 6.5 E. F. Working distance 4 15-16 inches. Free diameter of same 1 15-16 inches. Use a 7½ collector and a 6½ converging lens, spaced 1-16 inch apart. Distance center of condenser combination to aperture 16 inches. Project a 12 foot picture to a flat white surface, with a black border made of lampblack, linseed oil and turpentine. Screen sets at rear of stage, and it is a good twenty feet from it to first row of seats.

Every Seat Good

Every seat is in full view of screen. There is a balcony, but center of light beam strikes center of screen at right angles. I use sixty amperes and have a switch so that I can throw both Compensarcs in multiple when I have a dark picture. I try to regulate speed of projection to suit action as nearly as I can.

Have my condenser beam inclosed in what I think you would call a workmanlike manner, though I did it myself. Since I use A. C. I have shutter as close to lens as possible, and have a mask which hides the spot on same.

Have found the aerial image. It would locate shutter against front wall of room, which would not be practical. Am getting good results with line-up I have, though I well know it is not perfect.

The projection room walls are painted flat black. Port shutters are arranged as per diagram (?? No diagram attached. Ed.) Have fixed a place to wash in one corner of projection room. Have a cabinet on wall in which I keep my tools in order, as they should be.

Have ordered some colored glass to make lamphouse door windows as per brother Baldassari, of Hamilton, Ontario. He has been kind enough to promise to forward a description of his automatic douser. He is trying to improve same at present.

Motor Driven Rewind

My rewind is motor driven, but not fixed as I want it—yet. Have trimmed fully a quarter of an inch off my revolving shutters. Distance from lens to screen is 86 feet. Crater to collector lens is three inches. Horizontal diameter of crater 1-8 inch. Am using modified jackknife carbon set. Carbons White A. C. Special, five eights, of course.

Don't hesitate to criticise whatever you may find wrong in my line-up, as I am mainly interested in getting things right, and don't mind being told I am wrong, if I am.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave. New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Subject to Improvement

Your condenser combination is subject to improvement. Try two 6½ plano convex lenses, with about 18½ inches from center of condenser combination to aperture. This should improve your results very considerably. As you have it now, if you have set forth matter correctly, you have a 7½ collector and a 6½ converging lens, which is not right. If you use such a combination the shorter focal length lens should always be next the light source—the collector lens is next the light source.

Try out what I have suggested and advise me as to results. I think you will find a decided improvement, both in screen illumination and depth of picture, because as you have things now you are losing a lot of light at the projection lens, which cannot cover nearly all the light beam.

Under your condition you would gain but little by having your revolving shutter at the aerial image, because your aerial image is itself rather large. Your crater-to-lens distance is too great, and you can see, by referring to Figure 36H, page 162, of the Blue Book of Projection, what a serious matter that is. Let me know what results you get from the suggestions I have made.

Wants Mazda

A man, presumably a manager, in Texas, orders a handbook and requests information, as follows:

Will you kindly advise me as to the cheapest and best way for those not overburdened with this world's pelf to change from carbon arc to electric globe?

We have motor driven projector. The voltage is 110. Have a rheostat which cuts it down to 50. We are not able to put in all the high priced stuff. Could there not be a switch like a clock to reduce it to 32 amperes so we could use a 600 watt globe.

This man is in a small town; also it is evident his knowledge of projection light and its peculiarities is not extensive. I shall therefore go to some trouble to give him a rather fundamental explanation of certain things.

In the first place let me impress upon our Texas friend the fact that some of the most expensive things we can get really are very much the cheapest things we can buy. Conversely many cheap things are very, very expensive.

This almost entirely holds true in projection affairs, since we have just one thing and one thing only to sell viz.: the picture upon the screen, and since a 100 per cent. picture can be put on the screen ONLY by high class apparatus, and since people are influenced to go to theatres by the excellence of what they will see there—the manner in which they will be entertained—it follows that anything which lowers the grade of the picture will inevitably react to influence people less strongly to attend the performance.

How Patrons Are Influenced

You will, I am sure, Friend Texas, agree with the proposition that if a certain photoplay is to be shown in a theatre, you are likely to be more apt to decide to go, and possibly to take the wife, sister, mother or best girl, if you know it will appear on the screen as a brilliantly lighted, sharp focus, thing of beauty, in which the actors move naturally, than you will if you pretty well know that it will appear as a dim, shadowy, fuzzy-focus affair in which the actors move unnaturally fast or slow. That is true, is it not? Well, remember that YOUR PATRONS ARE INFLUENCED BY SUCH THINGS JUST AS YOU WOULD BE.

You propose putting in Mazda. You ask me to name a cheap equipment. In reply I say to you that THERE IS NO SUCH ANIMAL.

There are certain Mazda equipments which are advertised to sell very cheap. They are cheap in first cost ONLY. Thereafter they are the very most expensive thing you could well have in your theatre. My advice to you is, if you cannot afford the best, or at least high grade equipment, DON'T GET ANY. That is the very best advice I can possibly give you, too.

Consult Your Manufacturer

The Power's company and the Simplex each put out good Mazda equipment. I would by all means advise you to consult your projector manufacturer in such a matter, since the equipment he has will be well suited to your projector.

As to the voltage matter, you can only successfully use Mazda projection lamps with a suitable voltage regulator. If you try it with an ordinary rheostat you will find it an expensive experiment, because you could not possibly regulate the amperage closely without a proper regulator and an ammeter, and unless you keep the amperage within very close range you will have a merry time buying new and rather expensive lamps.

Just a little overload will either ruin your lamp or else greatly shorten its useful life. Again I advise you most earnestly, get the best in Mazda equipment or else get none

A Suggestion

Charles Oldham, Projectionist, Lily Theatre, Plainfield, Connecticut, uses passionate colored ink on the following:

The new handbook (Blue Book of Projection) far over-tops any previous edition. It is a book to be proud of.

I have experienced some difficulty with my Powers, 1918 model projectors, as follows: The tension shoes do not extend to top of aperture plate tracks. This allows the film to "chatter" against the top of aperture plate and at high projection speed to "creep" past the film gate guide rollers. When this occurs there is apt to be side movement upon the screen.

I have made a roller which attaches to the two screws of the upper sprocket film guard and fits inside the guide rollers. This stops all tendency to chatter and is an improvement.

The Mazda projection instructions in the new handbook are fine. If one follows them closely, good screen results will follow.

If the projector manufacturers would put out a shutter with blade which could be adjusted to fit local conditions it would be a big advancement in projection. The projectionist would then be able to get the best possible condition without fear of trimming his blades too much.

A shutter which one can adjust to get all the light possible is particularly desirable with Mazda projection. By experiment I have found that you can trim the interrupter blades more than the master blade with Mazda projection, because flicker does not show up so quickly with Mazda.

I have two stiff cardboard shutter blades which have been giving good service for three months. Where can I get a book on the optics of projection.

Five Years a Long Time

Optic Projection, price five dollars, may be had from the Comstock Publishing Company, Ithaca, New York. It comes as nearly filling the bill as any book I know of outside of my own handbook. If you get it I would like to know what your opinion of the two is as to their value to the man who desires information concerning the optics of moving picture projection.

As to your criticism with regard to the 1918 Powers projector. Well, brother, I am not so much interested because I hold that no exhibitor should keep a projector in use for five or six years. Six years, or even five of them, is a long, long while in this day of rapid advancement and improvement. I find men who literally exude pride over the fact that they have had a projector in constant use for seven or eight years.

When they spring that on me I cannot help but wonder whether they would still be mowing hay with a scythe if they were farmers, or whether if they were street car magnates they would have adopted up-to-date cars and equipment or would still be pulling antiquated cars with wire cables, as they did twenty or thirty years ago.

Show the Boss

I would recommend that you show to your employer your new handbook, opened at page 329, your finger pointing suggestively at the side heading 'NEW PROJECTORS VS OLD.' I think you will not find the trouble you name in connection with a modern Powers projector. Your suggestion of a remedy is passed along to those who, like yourself, are obliged to work with equipment which has outlived its day.

As to the adjustable shutter—well, I agree with you. It is a needed thing, but entirely as a special, and not as regular equipment. This would enable those who understand it and who would be able to use it intelligently to obtain it at small additional cost. It would amaze you how many men there are in projection rooms who have no more idea of such things as this than the Sultan of Turkey has of the sacredness of the marriage relation.

Congratulations

Irl Gordon, projectionist Empress Theatre, Akron, Ohio, sends order for Bluebook of Projection and says:

Have received many excellent ideas from our department in the M. P. World and desire to tender congratulations for the good work you are doing for the profession.

Some while ago brother Grann and myself made radical changes in the optical systems of our projectors adjusting them in accordance with the lens charts. In so doing we ran against the big problem of getting our rotating shutter out to the point of the aerial image. To do so we were obliged to construct some sort of device to hold the outer bearing so that it would have no vibration. Attached photo shows how we accomplished it.

The supporting brace is bent from a piece of ordinary piece of flat iron ¼ inch thick by 1¼ wide by 19½ inches long. All holes in this brace, or frame were drilled a bit larger than necessary to receive the bolts. This in order that we might shift the brace and thus line up the bearing it carries precisely.

Bearing A was turned out of a block of soft steel two inches long by 1¼ by 1¼ inches. This was done at a machine shop. A hole was bored through for the shutter shaft and two smaller ones for bolts C, the latter being threaded to receive the bolts.

Of course there were two holes in brace, or frame D to correspond, though not threaded. A shim, B, made from fibre was placed between the block and frame, as shown. This was to enable us to cause block A to be perpendicular to the mechanism and keep the shutter shaft from binding.

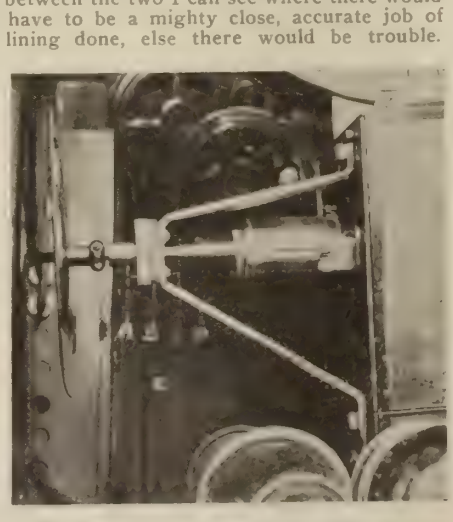
The opening you see on our lens hood does not cut off any of the useful light, as you may suspect it would, because we tested it and found the beam was smaller than the lens opening.

If you think this idea will be of value to other projectionists, pass it along. Inclosed find six dollars for copy of Blue Book of Projection.

One can never tell how much use such a thing may be. The shutter bracket looks practical and is sufficiently simple that it may be made by any projectionist of average ability, provided he uses judgment and common sense.

The fibre block B is, I take it, not hard fibre, but some relatively soft material which will "give" a bit, so that an even bearing may be had between bracket D and bearing A without the necessity of having an absolutely true, square surface on bracket D. This plan is clever and in my judgment is the thing which makes the whole thing very practical for the projectionist to apply in practice.

If one were to try to install bracket D and bearing block A with a rigid bearing between the two I can see where there would have to be a mighty close, accurate job of lining done, else there would be trouble.



MR. GORDON'S DEVICE
To Support Outer Shutter Bearing.

As it is I think there could be some leeway, though not very much, because bearing X is a pretty close fit to the shaft.

By the way, did you follow up by trimming down the blades of your shutter? If you did not, then you got no advantage by placing it at the aerial image.

His Hat in the Ring

Our old friend, John Griffith, yanks off his headpiece, gives it a preliminary twirl or two, and sails it into the center of the ring, as follows:

In the article "Mistake Somewhere," February Third issue, I see brother Moore would like me to comment on the argument between two Boston projectionists, which same I will proceed to do.

It seems to me that, since both yourself and brother Moore hold that the changeover would be noticeable to the audience were one projector using A. C. and the other D. C. at the arc, there was no error on the part of the editor.

So much for that, though I am not intending to pose as a referee in the matter. It has, however, occurred to me that I might touch upon another aspect of the case with perhaps some benefit to all concerned, viz: Is it possible to produce identically the same screen illumination where A. C. and D. C. are used at the arc of two projectors projecting to the same screen.

Thinks It Possible

I think it is. For ten years I projected pictures constantly with A. C. at the arc, and found it was possible to tint or shade the light in any desired way. Being of a yellowish cast some may doubt that it can be made to appear soft and white as is the light from a D. C. arc.

Before I got into the projection game I was a dyer. One of the things I was called upon to do was to dye white hats so that they would be more white. Natural white fur, like A. C. light, has a yellowish tinge. To bleach the fur would ruin it, so we whitened it by using a dye with a very small amount of purple—a mixture of red and blue. It was, of course, a very, very weak dye bath, but it did the trick.

The same thing can be done with projector light. As you know, all light passing through a single point of the condenser image covers the entire screen. It therefore follows that if a piece of colored gelatine be held at any point of the condenser image, the colored light resulting will be spread evenly all over the screen. If only a few points of the condenser image be covered with the gelatine you will not be able to see the color, which will nevertheless be there and spread evenly all over the screen surface. As we cover more points of the condenser image the color will begin to show on the screen.

When white A. C. Special carbons first came out my manager objected to the blueish tint of the light. It was too much of a change from the yellowish tint produced when ordinary carbons are used, and right there I got busy experimenting by placing a piece of orange colored leader in the light beam. This neutralized the blue.

Personally I do not like the chalky white screen, though I suppose they do give the true color value of tinted films. I believe if I were using a high intensity arc I would tone things down with a little color at the condenser image, and I may add that a piece of ordinary gelatine can stay in the light beam for days without any sign of injury from heat, provided it be at the condenser image. There should be a metal mask at the condenser image anyhow, and it will serve to carry the gelatine color agent, which may be attached to it by means of an ordinary metal paper clip.

All of which is referred to users of A. C. at the arc and of the high intensity arc, with the remark that I have not observed things quite as has Friend Griffith. I have often found D. C. to be the more yellow of the two. I have found A. C., even with ordinary carbons of some makes, to be rather blue and decidedly harsh. There is no manner of question in my mind that color can be used as Brother Griffith says it can, to the benefit of screen results in very many cases.

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

In Her New, 1776-Seat Hawaii, Honolulu Has a Splendid House

THE New Hawaii Theatre, recently opened at Honolulu, T. H., was erected at a cost of almost a half million dollars, and represents years of study and planning. In construction it sets a high mark for safety, embodying many new ideas, at the same time upholding high standards in beauty, appointments and comfort. In fact, some of the ideas employed are so different from the usual practice that theatre owners and builders from the mainland are studying them with interest.

The New Hawaii Theatre is strictly a home product, having been erected by Honolulu interests, with Honolulu capital and designed by Island architects, and local materials were used in its construction wherever possible. The work was handled by local contractors and citizen labor only was employed in construction work.

In the Business Center

The new theatre is located in the very center of the busines district of Honolulu, within a few steps of Fort street, and within easy reach of the leading hotels. It covers a lot 120 by 133 feet in size at Bethel and Pauahi streets and will be even more accessible and central when the former street is cut through to Hotel street, as planned.

With a seating capacity of 1,776 it is the largest theatre in the Islands and is equipped for stage as well as for screen attractions. The house stands on the site of the Bijou Theatre, a playhouse rich in historic interest.

The New Hawaii was designed by Marshall Webb, of Emory & Webb, and preliminary plans were considered as long ago as 1912. Conditions caused delays, however, and it was not until after the end of the war that a definite decision was reached to proceed with the project. The contract for the construction of the house was awarded on June 9, 1921, to the Pacific Engineering Company, of Honolulu, and the work was completed in the fall of 1922.

Difficult Structural Condition

The designs prepared by the architects imposed rather difficult structural conditions in that they called for a mezzanine lobby beneath the gallery. This made it necessary to employ the double cantilever system for the balcony construction, which forms one of the most interesting features of the building, from the architectural and engineering standpoint.

The cantilevers employed are of reinforced concrete, fitted together in such a way as to equalize the load and distribute the weight equally upon all supports. The balcony is designed to withstand a weight of one hundred pounds per square foot, but before being placed into service was tested with two hundred and thirty pounds per square foot by the city building inspector, with no sign of failure.

The idea for the double cantilever support originated with Prof. John Mason Young, of the University of Hawaii, and was adopted with but slight modifications. The theatre building is a skeleton reinforced concrete frame, with hollow tile walls, resting on a solid coral foundation.

Dignified and Solid

The Bethel street facade is suggestive of dignity and solidarity, with eight Corinthian pilasters extending from the ground to the heavy cornice. A wide marquee extends to the edge of the sidewalk along the entire Bethel street frontage and over the exits on the Pauahi street side.

The lobby is simple in its decoration and appointments, being finished principally in finely matched marble, with the ticket office on one side. The foyer extends the full width of the house, flanked with wide stairways which lead to the mezzanine foyer and thence to the balcony.

Within the auditorium the visitor is attracted by the unusual width of the house, the stately beauty of the proscenium arch, Lionel Walden's great painting, "The Glorification of the Drama," and the clever use of colors. Usually theatre decorators strive to give playhouses a feeling of warmth, but in this case the effect of coolness was sought and achieved. The color scheme is gold and bronze and taupe, with mosaics to give relief, the predominating colors of which are old red, gold and deep blue.

Mammoth Ventilating System

In the basement, at one side of the stage, are two ninety-inch supply fans, and two eighty-inch exhaust fans, the use of which reduce the temperature several degrees lower than the temperature on the outside. The supply fans draw in supplies of fresh air from high above the roof, force it through filters and cooling equipment and distribute it throughout the house, there being an opening for this purpose under almost every seat.

The exhaust fans insure a steady flow of air, the system being capable of supplying every patron with thirty-five cubic feet of fresh air per minute. The system was designed and installed by the Ilg Electric Ventilating Company, San Francisco. Through its use the temperature of the auditorium of the New Hawaii Theatre can be kept ten degrees cooler than the temperature outside.

are of a different type from those usually used in large theatres. They have cane backs and seats and are thus much cooler than chairs upholstered in the regulation manner. The chairs for the main part of the house were furnished by Heywood Bros. & Wakefield Co., San Francisco, while the wicker chairs used in the loges were supplied by the Coyne Furniture Company, Ltd., of Honolulu, who installed all the draperies and upholstery work.

The Adam period of decoration was followed throughout the house, an interesting detail being the upholstering of the chairs in the loges in imported English linen, the motif of which is in the classical Adams design. Opal, rose, taupe and dull blue find a place in the color scheme in the decorations for offices, reception rooms and dressing rooms.

The electrical equipment of the New Hawaii Theatre is of unusually high order. Use is made of more than two thousand lights, twenty thousand feet of conduits and seventy-five thousand feet of wire. The lighting load amounts to about two hundred kilowatts, while the power load is in the neighborhood of eighty kilowatts. A large Edison storage battery has been installed for emergency purposes, since Honolulu has but one source of electric current. Two Westinghouse motor1generator sets supply current for the projection machines and charge the storage batteries. The theatre is also equipped with its own isolated generating set for the temporary manufacture of current in case the regular supply should fail.

Simplex Projection; Robert-Morton Music

The projection room is said to be a model of its kind, with an abundance of open space and ventilation to the open air. It is presided over by J. W. Wellingham, formerly manager of the Hawaii and Palama theatres of the Consolidated Amusement Company. It is equipped with three Simplex projectors. finished in light blue enamel and nickel trimmings, a stereopticon and flood-lighting equipment. The electric control system is said to be the equal of any on the mainland.

Music is furnished by a Robert-Morton organ, installed by the American Photo Player Company, of San Francisco, the first instrument of the kind to be installed in the Hawaiian Islands. Six months were consumed in the construction of the instrument and three more were required to install it.

The console of the organ is of the four manual type and contains seventy-two stops. The pipes and effects are enclosed in two concrete chambers on either side of the proscenium arch behind grille work of exceptional beauty. The organ is being featured as one of the attractions of the house and is meeting with the hearty approval of the Honolulu public, where appreciation of good music is especially keen.

The instrument was installed under the personal direction of Gail Seward, who was sent from the factory for this work. Percy Burraston is the organist and has expressed himself as being delighted with the tonal qualities and capabilities of the instrument and with the perfect acoustics of the theatre. The console is placed on an hydraulically operated elevator by which it can be raised or lowered at will from the orchestra pit to the level of the stage.

Admission Prices

Admission prices at the New Hawaii Theatre vary according to the attractions. Those for the opening night were $4 for the orchestra section, $3 for the balcony and $2 for the gallery, all seats being reserved. The program on this occasion was furnished by artists of renown. For the first moving picture program the prices were $1.50 for boxes and loges, 75 cents for the first eight rows of the orchestra section, $1 for the balance of the orchestra and balcony circle, and 50 cents for the balcony.

The New Hawaii Theatre is owned and operated by the Consolidated Amusement Company, Inc., of which Joel C. Cohen is president, Eaton H. Magoon secretary, J. H. Magoon treasurer and Alfred Magoon and Marmion M. Magoon directors. The headquarters and general offices of this concern have been moved to the new building where the entire mezzanine floor has been taken over.

This company also conducts the Liberty, Empire, Strand and Palama theatres in Honolulu and conducts a large film exchange used by most of the theatres on the Islands.

History of the Operating Company

The history of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Inc., and of the struggles of Joel C. Cohen, would mean a recital of much of the theatrical history of Hawaii. Of course, there were theatres in Honolulu long before Mr. Cohen arrived, but the great changes in the amusement business happened after his arrival.

When Joel C. Cohen came to Honolulu in 1898 he had no idea of engaging in the amusement business as he had had no experience in that line. He became interested in a vaudeville venture, however, and quite suddenly found himself with the Orpheum Theatre on his hands. The Orpheum Company, Ltd., with himself as president, was organized, but the venture proved a failure. Individually he secured a lease on the Orpheum Theatre premises and continued in business, later purchasing the moving picture business of R. K. Bonine, who had a small theatre on Hotel street, adjoining the Alexander Hotel, and whose house was known as the Bonine Theatre. Upon the destruction of the original Orpheum Theatre by fire the shows were transferred to the Bonine and the name of the latter changed to the Orpheum.

By this time there were several small moving picture theatres in operation in Honolulu, among these being the old Bijou Theatre, erected by the late J. Alfred Magoon; the Savoy, now known as the Strand; the Empire, and a showhouse operated by Chinese. The owners of these got together in 1911 and organized the Honolulu Amusement Company, with Joel C. Cohen, president, and J. Alfred Magoon, vice-president. Soon the control passed into the hands of Mr. Magoon and Mr. Cohen retired temporarily from the theatrical field.

Later the Liberty Theatre was built and Mr. Magoon soon became its sole owner, as well as owner of the other theatres in the city. In October, 1913, L. H. "Lani" Magoon, and Joel C. Cohen purchased the entire interests of J. Alfred Magoon and operated the properties under a co-partnership, known as the Consolidated Amusement Company, incorporating a few years later with a capital stock of $250,000.

Stanley Frame Co. In Consolidation

Arnold Kornicker, president of the Stanley Frame Company, announces that his company has taken over the theatrical frame business of Menger Ring & Weinstein, Inc.

Jacob Ring, formerly of the latter company, is now affiliated with the Stanley Frame Company. The staff and equipment of Mr. Ring's former company has removed to the factory of the Stanley Frame Company.

Under the active management of Mr. Kornicker, the business of the Stanley Frame Company has increased by leaps and bounds and many of the finest theatres of the country owe their attractiveness to the Stanley display frames with which they are decorated.

In order to care for its increased trade, the Stanley Frame Company has trebled its office and display space in the Godfrey building.

A handsome display of the newest styles of ticket booths and display frames is now being installed and all exhibitors are invtied to call.

Robert Morton Organ Supplants Orchestra

The new lessees of the Clinton Square Theatre, Albany, N. Y., have just let a contract with the American Photo Player Company for a Robert Morton organ costing $15,000. According to the contract the organ must be installed within the next twenty-eight days.

The management of the Clinton Square Theatre is now in the hands of those who are also handling the Leland in this city. When the company took over the latter theatre, they supplanted the orchestra with an organ, and found it so satisfactory that they will now make the same move at the Clinton Square house.

The interior of the house has been redecorated and the house has also been reseated. It will be painted in the early spring.

The Durability of POWER'S PROJECTORS

IS CLEARLY PROVED IN THIS MANNER

THE ISIS THEATRE
ST. ALBANS, W. VA.

Feb. 15th, 1923.

Nicholas Power Co.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I am writing this letter, not thru any request from your firm, but to show what a Power's machine will do if properly taken care of, at the same time thinking you would appreciate the receipt of a letter recommending the Power's machine. If the following record can be counted as such, I trust it may be of some use to you.

On Dec. 20, 1915, I started a Power's 6A machine running two full shows each night with an occasional matinee. This machine took care of our business from the above date to Oct. 9, 1920, when I purchased a Power's 6B, and placed side of it. From that time on have been running two machines expending on each machine the following repairs:

Power's 6A Dec. 20, 1915, to Feb. 15, 1923, running seven years, two months, expended- 96.01

Power's 6B Oct. 9, 1920, to Feb. 15, 1923 running two years, four months 29.22

125.23

I consider this a pretty good record for a motion picture machine, over seven years in constant service and apparently is in as good condition today as the day of purchase, it at least puts up as good a picture.

My operator takes the machines all down once each three months, cleans the heads thoroughly in gasoline, examines them and if any of the parts are worn, has me order new parts. This I think is the secret of the long life of the machines, and at the same time saves repair bills and keeps them from the scrap heap.

Yours truly,

ISIS THEATRE.

Soon – IF WINTER COMES

Wholesome, clean, healthy! A boy's life of adventure, free from tawdry conflicts and sex illusions, based on fact gathered by one who served among men, who loved men, who admired men and who wished young America to so live that he might become a man! The trash of silly, social temptations has no place in this story of a boy who became the master of the man.

The Yankee ever has been master of the sea! Decatur, John Paul Jones---history has written the feats of great American seamen into all time. Here is a story of the making of such men; men who acted and argued later; men out of whom Dewey and Schley and Sampson and "Fighting Bob" Evans were chosen, each for his day's work for the Stars and Stripes. Shifty-footed men, with a right and left punch and a keen eye and a high sense of honor and guts to go the limit!

Dick Halpin is the lad you wanted to be; and I wanted to be! He's the fellow we dreamed of, whose fighting courage we envied. He's the boy that assumed another's petty crime and ran away to sea to live it down, that the girl he loved might not be shamed and humiliated by the revelation of her brother's weakness. He's the fellow you and I used to talk about; that lad of strength and honor we built with boyish imaginations up in the haymow, or while idling with a home-made fishin' rod down by the creek. He's your kind and my kind and because we had fathers and mothers to make our way easier we never managed to be him; but we wanted to and we'll live our dreams again with Dick Halpin in this vivid, living story, "Masters of Men."

A master of men wrote this great sea tale. A man whose life was as hard as the diamonds he cut and who never wrote a line until he had lived beyond an average man's age; a man who took a beating at the hands of a brutal second mate with a smile, and who administered a beating with equal cheerfulness; a man who knew the sea and a sailorman's life; who criticized rightfully Kipling and who wrote his first sea tale to prove that a man who knew the sea could write a better story of the sea; a man who earned little by his pen and who starved while he wrote; the greatest writer of sea stories in all literature.

Morgan Robertson, a master of men, wrote the last word in thrilling sea stories when he wrote

"MASTERS OF MEN."

A broken engagement, a hero crushed by his father's disgrace, a heroine struggling under the sting of her lover's reproach, a villain scheming to marry her money and a child to help untangle the affair, gives to "A Clouded Name" enough romance, mystery, plot, suspense and thrills to suit every audience.

"The Balloonatic"
(Keaton-First National—Two Reels)
BUSTER KEATON rises to great heights in this release, both literally and figuratively, for the frozen-faced comedian goes sailing heavenward in a balloon, where he finds an opportunity for some brand new gags.
He becomes proprietor of a balloon, but first becomes aware of it when it bumps against the lower side of the clouds. In attempting to bring down a duck, he punctures the gas bag, ending in disaster. Even this has its silver lining, however, for he encounters Diana, a blonde beauty, in the person of Phyllis Haver, appearing to advantage in a one-piece bathing suit.
Buster's courtship and the "balloonatic" events that follow entitle this to a place as one of the most ingenious he has made since "The Boat." The story element is slender, as it should be when there are so many humorous gags present, and Buster's work is well up to his usual standard. Phyllis Haver, too, contributes in no small measure to the fun.—L. C. MOEN.

"Scars of Jealousy"

Coming!
The Novelty Melodrama of the Year

Galleons, derelicts, once-proud clippers, stately liners, caught in the grip of the weird Sargasso Sea through centuries and wedged by sea-weed into an island of lost ships. A colony of men and only two women inhabit it, a rabble ruled by a giant with the right of might. Escape is impossible. Each new wreck adds castaways, desperate men—sometimes a woman, and she, by community law, must marry within one day, choosing her husband from the mob. The man she takes must defend her against all-comers.

To this island drift a millionaire's daughter, a New York detective and his prisoner, an ex-naval officer charged with murder—sole survivors of a wreck. And although the girl would give a million for reprieve, she must choose her mate from the men who offer. Two want her—the brute who rules and the man accused of murder.

Director Maurice Tourneur tackled a big job in filming this story of Captain Crittenden Marriott's. Not only was there drama of the strongest kind, but also the unprecedented locale of the Sargasso Sea with its waste world of stagnant weed, its submarine monsters, the hundreds of ships it never lets go. A sailor's myth some call the Sargasso Sea; yet the atlas shows it at the Gulf of Mexico's very door. Thus Tourneur has depicted both island and people, in scenes that come as some new, almost incredible wonder.

With Anna Q. Nilsson, Milton Sills, Frank Campeau and Walter Long in the cast, produced at M. C. Levee's vast United Studios, at Hollywood, "The Isle of Lost Ships" will be discovered as that rarest of jewels—a photoplay the like of which has never been seen.

Yo ho, me hearties! Bend a sail!

The
WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

"Specials" That Have a Reason—More Taxes—Digging Into History—Convention Issues Scarce

HONEST—we feel that The World organization is entitled to a little bit of pride on the two special sections that are presented with this issue.

And you won't object to our inserting that shy word of boastfulness on this imposing editorial page—will you?

The "Special Section" that is merely a collection of words on which to hang a plea for special advertising is something that has never aroused any great enthusiasm on our part.

But the "special" that affords opportunity for unusually elaborate treatment of a really important subject has its place in the scheme of things.

Here's our record:

A few weeks ago we presented the two-color "Book Title Tie-Up" section—and we have it on the word of exhibitors and exploitation men throughout the country that this effort has already made itself felt in the stimulation of business.

This week:

"Who's Who in the Independent Field"—an exhaustive forecast of coming products from independent producers, together with invaluable records of the field.

"Model Theatre Section"—authoritative and complete information on the planning, erection and equipment of an up-to-date small-town theatre. You will be finding this section carefully filed away and thumbmarked in small towns for years to come.

So: To Roger Ferri and E. T. Keyser—not to forget, in our editorial altruism, the boys of the advertising department—these lines of twelve-point bold congratulations.

THE Model Theatre Section seems to be the sort of idea that achieves the sincerest form of flattery.

But, aside from that, there is another phase of the section of general interest:

There is not a single line of "pufflicity" or puff in the model theatre pages—nor was a line expected or promised.

The manufacturers represented rested their case on their faith in their particular product, and their confidence in their ability to tell of the product in clearcut, business-like advertising space.

There's a thought in that for picture folk.

And a tribute to the staunch self-reliance of the manufacturer who puts his name and guarantee back of an accessory offered to the theatre owner.

There must be a secret masonic organization of legislators with new schemes to bedevil the picture business.

THE idea of State taxation of motion picture theatre admissions, which started quietly enough in the Northwest, has now reached New York.

After New York—you can generally count on an idea taking root rapidly in all State capitals.

The bill proposing a six per cent. levy on all amusement admissions in the State of New York will probably not survive the committee stage, for it seems to have neither the sympathy nor the cooperation of any leaders in either party.

There is not even sufficient strength apparent around the bill to dignify it with the term "strike" legislation. But what mystifies us personally is the mysterious telepathy that seems to exist on such matters between widely separated legislators.

Let a Senator in New York introduce a bill on Monday placing a sur-tax on close-ups and before the week is out you'll find a similarly phrased bill presented by the Senator from Tombstone for the consideration of Arizona's legislature.

Nine out of ten of the proposals die—but that is another story. Meanwhile expense has been incurred and someone's more or less valuable time has been occupied in arranging for the obsequies.

It's a great picture that doesn't find someone, somewhere, saying: "We—ll, I don't think so much of that."

LAST week we placed into type the opinion that the pros and cons of the Uniform Contract didn't mean as much to the exhibitor as a dozen grievances that neither new, nor old, nor any contract could cover.

And the day the editorial appeared we received the letter from DuQueen, Arkansas, appearing on another page of this issue.

Here is an exhibitor who started out to write a letter on the Uniform Contract. And after five lines or so on the contract he struck off on one of the grievances that we listed.

Poor prints!

This is a serious problem. Serious because, while its existence is universally recognized, everybody says, "Well, what can you do about it?"

This business seems to be geared so closely to the first run that any thought and energy devoted to the small towner must necessarily be haphazard and off-hand.

Seven dollars and fifty cents is seven dollars and fifty cents. You can't make it seem important. You have to multiply it by a thousand to make it equal the return on two or three good first runs.

So the seven-fifty-a-day man is given seven-fifty consideration. Occasionally we wind up the oratory, tell him he is the backbone of the business, and then go back to pondering over some first-run problem.

But "werry, werry expensive" sales staffs are maintained and considerable railroad fare expended to reach those seven-fifty men. Exploitation workers also.

All with the intention of promoting the seven-fifty man into a satisfied ten-dollar customer, then fifteen, then twenty-five.

If we are falling down on the essential—THE PRINT—then there must be something wrong in our figuring.

Perhaps it would pay to take a few hours away from that first-run problem some day for consideration of the "backbone."

LAST week's "Straight From the Shoulder" reports contained an item of unusual interest to us.

It was an exhibitor report telling of his gratification with the results of showing "From the Manger to the Cross," the one-time Kalem special now available through Vitagraph.

This is digging into the dusty records with a vengeance.

Here is a picture that must be nearing the ten-year mark. And we have it on the best of authority that the annual net is still achieving a figure that many current attractions would not sneeze at.

"From the Manger to the Cross" marks in our memory the first real attempt at exploitation in this business. We can remember when Bill "Kalem" Wright arranged for its presentation in the John Wanamaker Auditorium—and it was considered remarkable that the cheap "movies" should be allowed within the sacred confines of a department store.

We don't happen to know what the production cost was on "From the Manger to the Cross." But it was produced even before the $165,000 spent on "The Birth of a Nation" was considered an unholy extravagance. So it couldn't have been a figure that could hold its head up in the company of present-day "supers" that will be forgotten before another season rolls around.

Yet, every Lent and Christmas, and often in between, exhibitors turn to thoughts of the almost forgotten Kalem trade-mark—and then write "Straight From the Shoulder" reports to tell of their satisfaction.

Rumors that salaries are skyrocketing again on the Coast do not jibe with the general unwillingness to admit that prosperity is back.

THE search for a live issue to arouse interest in the forthcoming national exhibitor convention seems to be unavailing.

It is our personal opinion that the Uniform Contract will fail of the proper zest to make an attendance-arousing issue.

It would not surprise us, however, to find national advertising coming further into the foreground with each week that draws us nearer to the convention.

Which is strange, because even the producer who admits that seven-thousand-dollar-a-page advertising does not send thousands of would-be patrons clamoring to box offices can find justification in the thought: "Well, it sells the exhibitor into paying real money for the picture."

The exhibitor is the reason for a good portion of the appropriations—and now the exhibitor is complaining that he is carrying the load—and then some.

We'll hear more about this before May appears on the calendar.

More About Prints

Here's a Problem That Makes the Uniform Contract Fade Into Insignificance—Take it from the Business Backbone: the Small Exhibitor

Mr. Robt. E. Welsh.
Moving Picture World,
New York City, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:

Your editorial "WARNINGS AND A QUERY," in The World of the date of February 24 has prompted this letter.

You are mighty right—it's iron-bound. I am surprised and astonished at the acts of these big leaders of the exhibition end of the picture show business. And yet not surprised, as following them through the past few years we find them dealing in big figures in the terms of their own big first run houses and apparently not able to grasp the small town situation or not caring, I don't know which.

At any rate they have endorsed and agreed to a contract that is even more drastic and more favorable to the exchange and producing end of the business than anything heretofore invented.

I have no kick to make at the clause compelling exhibitors to play and pay, provided there were some clause inserted to compel the exchange to play fair.

In the small towns we are compelled to wait until pictures are old to buy them at a price we can afford to pay. Then the exchange ships us a print that is about half gone and what there is of it shot to pieces, so that we have to put in a half day working it to get it in condition to run through a machine at all. And this uniform contract offers no protection whatever in cases of this kind.

Recently I received a print of a comedy that it was absolutely impossible to run. It came in a day ahead and I wired the exchange at Dallas and they sent me another print. That, I suppose, they think was or should have been satisfactory, but again. we find a lack of understanding of the small town situation. $1.50 additional express often means the difference between a profit and a loss to a small isolated town.

Again, this same company shipped me a print of a two-reel comedy that only had about 1,000 feet of the original 2,000 feet. Arriving late, I was compelled to run it, and it was a repeater besides, having been used over a year previous. Also it was a substitute.

I wrote the exchange and asked not only for credit in the amount of the film rental, but advised them that I would expect them to supply another comedy gratis.

They advised they would give me another comedy gratis, but double damage was too much. I had to take what I could get, of course, as they had my deposit..

Will we ever get protection from this kind of high-jacking?

Every now and then some fellow breaks into print with a long letter or article about longer exhibition life of pictures, and it looks good on paper.

If exchanges would keep good prints many of us small town guys could use the big hits after they are old and get just about as much money with them as when brand new. But they won't do it.

Oh, yes. The salesmen says: "Our exchange has just received new prints on everything, and I will absolutely guarantee film in A No. 1 condition."

"We buy the picture and pay for it seven days in advance, or C. O. D., and on opening the box on exhibition date we find a picture that was originally in seven reels, on six reels and each of these about two-thirds full, or 4,500 to 5,000 feet of film, all shot to pieces, ripped, ravelled, run down at the heel and ragged on the edges, requiring six hours' work by the clock to get it into condition to go over machines.

Result: That wonderful picture that some of our patrons have been out of town and seen about a year ago and been begging us to book ever since they come to see bringing several of their friends and relatives and rightly decide that the home town show is no good.

"They won't book good pictures until they are worn out."

Hence all our advertising the fact that: "A picture you haven't seen is as new as a book you haven't read." makes no impression on our patrons.

There are crowns of glory waiting the man who invents a scheme or incorporates into a contract something that will guarantee to a small towner, good prints, and penalize the exchange in double the amount of the film rental every time they ship us a poor print.

Last night was an all-comedy night at my show. Three two-reel comedies and on the six reels received about 4,000 feet of film, and ran it in exactly one hour. Two of these comedies ended up abruptly, leaving the characters in a bad fix. What must a patron think about it? And I am telling you they charged me real money for this stuff.

Yours truly,

We Mean It—

When we say, "You CAN'T Cover the Field Without Moving Picture World"; it may sound like advertising braggadocio.

The letters from exhibitors appearing on Page 132 will give an idea of the proof that is back of the statement.

Here are just a few of the thousands of exhibitors who receive Moving Picture World ALONE.

There is no other way of reaching them except—through Moving Picture World. You are not reaching them the week you are not represented in the advertising pages of—Moving Picture World.

We will present more and more proofs as the weeks go by. Meanwhile, keep in mind—

You CAN'T Cover the Field Without Moving Picture World.

Ohio Preachers Begin New War on Sunday Picture Shows

THE ministerial war against the operation of Sunday motion picture theatres, which has been raging with more or less intensity in various sections of Ohio for the past several months, has broken out anew, and this time it looks like a fight to the finish, both the exhibitors and preachers marshaling their forces for the fray at Columbus.

The Rev. J. H. T. Gordon, representative from Logan county to the Ohio General Assembly, has introduced a bill to deny to the cinema men the accustomed jury trials when they are accused of having violated the Sunday closing law. This step, he says, is actuated by the fact that many of the violators are often thus acquitted.

The introduction of this bill was immediately followed by another one put in by Representative William Wiley, of Mercer county, wherein he seeks to waive the theatre requirements on motion picture shows owned by organizations not ostensibly in the business. The movie exhibitors contend that in certain cases they face actual competition from churches and schools, which purchase films from the producers on the same terms as do the regular exhibitors.

Sam Bullock, of Cleveland, who represents the exhibitors, opened the fight at the Ohio State Capitol February 24, when he made the following statement:

"It is beginning to look as though the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Ohio will have to organize a political department. There is, politically speaking, a certain well-organized element which has been for some time and still is attempting to act for every church in Ohio in constantly attacking the motion picture exhibitors.

"This is not of recent origin. It has been going on for 10 years. This particular group has now evidenced a strong desire to utilize the wonderful possibilities of the motion picture in co-operation with the theatre managers as a body. The group in question has never, to the best of my knowledge, offered anything of a constructive nature. There are hundreds of progressive ministers of all denominations who co-operate with our members locally. This, however, is only a natural and logical condition because of the fact that their members are our patrons. In fact, we could not operate without their patronage."

Continuing his address, Bullock said: "The element to which I refer, led by what is known as the Lord's Day Alliance, does not speak for all the State of Ohio or its church members, and the screens will graphically tell the story when we are ready. We have been 'carved' to death, and now they want more laws and legislation seeking to legalize the commercializing of public schools and churches in competition with citizen exhibitors with huge investments and taxable property. Their present attack means nothing but 'fight' to the exhibitors, and 'fight' it is going to be."

The official opening guns having been fired, it is expected that the conflict will rapidly gain momentum until a satisfactory settlement is reached.

Censorship Bill Again Put Before the Iowa Legislature

IOWA exhibitors are in for another mean fight on the subject of censorship after all. Representative Gallagher, Iowa county representative in the general assembly, shows himself to be a weathercock to public opinion. He first presented a highly obnoxious censorship bill. He found his committee and subcommittee strongly set against him and his measure unpopular in the house. He therefore requested and received unanimous consent to withdraw it.

Now he has reintroduced the bill, having trimmed it to meet the favor of the economists by cutting salaries of board members from $3,000 to $1,800 a year each, and keeping in all features of the bill objectionable to the industry. He explained his second introduction of the measure by declaring that a storm of popular disapproval descended on him in the way of protests from women's clubs and others when he withdrew it.

Gallagher admits that he doesn't much care whether the bill passes or not. But having stuck his finger into the pie he is going to get it out gracefully if possible. He regards this as a buck passing age and is passing the buck to the house. If it kills the bill, as it will in all probability, he will be satisfied and the onus of the action will be on the house, not on him.

But he is not entirely satisfied to let the theatre alone. He therefore accompanied his bill on its second trip into the house with a companion measure, creating city and country boards of public welfare with power to supervise and regulate all forms of public amusement—and recreation. No theatres, dance halls, road houses or similar establishments would be permitted to operate, after passage of the bill, without obtaining licenses or permits from the boards. The city board of five members, no more than three to be of one sex, would be named by the mayor and city council. It would have jurisdiction within the city or town naming it. The county board would consist of the county superintendent of schools, the county attorney, and the board of supervisors. Its jurisdiction would cover the county outside cities and towns.

The board would be authorized to examine the amusement or recreation places under its authority and to issue permits to such as, in its judgment did not prove detrimental to good government, health or morals. Licenses could be revoked at will by the boards for cause, but public hearings would be required where demanded after revocation of permits.

The Iowa Legislature has turned an unfriendly ear to proposals to create new tax burdens and inasmuch as the Gallagher bill calls for a tax, sufficient to carry out its provisions, the measure will probably be stoned at the start. The author claims that his system is now being successfully employed in Kansas City.

Bank Purchases All Seats on Opening Night of Troy Theatre

WITH the first night taken over by the Manufacturers' National Bank, of Troy, the newest of the Mark Strand Circuit of houses, bearing the name of The Troy, and located in the Collar City, was opened last Wednesday night, under most auspicious conditions. The opening was attended by the elite not only of Troy, but also of the neighboring cities of Albany and Schenectady.

The occasion became one of social importance to the city itself. Many were present from out of town, including Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hayes, of Buffalo; Mr. and Mrs. Moe Mark, E. L. Falk and Thomas W. Lamb, of New York; Joseph Lebenson and Morris Sharof, of Boston, and others prominently identified with the motion picture industry.

The idea of a prominent bank taking over a motion picture theatre for an entire evening as a means of affording pleasure to its friends, was something entirely new in this part of the State, and probably to the State as a whole.

The bank issued beautiful souvenir programs of the occasion. Frank E. Howe, president of the bank, who is really responsible for the whole idea, devoted a page of the program in explanation of the part which the bank was playing in the theatre's opening. Mr. Howe said in part:

"It has been spoken of as unusual that one engaged in the serious business of banking should become interested in the lighter side of amusement as applied to business, but it has really given me sincere pleasure to be able to arrange this First Night for you, my business associates and friends, for I wanted the privilege of sharing your delight on beholding the beauty of this splendidly designed and sumptuously appointed edifice, which has been added to the architectural possessions and entertainment opportunities of this city."

The Troy has been about a year in course of construction. It is a downtown house, and by far the largest and most beautiful in the city. It represents an investment of about $400,000. It has a seating capacity of 1,902, the balcony seating 590, the loges 102, the boxes 44 and the orchestra 1,166. The chairs have been so arranged as to give more than the usual space.

The management of the house, Uly S. Hill, directing, and Edward H. Crawford, business manager, deserve much praise for the smoothness of the program, in view of the fact that no lights were available from 4:30 to 6:30 o'clock on the afternoon of the opening, through the burning out of a generator, preventing any last minute rehearsal on the part of the employes of the house.

Dispute Over Contracts Now Raging Vigorously in England

WHILE the storm is raging here over the new uniform contract, a similar storm is at its height in England over the contract form—indeed the situation over there seems worse than it is here because at the present time each film renter seems to be using his own form of contract, the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association having given notice to the Kinematograph Renters' Association to determine the length of the old contract.

The battle between the renters and the exhibitors has come to such a pass that some of the militant exhibitors have threatened to refrain from booking altogether.

Therefore, this question of contract seems to be worldwide.

It is true that discussion is healty, but when it comes to a point where one side or the other won't discuss—won't even listen—then the situation is bad for the proper growth of business. According to reports that is the situation in England. Exhibitors are denouncing the renters at every meeting, but there seems to be no idea on the part of the exhibitors to sit down and talk the matter over.

Out of the confusion over contracts in England the voice of Ralph J. Pugh, managing director for Associated First National, Ltd., is raised in a declaration of amity. He declares:

"It is my experience that our customers rarely read the contract terms. With mutual confidence between both parties to the deal the contract consists of little else than an undertaking to hire and deliver respectively; date, run bar, carriage as the big items. I believe our contract to be fair and reasonable. If at any time it is discovered (owing to unforeseen circumstances) that a real hardship would be inflicted by the insistance upon strict compliance, First National would follow the example of any other reputable houses and meet the case fairly, whatever legal rights the contract granted."

This must be the spirit everywhere—because it is good business. And the closer exhibitors everywhere get together as have the producers with Will Hays at their head the better business it will be for the producer to deal equitably with the exhibitors.

Anderson Joins Universal

Richard V. Anderson, formerly sales manager of the International News Reel Corporation, has resigned to join the Universal Pictures Corporation as sales exploiteer. This is a new post created in the Universal organization and will co-ordinate all nationally projected methods of encouraging sales.

Anderson has been in the film business since 1912. In his new position, Anderson is expected to devote his time to improving sales methods and in devising means by which Universal's service to the exhibitor can be increased and bettered.

Won't Affect News Reel

Universal will continue to be the distributor of the International News Reel, it is definitely asserted by Edgar B. Hatrick, general manager of the International News Reel Corporation, denying reports that the recent Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan tie-up would affect the news reel.

Let Censor Bill Die in Committee

Censorship of motion pictures in Missouri is not likely to occur for at least two more years. Several days ago the Missouri House Committee on Criminal Jurisprudence voted an unfavorable report on the Committee of Fifty's censorship bill. The Senate committee has about decided to permit the companion Senate measure to die in committee.

A few days ago Senators McMurry and Brookshire filed with the committee numerous telegrams and letters from church organizations urging censorship. They were the authors of the Senate bill but did not ask for another public hearing.

Speaking on the measure, Senator Casey, of Kansas City, expressed the belief that censorship would come eventually, but that the board should be composed of state officials. He suggested that a substitute bill along that line be drafted so that if the Senate committee should decide to report on censorship it could send in the sub bill. A sub-committee was then appointed to prepare such a substitute.

Film Set Catches Fire

Desmond Sustains Cuts and Burns in Rescuing Actress

William Desmond, Universal serial star, Esther Ralston and Cathleen Calhoun, the two girls playing with him in "The Phantom Fortune," his current Universal chapter picture, and several other actors and technical men were cut and burned early this week, when a set in which they were working caught fire, it is reported by Universal. Miss Calhoun was saved from probable fatal injuries by Desmond, who risked his life to carry her from the blaze.

Miss Calhoun was the most seriously injured, receiving severe burns over her entire back. Desmond's cuts and burns were received while he was rescuing her. Miss Ralston's burns were slight, but Lewis Sargent, the juvenile of the picture, received bad burns about the arms and legs, and Robert F. Hill, the director, was burned on his neck and ears. Buddie Harris, the cameraman, also was burned.

The company was working in a rustic cabin in a small lake near Universal City. Fire scenes were being filmed, but the fire flare got out of control and quickly spread to the entire cabin, penning part of the company within. Shortly after the cabin was cleared, it crashed into a heap of burning logs and debris.

The still and moving picture comeras in use were destroyed as well as the electrical and fire-making equipment.

Censorship Hearing Date Changed

A change is announced in connection with the public hearing on the censorship bill at Albany, N. Y., originally scheduled for February 27, but which will now be held on March 6. The change was brought about by reason of the fact that one or two important hearings had already been arranged for February 27. Several legislators, who, because of their being on committees before which these hearings are to be held, could not be present at the censorship hearing, asked that the hearing be held at a later date, and so March 6 has been decided upon.

These legislators, many new to both the Senate and the Assembly this year, are not conversant with the fight which was made on the censorship bill two years ago, and prefer to again listen at the coming hearing before called upon to vote on the matter when it reaches the floor of the Senate and of the Assembly. A record-breaking crowd is anticipated.

F. I. L. M. Club Dance

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York City will give a dance at the Automobile Club of America, 247 West 54th street, Saturday night, March 17. A buffet luncheon will be served.

One of the largest crowds that ever attended an F. I. L. M. Club dance is expected. A large delegation from the Theatre Owners Chambers of Commerce, including the Salesmen's Club, will be on hand. The committee in charge is: W. E. Raynor, chairman; Tom Murray, George Dillon and A. Weinberger.

Will Attend Hearing

Tihrty-five members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce will go to Albany, March 6, to attend a hearing before the Legislature on the repeal of the Censorship Law. This hearing was postponed from February 27.

The regular meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce which was scheduled for Tuesday, February 27, has been postponed until Thursday, March 1, to allow the members to attend the Legislative hearing. At the March 1 meeting officers to be elected for the ensuing year will be nominated.

Publishes New Book

Photoplay Magazine has published a real contribution to the literature of advertising and of youth in its book, "The Age Factor in Selling and Advertising."

Besides being entertaining and instructive, the book is a splendid dissertation on the importance of capitalizing youth in making an advertising appeal or in salesmanship. A copy of the book may be secured gratis from Photoplay Magazine, 221 West 57th street, New York.

Sivitz Dies of Pneumonia

Prominent Theatre Publicity Director Succumbs in California

Samuel Sivitz, aged 35 years, formerly one of Pittsburgh's best known newspapermen and theatrical publicity director, died early in the morning of February 27, from pneumonia in his home at Los Angeles, Cal., according to word received here by relatives.

Mr. Sivitz was born on the Atlantic Ocean, while his parents were on their way to this country. After residing in Baltimore, Md., for several weeks, his parents came to Pittsburgh. He had resided in this city most of his life.

Mr. Sivitz attended several public schools of this city and in 1907 he graduated from the Pittsburgh High School. He spent many years of his life in the newspaper profession. The same year he graduated from high school he became a reporter for the Pittsburgh Leader. After working for that paper for several years he became affiliated with the Gazette Times, being the sporting editor for that paper. For many years he was the assistant sporting editor of the Dispatch.

Leaving the newspapers he made a success as the publicity director of the Rowland & Clark Theatres in Pittsburgh. After holding that position for several years his health failed him and he severed his connection with the chain of picture houses and went to California.

Paramount Aids Charity

Money Obtained by Showing "Covered Wagon" to Help Humanity

New York society leaders are going to pay $10 top prices to see James Cruze's Paramount picture, "The Covered Wagon," at a pre-release showing of the picture Sunday evening, March 11, at the Hotel Plaza.

Through arrangements made by Charles E. McCarthy of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau Paramount lent the picture for its world premiere for the benefit of two big New York charities Miss Anne Morgan's Committee for Devastated France and the New York Maternity Center.

Admission prices will be $5 and $10, with boxes costing $75 and $100.

Girl Scouts and members of the younger social set of New York will act as ushers and a musical program will be given under the direction of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld.

Returns to Coast

George Oppenheimer, well known exchange man of the West Coast, who has been in New York for three weeks buying product for his exchanges, left Thursday on the Twentieth Century Limited for his home in San Francisco. Among the films which Mr. Oppenheimer bought was the Einstein Theory of Relativity.

Fritz Tidden, formerly on the staff of Moving Picture World, and well known in theatrical and film circles, accompanied Mr. Oppenheimer to take charge of the latter's publicity and other important organization matters. Mr. Tidden will be permanently located in San Francisco.

Sheldon Has Influenza

E. Lloyd Sheldon, who succeeded Thomas J. Geraghty as production editor at the Paramount Long Island studio when the latter went to the Lasky studio in Hollywood, is ill at his home with influenza, which, his doctors said, just missed being pneumonia.

Promises Co-operation

Post Office Values Moving Picture Industry as Customer

The moving picture industry is probably the best customer of the postal service in this territory, according to M. O. Chance, Postmaster of the City of Washington, who addressed the members of the Washington Film Board of Trade at their meeting February 26.

The largest user of the mails, of course, is the United States Government, which supplies possibly fifty per cent of the matter handled out of the Washington postoffice, but as the Government pays no postage it cannot be called a customer. Further, it is pointed out, the city contains no large manufacturing or distributing businesses which in other cities are such good patrons of the service, like the mail-order houses, etc., and the moving picture exchanges are in the aggregate the largest distributors in the Washington territory.

It is estimated by the postal authorities that the exchanges spend more than $180,000 a year with Uncle Sam in this territory alone, for the shipment of films by parcel post. In addition, there are several thousand dollars in postage on first-class mail, the shipping of paper and similar uses. Because of the large amount of money spent with the post office by the moving picture industry, declared the postmaster, the officials of the post office in Washington are eager to co-operate to the fullest possible extent with the moving picture exchanges.

Striking Campaign Books

Some of the best looking campaign books ever gotten out for motion pictures have recently made their appearance at the office of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Those which have reached Moving Picture World's office are on "The Christian," "The Stranger's Banquet," "Vanity Fair" and "Mad Love." All of these, Goldwyn says, are the handiwork of Silas F. Seadler, whom the industry remembers as a former associate of Arthur S. Kane.

The campaign books are about 21½ by 14 inches. The covers catch and hold the eyes and the interior are marvels of artistic layouts and readable type. A hasty survey indicates that the advertising suggestions to exhibitors are unusually meaty. Certainly they are presented clearly and concisely.

Would Place 6% Tax on Amusements

A bill was introduced in the legislature at Albany, N. Y., on the evening of February 26 by Assemblyman C. P. Miller, Republican, of Genesee County, taxing motion picture receipts, as well as the receipts from practically all forms of amusement at which an admission is charged, six per cent of the gross.

It was stated that the bill, if passed, will bring from seven to eight million dollars in the way of additional revenue to the State. It is also rumored that leaders of both parties are favorably inclined toward the bill.

Beats Harmful Bills

Pettijohn Helps Down Legislation That Would Hurt Industry

Twenty-seven bills in different states, harmful to the motion picture industry, were thwarted by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Hays organization, on a recent trip across the continent. He was away four weeks.

Mr. Pettijohn's trip was for the purpose of fighting these bills, 13 of which dealt with censorship and 14 with proposed taxation which would hit the industry. Some of the bills are designed to tax the seating capacity of theatres and the gross receipts of both exhibitors and distributors.

Mr. Pettijohn has now gone to Michigan to combat a censorship bill in the state legislature there.

Brockell in West

Floyd A. Brockell, manager of distribution for Associated First National, who has been making a tour of the First National exchanges since last January, is now in Los Angeles. In addition to looking over the southern California exchange Brockell is also getting an eyeful of First National productions now at work in the United Studios, Hollywood.

Fairbanks Recovery Expected

That the complete recovery of John Fairbanks, brother of Douglas Fairbanks, and who suffered a stroke of paralysis last week, may be expected within the next two months is the latest news from physician in attendance.

Until such time as John Fairbanks can resume his work as general manager of the Douglas Fairbanks picture organization, Douglas himself is filling the post of his brother.

Goldwyn Signs Browning

Tod Browning, noted as a director of big motion picture melodramas, has just signed a long term contract with Goldwyn for whom he will continue to make photodramas in which action and adventure predominate.

For many years Browning has been identified with Universal for which he has directed some of its biggest features.

"Manger" Film Going Strong

Favorable reports regarding the popularity of the Kalem production, "From the Manger to the Cross," during the Lenten season, are now coming in. It is drawing throngs of church people wherever shown.

It appeals to a new set of theatregoers because of the interest in the authentic locations in which the scenes were filmed. The story is laid in and about Jerusalem.

After several years it is again being shown throughout the United States, where it is distributed by Vitagraph.

Selznick Reorganization Is Rapidly Nearing Completion

REORGANIZATION of the Selznick Corporation and its fourteen subsidiary companies, including Selznick Pictures Corporation and Select Pictures Corporation, has been in progress for several weeks and affairs are now rapidly nearing a consummation that will preserve the valuable assets of these concerns, assure the continued distribution of released product and the completion of those pictures now in the making and others already planned.

At a meeting of the general creditors held at the Bar Association, New York, February 16, a committee for the creditors was selected consisting of Hyman Winik, Ralph B. Ittelson, W. C. J. Doolittle, of Utica; M. C. Levee, of Los Angeles, and Charles Payne, of Chicago.

Mr. Doolittle represents the Utica, N. Y., banking interests. Mr. Payne is a prominent Chicago attorney and treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

The creditors' plan of reorganization contemplates that the complications involved in having a number of corporations shall be eliminated and a new corporation will be organized to take over all of the assets. The creditors will receive two-year notes bearing interest at 6 per cent per annum, and whenever there are sufficient funds on hand a distribution of 5 per cent of the amount of the notes will be made pro rata.

Creditors to the amount of more than $1,600,000 gave their approval of the plan at the creditors meeting and the committee has met with success among the remaining creditors.

It will be necessary, the committee points out, that the remaining creditors join the majority as soon as possible so that the complete plan of reorganization may be put into effect immediately, thereby saving present overhead and distribution expense.

Of the new Selznick product "Rupert of Hentzau," "The Common Law" and "Modern Matrimony" are completed. Very flattering reports are had upon the first two of these pictures, and most favorable offers have already been had from West Coast theatres and for the foreign rights. By all accounts "Rupert of Hentzau" and "Common Law" will rank among the season's outstanding pictures. It is planned to release them at once.

The scheme of reorganization plans to get rid of distribution expense as speedily as possible. It may be that the Select exchanges will be continued under new ownership, but at this writing no distribution commitments have been made. The committee in charge has received a number of offers of distribution, both on the new product and that are now in circulation and are considering carefully these offers.

It would appear from information gathered and from the opinion freely expressed in trade circles that with the reorganization quickly under way all debts wil be eventually paid in full and considerable assets left over. After the creditors have been paid the remaining assets will be turned back to the stockholders of the Selznick Corporation and its operations will probably be continued. L. J. Selznick is authority for the statement that the remaining assets will constitute a very substantial sum.

Theatre Helps Churches

Sermons Announced on Screen Gain Big Attendance

Only last week Associated First National in a story for the trade told how ministers and churches were seeking motion pictures for entertainment. This week comes the news that a motion picture theatre is being used Sunday mornings for church services. All of which is a hopeful sign that picture theatres and the church are getting to the point where they can be helpful to each other.

E. Metzger, manager of the Strand, Creston, Iowa, is the man who is making his theatre do both religious and entertainment service.

"A few months ago," declares Mr. Metzger, "I was able to convince the preachers of Creston that the screen of my theatre was the best place to announce their sermons for the coming week or Sunday. In this way they would reach a great number of persons who were not regular church goers.

"A few weeks ago the Congregational Church in this city was desroyed by fire. After the church had held meetings in various halls about the city I offered my theatre for the Sunday morning service. The officials of the church accepted.

"I can see no reason why the picture house of today and the church cannot work together. The church and pictures both show that the just way to live is the right way. Both preach love and show what the wicked get. There is no more wickedness in my Sunday night shows than there is in the parties held in private homes on Sunday."

Fighting Censorship

State Senators and Exhibitors Asked to Urge Repeal of the Law

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A., has written to the members of the New York State Legislature asking their co-operation in repealing the New York State censorship law. The letter points out that "it is unfair and unwise to place in the hands of a few partisan appointees the power that always belonged to all the people."

Communications have also been addressed by Mr. Cohen to the theatre owners of the state, asking them to get in touch with their senators and assemblymen and urge them to aid in having the censorship law repealed. It is pointed out that the forces favoring censorship have already begun a campaign to keep the obnoxious law on the books, and the exhibitors are requested by Mr. Cohen to act quickly and decisively.

McFarland in Europe

The showing of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," in Europe is to be in charge of R. W. McFarland, who was specially engaged for that purpose by Douglas Fairbanks. Mr. McFarland is now in London, where he will make his headquarters. He will have charge of all showings of the picture in the British Isles, Ireland and Continental Europe. While his principal connection will be in London, Mr. McFarland also will have offices in Paris, from which point he will handle matters relating to showings of the production in various other countries of Europe.

To Spend $1,000,000 on Theatre Chain

PLANS for the erection of a theatre in Shenandoah, Pa., to be one of a chain of theatres to be established throughout the county, are well under way. The plans are in the hands of New York architects who specialize in theatre buildings. This firm has recently completed the Rajah Theatre at Reading, as well as theatres at York, Allentown and Bethlehem.

The towns to be included in the chain are Pottsville, Tamaqua, Mahanoy City and Shenandoah, and the company plans the expenditure of not less than $1,000,000 in providing playhouses that will be modern in every way. The corporation will be known as the Anthracite Amusements, Inc., and application has been made for incorporation under the laws of Pennsylvania.

The men behind the movement are all well known and are among the financial and industrial leaders in the county. The officers of the company are as follows: R. D. Heaton, president; Dan J. Ferguson, treasurer; Alfred Gottesman, secretary and general manager.

It is said that the theatres will compare favorably with those in any of the larger cities of the country.

Forty-four Big Films Rejected by Ontario Censors in 1922

APPROXIMATELY two-thirds of all moving pictures viewed by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors for the presentation in the Province of Ontario during 1922 were passed without change or deletion. More than 30 per cent of the pictures examined by the Ontario Board were passed after they had been revised, while 3¾ per cent were rejected as being unfit for presentation in Ontario theatres. The Board passed decision upon 11,000,000 feet of film during the year, this representing about 11,000 reels. These figures are disclosed in a report of the Board's activities during the past year.

Of the rejected pictures, no less than 44 were feature releases of considerable value and of a material standard that might have been considered acceptable for presentation in high-class theatres, it is stated. The reason why most of these features were "canned," it is said, is that they dwelt too forcibly with sex and crime themes.

Samples of "cuts" made during the past year included: Scene of boy lassooing a chicken; close-up of dead man's face; men cutting telephone wires; children smashing windows; girl holding up mounted police officers; sub-title, "Go to Hell"; setting match to hay-stack; girl sitting in man's lap; close-up of American flag; sub-title, "Who's your boot-legger?"; view of native stuck with spears; man on floor showing wound in side; shimmy scene; use of revolver, etc.

It is interesting to note that one of the big pictures rejected by the Ontario Board last year was founded on a very popular novel which had been read by hundreds of thousands. The fact that the book had been widely read did not cause the censors to hesitate to condemn the feature because of its treatment of the unfaithfulness of a man to his wife. Another expensive production which was rejected concerned a man who had used his wife for the furtherance of blackmail schemes.

Utah Exhibitor Cuts Admission Resulting in Increased Business

REPORTS reaching Universal as the result of an investigation instituted by Carl Laemmle, president of that picture corporation, indicate there is a growing tendency among exhibitors suffering from poor business to try box-office price reductions as a patronage builder.

More and more showmen are cutting prices. Almost without exception they report a sudden jump in attendance. This jump is usually so great that it not only makes up for the price reduction, but also adds to the gross and results in better returns from the house.

A striking instance of how price cutting works out, and of the results obtained by one theatre owner who heeded Mr. Laemmle's recent suggestion that smaller admission prices might mean better gross business, is the report received from H. W. Peery, president and manager of the Ogden Theatre Company, Inc., at Ogden, Utah.

"Business was certainly 'off' with my Utah Theatre," wrote Mr. Peery. "Had thought of closing or making over into a grocery store when I was fortunate in seeing your article in a trade paper about reducing admission prices to ten cents.

"Tried this as a last resort two weeks ago and have been playing to capacity ever since."

The article referred to was a statement by Mr. Laemmle concerning the probable advisability of reducing admission prices for those theatres suffering from business slumps. He based his suggestion on the results obtained by several theatres which had come to his attention and in which the attendance had been increased four-fold by a fifty per cent. price cut.

Laemmle Engages Roth

Prominent Exhibitor Made Personal Representative to Universal Head

Eugene H. Roth, one of the country's leading exhibitors, and who until recently was associate managing director of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainments, operating a chain of high class theatres in San Francisco, including the California, the Imperial, the Granada and the Portola, has been engaged as personal representative for Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Company, word has just been received from Universal City at the Universal home office by telegraph.

As an expert in theatre management and exhibitor problems, he will advise Universal as to what the exhibitor wants.

The acquisition of Roth as an exhibitor-conferee is the culminating step in Universal's campaign to approximate a 100 per cent salable product. He already has assumed his duties, and is concentrating his energies at Universal City, where Laemmle, Julius Bernheim, director general of Universal City, and Homer Boushey, production director at the big studio, are in continual conference over Universal's forthcoming product.

Theatre Changes Hands

Hearst Takes Over Park Theatre for Cosmopolitan Productions

Cosmopolitan Productions, of which W. R. Hearst is president, has leased the Park Theatre on Columbus Circle for twenty-one years. It will be entirely remodelled and will be christened the Cosmopolitan, and will be used for the presentation of Cosmopolitan pictures.

It is believed in some quarters that the acquiring of the Park Theatre by the Hearst interests is the forerunner of the starting of a chain of theatres throughout the country.

Joseph Urban will have charge of renovating and redecorating the theatre just acquired, and it is expected to be made one of the most attractive in the country. It will be under the management of John Potter. The Cosmopolitan will be dedicated with the first presentation of "Little Old New York."

Film Board Incorporates

The Washington Film Board of Trade has been incorporated under the laws of the Disrict of Columbia. The incorporation papers set forth that this organization is for the mutual improvement and benefit of the members thereof, and promotion of the arts intimately connected with the motion picture industry. The organization is to operate without profit and there is no capital stock. The incorporators are listed as George A. Falkner, Samuel M. Flax, J. H. Marks, J. A. Bachman, Sidney B. Lust, Edwin A. Sherwood, W. F. Ballenger, F. H. Beaver, George W. Fuller, Louis Reichert, Samuel A. Galanty, and R. C. Robin.

Attendance Falls

Moving picture attendance apparently has fallen off, reports of admission taxes just issued by the Bureau of Internal Revenue showing a total of $6,766,208 collected during the month of January, as compared with $6,825,249 for the month of December. The January collections, however, were more than $300,000 above those of January, 1922, when $6,453,483 was received. In addition to the admission tax there was collected during the month of January $37,035 from the special tax on theatres, museums, circuses, etc.

Starts Big Drive Abroad

Famous Players Launches Advertising Campaign in Great Britain

A national advertising campaign for Paramount pictures designed to reach the exhibitors and public of Great Britain has been launched by the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Paramount distributors in the United Kingdom, of which John Cecil Graham is managing director. This campaign has been patterned along the lines of the national advertising campaign conducted in this country by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and, according to advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the company's foreign department, has been eminently successful.

Approximately one-hundred newspapers, divided into three groups in accordance with their size, are being used in this advertising campaign, the first of its kind to be launched in Great Britain. The individual Paramount pictures are being hooked up with the trade mark and with the name of the local theatre in order to keep public attention focused on three points. These are the Paramount trade mark, the particular picture advertised and the theatre in which Paramount pictures and the individual picture can be seen.

Preparing for Convention

Illinois Exhibitors Busy with Local Plans for National Meet

Preparations for the national convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which will be held in the Coliseum, Chicago, from May 19 to 26 inclusive, had several interesting developments during the week.

Interest is at a high pitch among theatre owners because of the many happenings of great consequence to the business recently. This convention bids fair to make substantial advances in the developments of the independent energies within the industry and on that account it holds the attention of those in all divisions.

Leading fire insurance authorities in the United States will address the theatre owners at the convention on the question of insurance and will show the savings effected through the processes put into vogue in his and other sections of the country.

A committe consisting of members of the Rotary, Kiwannis, Lions, Civic and Exchange Clubs of the United States with theatre owner membership classification, will meet and agree upon and present a code of business ethics to prevail as far as practicable within the motion picture industry.

Illinois and Chicago theatre owners are busy with the local arrangements. Special arrangements have been made with all passenger associations for all parts of the United States granting reduced railroad rates, these rates being fare and one-half for the round trip.

Gives Machine to Lepers

Lepers on the island of Canilos off the coast of Panama are to have the dreariness of their lives relieved somewhat in the future by motion pictures. Thomas Meighan has presented them a projection machine through arrangement with Senor Parraz, President of the Republic of Panama, and films are to be sent by Paramount from New York at regular intervals.

Opens New Branch

The Al Lichtman Corporation has opened a new office at 8 South Church Street, Charlotte, N. C. J. U. McCormick has been appointed manager of this branch.

Federal Trade Commission Sets Hearing Date

APRIL 23 has been set by the Federal Trade Commission as the date on which hearings will be opened on the formal amended complaint recently issued against Famous Players-Lasky and a number of other moving picture concerns. The hearings will be held in New York City, as being more convenient than Washington.

The case against the moving picture companies and their officers has been pending for some time, complaints originally having been issued last fall and answers to the charges filed with the commission by the various respondents.

It is expected that the hearings will go deeply into the inter-relationship of the various companies named in the complaint and the activities of Famous Players in getting the control which the commission alleges it now has over the moving picture industry in this country.

S. L. Rothafel Finds English Friendly to American Films

TO most people the thought of a seventeen-day trip across the Atlantic and back in the teeth of February gales would be nothing short of harrowing, but to S. L. Rothafel it served as his first vacation since undertaking the direction of the Capitol Theatre. He returned last week from his round trip voyage on board the Berengaria radiating renewed health and vigor and the enthusiasm which is necessary to create a program every week fifty-two times a year.

Mr. Rothafel's four days in London were eventful ones. They began with a luncheon at the Trocadoro given by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association and attended by all the notables of the British film industry and closed with a reception in Brighton on the eve of his departure.

The outstanding impression of his short visit is the cordiality and friendly feeling toward the American film industry.

Mr. Rothafel said in his offices at the Capitol Theatre yesterday: "The bugaboo of antipathy toward Americans and American films is unfounded. The spirit of cordiality they showed was marvelous and serves to end the rumor that British film interests are trying to boycott American productions. They received me simply as one of them and gave me an ovation I shall never forget."

English Exhibitor Tells How He "Kidnapped" Charlie Chaplin

CASTLETON KNIGHT, general manager of the Majestic Theatre, Clapham, near London, whose ruse won for him the only "personal appearance" Charlie Chaplin made at a theatre while in England, is in America to study theatre exploitation conditions, and to get "close ups" of studios in Hollywood. He is always glad to tell of his capture of the First National comedian.

"I flew over to Cherbourg and met Chaplin when he arrived and in an off-hand way he promised to come and see me at Clapham. He spent so much time in France that when he came to England he had only two days to remain before sailing for America. I knew I had to get him quickly or not at all. So I drove a handsome limousine to the aviation station where Chaplin arrived from France. I spread the word everywhere that I was there to meet Chaplin. Fearful that he would remember me, I disguised myself as a chauffeur wearing a small mustache. When Chaplin came out of the customs barrier, the bobbies, believing mine was the right car, ushered Chaplin into it, saying: 'Here's your car, Mr. Chaplin.' I took the back roads and sped along at forty miles an hour. Only once did the man with Chaplin question me, and I told him the main roads were town up. It was a twelve-mile drive. I pulled up in front of the Majestic Theatre, pulled off my disguise, and said:

"Mr. Chaplin, I'm the general manager of this theatre, and I kidnapped you because you promised to make an appearance at my theatre.' At first I didn't know whether he intended to fight, but he soon roared with laughter and said:

"'Pretty good. I'll do it. But I must hurry, as I have an appointment to meet Lloyd George in London.'

"I didn't have a chance to advertise Chaplin, and when he appeared on the stage my audience didn't believe he was the famous comedian until he took off his hat and smiled. He made quite a little speech.

"Chaplin said to me before he left: 'Why did you disguise yourself?' I told him I feared he would recognize me from Cherbourg. 'Why, I never would have known you without the disguise.'"

Jeffrey Joins Lichtman

George S. Jeffrey has just joined the Al Lichtman Corporation as special representative and will open the new Buffalo exchange. Mr. Jeffrey has been associated with Mr. Lichtman in different capacities for the past five years. He was with him at Famous Players as sales manager for the Dominion of Canada and served in a similar capacity in the East when Mr. Lichtman was connected with Associated Producers.

Demand for Universal Product in England Growing Rapidly

THE story of the entry of European Motion Picture Co., Ltd., the new franchise-holders of Universal product, into the British fields reads like a romance. In the mid-months of 1922, Mr. Edwin J. Smith, now the managing director of the European Motion Picture Co., Ltd., fresh from his highly-successful management of the Universal exchanges of the Atlantic Division in the U. S., landed in London with two New York assistants. Securing premises in the overcrowded metropolis, and especially in "the Street of Films," is no easy task, but this was safely accomplished; and Mr. Smith, a few weeks later managed to secure a five-floored building in Wardour street.

Fully Equipped Building

It contains a private projection theatre accommodating 100 people, and various offices, including travelers' and reception rooms, executive offices, contracts, accounts, publicity, editing, and posters departments and enough elbow room for extension. The latter precaution has already proved a wise one, as already various other rooms have had to be taken in to provide for its rapidly-growing business in the Universal product.

In view of the fact that it is the policy of the European Motion Picture Co. to release simultaneously with American releases, the task of breaking into the British territory was beset with obstacles. English exhibitors had packed up their date books with advance bookings, many of which related to older Universal features which had been booked as far ahead as the end of 1924. The second obstacle was a more formidable one—block bookings, and the demand from exhibitors that the new Universal output should also be block-booked; the alternative offered being that contracts be refused. The latter course was chosen.

In barely six months the British turnover has reached 75 per cent. of the total usually expected for twelve months in this zone. Universal serials have had brilliant success. Twenty-four of the later Universal attractions have already been released, and those four super Jewels—"Human Hearts," "Heart of a Wolf," "The Storm," and "Foolish Wives" have also been released. Stroheim's masterpiece had a London presentation at the New Oxford Theatre, where it ran for 90 performances, finishing up on November 7. The first London release of "Foolish Wives" took place on November 20, when it ran concurrently at twenty of London's leading picture theatres, Since then it has been screened at most of the leading key towns, and in every case constant queues were reported—one exhibitor's principal complaint being the heavy charges made by the police for controlling his crowds.

It has been left to the European company to emphasize the importance of "short stuff" to the British exhibitors who, so far, do not carry out any consecutive plan about inserting "shorts" in their program. It has succeeded in establishing a brisk and continuous trade in this line, with the result that Century Comedies, two-reel dramas, and one-reel comedies, are fast finding a footing on exhibitors' programs. The European Motion Picture Co. is the first organization in England to run a special department for "short products."

Phenomenal Success

The phenomenal success of the first series of "The Leather Pushers," with Reginald Denny as "star," has produced a crop of inquiries for the second set. Century Comedies, particularly with their animal "stars" and Baby Peggy, are taking fast hold in public favor. As to the serial business, European's quick releases placed them at a disadvantage, exhibitors being usually booked for a clear year ahead. Nevertheless, record figures have been achieved with "Robinson Crusoe," "Perils of Yukon," and "Buffalo Bill," while some managers have been so delighted with the standard of the Universal serials that they are now fixing up for "The Radio King."

Having established the London headquarters, the next task was the fixing up of provincial exchanges—a thorny one, owing to the vexatious fire restrictions set up by local authorities in regard to film premises. This has now been safely accomplished, and today the European banner bearing the Universal ensign floats over eight of the key cities in the United Kingdom, including Birmingham, Cardiff, Dublin, Glasgow, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle-on-Tyne. Branch managers have been fixed in each city, and an organization installed which, while making each branch a self-contained unit, is based on the same efficient organization lines as London headquarters.

Exports 13,000,000 Feet

Japan Best Market for Unexposed Film

Exports of nearly thirteen million feet of moving picture film—2,400 miles—valued at more than a half million dollars, are reported for December by the Department of Commerce.

Foreign shipments for one month included 1,891,558 feet of unexposed film, valued at $50,788; 714,488 feet of exposed negatives, with a value of $65,874; and 10,800,927 feet of positive film, worth $447,830.

Our best market for unexposed film was Japan, which took during the month 904,442 feet, valued at $24,853, although twelve other countries also made small imports. The largest purchaser of negatives was England, whose total for the month was 441,526 feet, valued at $40,970, the remainder of the month's exports being scattered in small amounts among thirteen other markets. In positives, Australia led with imports of 1,643,075 feet, valued at $70,909; followed by Canada with 1,456,084 feet, valued at $65,666.

No One Will Miss 'Em

Governor Alfred E. Smith, in a message to the Legislature asking for a reorganization of State departments and bureaus, provides for the total abolition of seven bureaus. The New York State Motion Picture Commission is included among the seven. In his message Governor Smith said that the motion picture censorship board could be abolished without any one feeling its loss.

Kill Censorship Bill

The Steele moving picture censorship bill was killed on second reading in the Indiana Senate on Monday, February 26, when the Senate adopted a motion by Senator Harold Vanorman, of Evansville, to postpone indefinitely further consideration of the measure. The bill flickered out by a vote of 40 to 4, following a lively debate.

Meet with Postal Heads

Washington Film Board of Trade Has Special Meeting

Postmaster Merritt O. Chance and J. H. Schooley, superintendent of mails, of the Washington, D. C. post office, were the guests of the Washington Film Board of Trade at a luncheon at the Hotel Harrington. It was the desire of the exchange managers to get in closer touch with the postal officials and several matters of considerable importance were taken up with them.

Sidney B. Lust, of Super Films, Inc., who has been very active in matters pertaining to postal and express service, sought the co-operation of the postmaster in securing an order from the Postmaster General providing for the return of undelivered films. He pointed out that the exchanges are put to a great deal of inconvenience due to delays where the postmasters, particularly those in the small towns, hold films until they can get instructions from the exchanges regarding their disposition. Mr. Chance stated he would take the matter up with the department.

Mr. Chance was also asked to see if arrangements could be made whereby a receipt could be secured by the exchanges covering shipments of paper. It was pointed out that where a shipment of posters goes astray the exchange has nothing to show even for its acceptance by the postal service.

The luncheon meeting was presided over by President R. C. Robin (Pathe), who thanked the members for the handsome lamp that had been sent to him as a wedding present by the Film Board of Trade.

Daylight saving in Maryland is also holding the attention of the exchange managers, many of whom are backing the opposition both morally and financially. The adoption of State legislation "monkeying" with the clock, it is pointed out, will result in heavy losses to the exhibitors and this in turn will be reflected in the business of the exchanges.

Ben Blumenthal and David Howells are deserving of praise for their courage and intelligence in testing the public appeal of "Othello" before a New York audience at the Criterion Theatre. And we are pleased to note that the response is encouraging.

There has been a remarkable revival of interest in Shakespeare on the legitimate stage this year, and it is pleasing to state that Emil Jannings and Werner Kraus in this screen version, fully uphold the screen's prestige in any comparison with the stage.

The Editor.

Favorable Report on Ticket Sales

Both houses of the Missouri Legislature have received committee reports favorable to the enactment of bills to prohibit the sale of theatre tickets after every seat in the theatre is occupied. Senator Pickett introduced the Senate bill and Representative Con O'Brien, the House measure.

The Private Corporations Committee of the House has reported unfavorably on the anti-chain store bill. This would have effected chains of motion picture houses under one management, although intended to hit chain drug and grocery stores. Through a graduated schedule of licenses the bill would have made the operation of more than four houses prohibitive.

Rabell Lands Plum

Independent Movie Supply Co. Made Sole Agency for Power's Projectors

William H. Rabell, president of the Independent Movie Supply Company, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, announces that his company has been made the exclusive distributor of Power's projectors in New York, New Jersey north of Trenton and part of Connecticut. In Connecticut the Independent Movie Supply Company will distribute Power's Projectors throughout the state but the right to sell exclusively is limited to a line west of the 72°30'.

Offhand, this does not seem to be a big territory, but when you consider that about one-eighth of the population of the United States is concentrated within this comparatively limited area it will be seen that the franchise is a valuable one and that the transaction is one of the most important made for some time in the cine machinery industry.

William H. Rabell is one of the best known and most successful motion picture equipment dealers in the United States and the Independent Movie Supply Company has been made distributor of Power's as a well deserved reward for its success in handling Power's Projectors under the more limited rights heretofore granted by the Nicholas Power Company. Although the Independent has been handling Power's for about two years this firm has installed Power's Projectors in a large number of well known motion picture houses, but Mr. Rabell is now putting into effect plans for going after business on a much larger scale and in a more vigorous manner.

The Independent Movie Supply Company also has branches at Albany and Buffalo, New York, and New Haven, Conn., and other branches will be added if it is found necessary to develop new business and to give efficient service to the customers of this company.

On Visit to Coast

Max Balaban and Maurice Katz, heads of the big chain of theatres in Chicago are out in Los Angeles paying a visit to the First National releasing units now all at work at the United Studios.

M. P. T. O. Argue Against Music Tax and Attack Will Hays

At a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, at the Hotel Vendig, Philadelphia, which was attended by about 65 members, Secretary George P. Aarons, urged all exhibitors within a radius of 50 miles of Philadelphia not to pay the music tax and declared that the organization would defend any action brought by the Society of American Authors, Composers and Publishers against the organization's members in that district.

Outside of this territory where hearings are held in Scranton or Harrisburg he advised individual exhibitors to pay the tax under protest, purely for economic reasons, declaring that the cost of defending an action in Scranton or Harrisburg would be considerably more than the amount of the license fee. Such fees paid under protest would be returned to the exhibitors in the event of the present cases now pending being decided against the Society.

New Members Admitted

Four new members were admitted into the organization: The Pastime Theatre, Media; Bryn Mawr Theatre, Bryn Mawr; Fifty-sixth Street Theatre, Philadelphia, and Hill's Theatre, Paulsboro, N. J.

Billy Wolf, representing the Thomas H. Cusack Company, asked for the theatre owners' cooperation in combatting the 5-cent per square foot billboard tax now in the Legislature. Pres. H. J. Schad announced the appointment of standing committees for the year.

Sam Stiefel, of the Poplar and Fairmount Theatres, protested against what he termed the high prices being asked for the new Harold Lloyd comedies.

A resolution was adopted against the practice of running double feature and a request for cooperation on this resolution forwarded to the Film Board of Trade.

An excellent entertainment and luncheon were provided by Lowen Pizor, Chairman of the entertainment committee.

Attack Hays

Four days later, Tuesday, February 20, at a testimonial dinner tendered by the organization to Harry Stevenson, in the gold room of the Adelphia Hotel, Philadelphia, at least two of the speakers took a fling at the president of the Motion picture Producers and Distributors.

M. J. O'Toole, Chairman of the public service committee of the M. P. T. O. A., in the course of an able address which was punctuated by frequent applause, questioned the sincerity of Will Hays' policy of "confidence and cooperation," declaring that he was simply a paid employee of the producers and represented them as such in the industry. Harry Knapp, chairman of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, declared that Mr. Hays was retained by the producers to kill censorship throughout the country and not to elevate the moral tone of pictures.

Another speaker was Ed. Fay, proprietor of Fay's Theatres in Philadelphia, Rochester and Providence, R. I., who touched humorously upon some previous remarks on the floor by George Dembow, who had complimented, in his remarks, the Film Board of Trade. The Fox Exchange is not a member of the Film Board of Trade.

Oscar Neufeld, president of the Film Board of Trade, praised the part Mr. Stevenson played in creating the joint arbitration board, which is functioning so successfully at present.

The resonant baritone of Secretary George P. Aarons was used to good effect in broadcasting the virtues of the guest of the evening.

George Kline proved an acceptable chief of the commissary department. Another who distinguished himself by his activities was Charlie Dutkin as announcer and stage manager.

Stevenson Given Watch

Following the regular order of speakers probably the biggest hit of the evening was scored by Joe Cunningham, staff cartoonist of "The Exhibitor" who, in his dry, inimitable fashion, convulsed the gathering with an uproariously funny analysis of the different speakers' remarks.

At the conclusion of the speaking Mr. Stevenson was presented with an engraved gold watch as a token of the esteem in which he is held by his fellow theatremen.

Considerable praise is due the committee composed of Sam Hyman, Ben Fertel and Charlie Dutkin, headed by Lew Pizor, for what was at the conclusion of the evening pronounced one of the most enjoyable affairs of its kind held in years. Perfect arrangements, an excellent dance orchestra, a fine repast and a harmony of good fellowship pervading the affair kept the gathering until the last minute of the schedule.

Report Film Stolen

Exhibitors are urged to be on the lookout for a five reel feature "Boss of Camp Four," a western, reported by the Fox Film Corporation, Washington, D. C., to the police of that city, as having been stolen from a local exchange on February 18. It is stated that someone unknown broke the glass window in a door at the rear of the exchange thereby gaining entry and left undetected with the case containing the five reels. An employe of the exchange heard the noise but paid no attention to it. The loss was noticed when the exchange was opened for the day. The case had been delivered just before it was stolen, having been brought to the Fox Film Corporation by express.

Would Prevent Sunday Shows

The Arkansas Legislature has before it a bill to prevent Sunday shows, golf, baseball, tennis, football, fishing, hunting and other sports and amusement, while an amendment has been submitted to the Senate to include in the "blue class" Sunday church collections. (On the theory that it is commercial and against the mandate of the Master, who drove the money changers out of the Temple), Sunday newspapers, railway trains and automobile driving. Recently a bill to permit Sunday baseball was killed. The new bill was sent in for revenge.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Bad Storms in Northwest; Showmen Visit Legislature

Owing to unprecedented weather conditions which prevailed last week, Seattle and the entire Northwest was in the grip of one of the worst storms on record. Business in all lines was practically paralyzed. Trains were delayed and held up, trolleys, power and telephone service were all suspended by heavy snows and extreme cold, which ended locally in a damaging "silver thaw."

With several splendid offerings on at local theatres, business suffered in spite of extensive exploitation campaigns which would have drawn large crowds under normal conditions. Exhibitors were game, and little or no "crying" was heard. Among the offerings were "The Stranger's Banquet," "Hottentot," "Flame of Life," and "Singed Wings." Attendance, which picked up as soon as conditions were bettered, resulted in a holdover for two of the pictures.

Seattle was host for a brief period to practically every exhibitor in the state on Friday, when the boys gathered here while a special train was made up to carry them to Olympia where the state legislature is in session. The purpose of the trip was as a protest against a proposed 10 per cent. tax on theatre admissions, at a public hearing Saturday evening, February 17.

The protest was decided upon at a mass meeting held in Pantages Theatres. L. O. Lukan, general manager of the Blue Mouse Theatres, Seattle, and president of the Allied Amusement Interests of Washington, was in charge of the special train. Senator E. J. Cleary, chairman of the committee on revenue and taxation, presided. The Senate chamber and gallery were crowded during the hearing. Without exception the speakers declared that the tax would result in many theatres, particularly the small picture theatres, being forced out of business.

Manager Lukan pointed out that with the present 10 per cent. federal tax on theatre tickets, managers of houses throughout the state were often confronted with the necessity for paying the federal tax out of losses instead of profits. He cited as an illustration, the theatre with an overhead expense of $3,000 a week, its box office receipts being $3,500, paying the government $300 of the amount above its overhead, and the same theatre with the state tax imposed, its receipts cut to $2,500 but its overhead continuing at $3,000, paying $250 to the government and $250 more to the state on top of a loss of $500. Reduction in patronage, he declared, would bring about that condition. The theatre owners could not and the patrons would not pay an additional tax.

From a business viewpoint the tax would be ruinous to the theatres, William O. Cutts, manager of the Seattle Columbia, explained. Seattle's theatres alone pay taxes on $1,500,000 worth of property and equipment exclusive of any real estate, and pay $1,000,000 a year in wages. In addition, they pay five other forms of taxes not imposed on other lines of business. Addition of another 10 per cent. tax would drive patronage away and close many theatres, resulting in a reduced number of persons employed and a corresponding reduction in payroll.

The viewpoint of the small town theatre owners was capably presented by Clarence Farrell of the Colonial Theatre, Ellensburg. F. C. Bradley, of the Musicians' Union, Seattle, stated that already 700 out of their 1,100 members are unemployed and that further theatre closings would increase the number of musicians out of work and would likewise effect stagehands, projectionists and others connected with the operation of theatres.

Picturing the effect of the 10 per cent. federal tax, William Quimby, Bellingham theatre operator, told the committee that his theatre had been operated profitably on a 15-cent admission charge prior to the federal tax. The tax on a 15-cent ticket being 2 cents he first tried a 17-cent charge. Patronage fell off, and it was impossible to make a profit. He next tried 20 cents, but still could not make income meet expenses The price was then advanced to 25 cents where a profit was made until increased cost of operation and improvements in the theatre again made an advance of 10 cents necessary, forcing the price up to 35 cents, where it is today.

"To get 2 cents for the government, we were forced to raise our prices 10 cents Another 10 per cent. tax would force another 10 cent raise and the people would not pay it," declared Mr. Quimby.

Duncan Inverarity of Seattle, representing the vaudeville interests, cited the unusual circumstances of capital and labor, the owners and operators and the theatrical workers, coming to Olympia voluntarily in their own common interests to defend their means of livelihood from the imposition of a tax which, he declared, would stifle it.

Numerous other speeches were made, all interesting, enlightening and driving home, without room for doubt, the impossibility of the theatrical and moving picture interests meeting the proposed tax. No word has yet been heard from Olympia, but the fact that a proposed state income tax was defeated yesterday, gives rise to the hope that the combined efforts of the moving picture and theatrical interests have not been in vain.

On Saturday, February 17, Jensen & Von Herberg opened the Liberty Theatre in Astoria, Oregon. The house is said to be temporary, to be replaced later by a large, high-class theatre. The present structure seats 800.

J. B. Beckman, formerly salesman for First National in the eastern Washington territory, has recently become manager of the Rialto Theatre, Wenatchee. F. E. Wesp, formerly manager of the Rialto, is now managing the Colonial Theatre, Seattle, for John Danz.

JUST AS IN THE GOOD, OLD DAYS

"Pop" Dibble, the Daddy of 'Em All, cranks his ancient Edison No. 1 for the International News cameraman. You'll find it in International News No. 18, shipped from New York on February 23, and you'd better run it because "Pop" shows the makings of a great "movie" actor. He's already proprietor, manager, publicity man and projectionist of the Park Theatre, Branford, Conn. "Pop"—not George—does it, eh, what?

Minneapolis

Art Landry and his Commodore band, which was featured at the State last week, appeared on the program of another Finkelstein and Ruben house the. week of February 24 when the band goes to the Garrick Theatre, Duluth. The orchestra is proving a good box office attraction.

P. F. Schwie, resident manager for Finkelstein and Ruben at Duluth, was in Minneapolis recently arranging dates for the Duluth showing of "Robin Hood" at the Garrick Theatre. The Zelda Theatre, another Duluth house recently purchased by "F-R," is closed to permit extensive renovating, alterations and general improvement. It will re-open soon.

At least one Minnesotan and one Minnesota newspaper is doing something constructive for the motion picture industry. A letter written to the Fairmont, Minn., Sentinal in which conditions in Hollywood are described, was given prominent position in last week's issue of the paper. It was written by Fred Hadley, a subscriber of the paper. Mr. Hadley wrote: "Probably no place in the world is so well advertised as Hollywood. And probably no place in the world is more maligned and misunderstood." Mr. Hadley wrote in detail of conditions as he found them there.

Theatre-less towns of Southern Minnesota will be served by a new organization known as the Community Entertainment Bureau and fostered by the Rev. T. F. Tucker, a minister at Lynd, Minn. The Rev. Tucker plans to serve sixty towns with both picture and dramatic entertainment. The programs will be given "under canvas." The plan, according to reports, is to get 100 business men in each community to pledge 25 cents each week for incidental expenses.

Insisting she is not trying to reform the screen, but wants an antidote for present day form of pictures, Miss Elizabeth Hall, assistant superintendent of Minneapolis public schools, will go to Cleveland next week to attend the National Educational Association meeting, with the idea that screen reforms are needed.

Miss Hall will discuss a recent Minneapolis murder in which three boys figured, in an effort to push action on a new type of films for use in class rooms. She will ask the association to enlist the aid of Will Hays in changing the tone of the "murder movie."

The State Theatre, a picture house, declared a "Theodore Roberts Night," and the veteran character actor was a guest at a banquet tendered by local Paramount forces. Newspapers published stories and pictures of his visit. Mr. Roberts was seen at the Orpheum in a sketch.

Eugene O'Brien will be the second screen star within two weeks to make a personal appearance here. He will be seen at the local legit house in a four-act play "Steve." Exhibitors and exchange men plan to entertain O'Brien during his Minneapolis visit.

"Robin Hood" opened the fourth week at the Garrick Theatre Saturday. This picture is having the longest run in Minneapolis recorded for several seasons.

One hundred persons rushed from a picture theatre at Benson, Minn., Tuesday night when a fire which started in the operating booth threatened to spread to the auditorium of the theatre. The manager of the theatre was operating the picture machine when the fire started.

There Are Stills and Stills

John A. Schwalm, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, was recently approached by one of his close friends—Schwalm says he was so close he would make Shylock look like a spendthrift. The friend in question, after glancing furtively in all directions to make sure that the coast was clear, inquired in whispered tones if he could obtain a little "hootch."

Schwalm, believing the man to be joking, replied, with his characteristic quick wit, that his friend should go inside and see the picture, because the female star possessed intoxicating beauty. The friend insisted, however, that he was in earnest, and upon further inquiry it was learned that he had overheard part of a conversation held with a film salesman in the lobby of the theatre a few evenings previous, when Schwalm had made the remark, "Those last stills you shipped me were the finest I have ever seen, and sure brought me a lot of customers."

armed with fishing tackle, rod and gun set forth with a couple of congenial companions for the beautiful Cascade Mountains. Fish were as scarce as moving picture fans during the recent snow storm. Tiring of angling, Mike chucked the tackle and struck for the tall timbers, later emerging with his companions and three very dead black bears. Mike says he will not put on the story of "Goldilocks" at the Top Notch.

Exhibitors of Chelan, Okanogan and Omak, Washington, have plans for a booking combination to buy pictures together. It is understood the arrangement will be primarily to simplify shipping problems, regulate express and freight rates, etc. A meeting will be held early in June, at which time the exact terms of the organization will be made public. Mrs. R. E. Culp, C. P. Scates and R. A. Kelsey are sponsoring the movements. At present it is proposed to buy film together for six months ahead.

Manager Case of the Columbia, in a successful effort to entice the few pedestrians, stranded office employes and other unwilling victims of last week's weather into his "parlor," caused a piping hot sign to be placed at a tempting angle in the lobby. The sign bore the legend that "'The Flame of Life' will warm your hearts and a cup of hot coffee will cheer you. Served free, all you want, in the foyer."

John Morrison, actor and singer of Irish melodies, who was accompanying the film "Silver Threads Among the Gold" on a personal tour, died suddenly of heart failure at a Tacoma theatre on February 16, while singing his favorite song. His wife, known on the stage as Elsie Clifton, an accompanist, was with him. The film which was to run at the Tacoma theatre for two days, was continued as a benefit to the widow. Mr. Morrison had been an Eagle for twenty years. His home was in Portland.

Charges were dismissed in police court recently by Judge John B. Gordon against James McNab and Norman Williams, operators employed in the Danz picture houses, of having placed chemical bombs in a leading theatre here. The court held that the specific facts set forth in the complaint were not proven.

A review of "The Gentleman From America" was arranged by Manager Case of the Columbia for the boys of the American Legion, just prior to the opening. They turned out in goodly numbers and, it is reported, got quite a kick out of the picture. A lobby draped with American flags helped to attract attention to the new offering, which went on during the middle of the week.

The Coliseum is very conservative in its method of exploitation and rarely steps out on a lobby trim. However, with the showing of "Shadows" long heralded as a wonderful box office attraction, they spread themselves on an attractive lobby, done with compo board to simulate bamboo, etc., in Chinese effect. Usherettes were also dainty and attractive in Chinese costumes. The efforts were justified by capacity business.

Oliver G. Wallace, for years the popular organist at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, is coming again to the Liberty as guest-organist with "Robin Hood" which opens for an indefinite run February 24. Wallace is now chief organist with the Granada, San Francisco. The Liberty's giant organ is one of the finest instruments of its kind, and that Wallace loved every unit of it was proven by his interpretations while he occupied its console. Prior to becoming the Liberty's organist, he played the Clemmer Theatre organ in the old days, under Jim Clemmer. Needless to say he has hosts of friends in Seattle, who are looking forward to a treat during his engagement here. It has been tentatively promised that Wallace "fans" will have an opportunity to hear him in special concert during his visit to the Liberty.

Thrill 'Em to Heat Theatre

Latest official advice from the scientists:

To exhibitors: Give 'em a thriller and they'll warm themselves, for while the average person in repose gives off 425 heat units, the number increases by leaps and bounds as excitement becomes intense, and the temperature of the theatre jumps accordingly. That's what Prof. Miller of the Massachusetts Institute of Technolggy asserts. The New York World puts it this way: "Be Useful! Go to the Theatre, Get Excited and Be a Radiator."

To distributors (advertising suggestions): "Why pay $25 a ton for coal? Book 'Lilly's Lithe Lover' and open the windows." "Cut your coal bills in half! 'The Sheik in the Boarding School' (20,000 heat units) will make the radiators sizzle."

To accessories dealers: "Calm that feverish patron! We carry a complete line of individual fire extinguishers, guaranteed up to 50,000 heat units, subtly perfumed." "Our cooling system the best! Circulates inside as well as outside the patron. Be just to the home-town folks!"

More About the Jazzy Titles, This Time from an Exhibitor

F. M. Francis, manager of the Charlesfon Theatre Company, Charleston, Ill., writes to tell Robert E. Welsh, our editor, of the "kick" he got from that part of the editorial of February 10 that related to titles of pictures.

"There are two forthcoming releases from two of the most important companies in the business with titles including the word 'jazz,'" he says. "We for one so far have passed up buying these subjects on account of their titles. Do the men back there stop to think of the average small town and the possibilities of titles, or do they just take in consideration the eight or ten big cities in the country when they pick a title like 'Children of Jazz' or 'Jazzmania?'

"We live in a town of about 6,000 and so do, no doubt, a lot of other exhibitors. The word 'jazz' is only spoken in terms of bad reference in our community and by the lower classes only. We have yet to hear an intelligent person of either sex or any age mention the word in every-day conversation.

"We get a lot of calls daily, asking us about our programs for the day. Naturally mothers will call up (especially these trying times) and ask what we are to show. What are we to answer? 'Childen of Jazz,' a very fine picture, or 'Jazzmania,' with May Murray? Can you imagine the result? Could I expect that mother to send the children to the show that day?

"Can't those people back there think of titles that can be called 'family titles' and which could be discussed at home and at the table among families, and do some good to the theatres? Can you imagine a father or a mother discussing or explaining any of the titles mentioned above in talks with their children?

"We are proud of having our ministers patronize our theatre. What a feeling if I were to be asked by one of our ministers, "What are you showing today?' Producers should think this over. It would do some good; at least we hope it does. Give us good titles. Leave the 'jazz stuff' out. It will do nobody good."

Mr. Francis evidently is highly esteemed by the townspeople of Charleston and justly entitled to their confidence. Further proof of that is supplied in the form of an appreciative letter addressed to Mr. Francis by the Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Fisher, of the First Christian Church, Charleston. Read it and you will not wonder that Mr. Francis is so intent on contributing all within his power to civic advancement.

"We thank you most sincerely," the letter says, "for your splendid Christmas remembrance. We will accept every opportunity possible to enjoy the high-class entertainment which you are providing for the people of Charleston. We feel that there is no finer medium than the motion picture to convey constructive impressions and suggestions. The people of Charleston are to be congratulated that they have a man of your moral balance and high ideals to direct its entertainment. We wish for you during the New Year continued prosperity and happiness."

Wisconsin Picture Interests Win First Madison Skirmish

Wisconsin motion picture interests appear to have won their first skirmish in the present legislative session at Madison. After listening to leaders in the picture industry, supported by members of various censorship boards, the senate state affairs committee indicated that it would recommend indefinite postponement of the Teasdale bill, aimed at the motion picture business.

The measure would bar children under 16 from picture theatres unless accompanied by their parents or guardians and unless the picture had been approved by the National Board of Review or a local censor board.

Representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, various film exchanges, censor boards and independent exhibitors informed the senators in convincing terms that the Teasdale bill is unnecessary.

"Our organization constantly is alert to keep the motion picture industry clean," Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary of the Wisconsin exhibitors' organization told the committee. "We need no further legislation to better conditions. Our organization is working hand in hand with kindred organizations. The proposed measure would be a needless burden inasmuch as it would require a local board of review in every city, village and town of the state."

Mr. Baumann's views were backed by F. J. McWilliams, manager of the Grand Theatre at Madison and president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, and Fred C. Seegert, Milwaukee exhibitor. Both declared that experience has shown that children can go to picture shows in Wisconsin in safety.

The seriousness of the non-theatrical menace in Wisconsin was demonstrated recently when an organized attack threatened for a time to block the proposed building of a picture theatre in Shorewood, Milwaukee's aristocratic suburb, on the grounds that school movies already filled the needs.

Those behind the theatre project succeeded in repulsing the attack only after weeks of wrangling, during which residents of the suburb, led by the educational heads, appeared before the village board and demanded that the permit be revoked.

No sooner had the Kel-Nau Amusement Company made known its plans to erect a theatre as a part of a $200,000 store and apartment building, than the protest was sounded. A committee from two parent-teacher associations, the school board and the board of industrial education were almost solidly opposed to the theatre.

Members of the committee pointed to Winnetka, Ill., as an example to be followed in barring theatres. They argued that the school could well take care of what motion pictures are needed. With equipment furnished by the industrial board of education, pictures could be shown at a lower cost in the school than in the theatre.

The fight in the suburb was watched with interest throughout the state in view of the campaign mapped out against non-theatrical competition at the recent mid-winter convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin. Speakers at the convention pointed out that Wisconsin is the hotbed of such competition and that theatre men must band together for a finish fight.

Texas

H. H. (Jack) Hollman, Burnturnet movie proprietor, was arrested at that place last week by federal officers on charges that he is withholding admission tax collections due the United States government. The charge is one of embezzlement, Hollman being the government's agent in the collecting of tax from patrons. It is understood he claims the tax is not due the government. Government revenue officials assert that $1,295 is due from Hollman, who is proprietor of the Lyric Airdome and Strand theatres.

Frank Wilkie, arraigned before Justice of the Peace C. O. Walling at Burnturnet, Texas, charged with operating a picture show on Sunday, was found guilty and a fine of $50 and costs was assessed. The case will be appealed to the higher court. Mr. Wilkie is proprietor of the Liberty Theatre and it was brought out in the trial that when the theatre operated on Sunday, patrons were admitted to the show upon purchasing a box of candy at the entrance instead of by paying the customary admission price.

L. G. Bissinger, manager of the Washington Theatre at Dallas, has returned from a trip to the Pacific Coast.

Cincinnati Still Laughing About Dr. Jack, the Quack

Manager I. Libson of the Strand Theatre, is enjoying many hearty laughs at the expense of Health Commissioner Peters over the recent screening of "Dr. Jack." Several weeks before the picture opened here, W. A. Clark, Libson's publicity man, ran a series of display teaser ads in the local dailies, announcing that "Dr. Jack" would reach Cincinnati on a certain date, and inviting any one afflicted with the blues to call on him at 521 Walnut street.

Commissioner Peters, with visions of a quack advertising specialist, wrote the State authorities at Columbus to ascertain whether "Dr. Jack" was duly qualified to practice. When receiving advice that the State medical files failed to show anyone by that name, Peters decided to spare Cincinnatians the humiliation of hooking up with a disreputable physician, and actually arranged to have the "doctor" prosecuted as soon as he opened up. Upon going to the addres given and finding it to be the Strand Theatre, Peters learned, upon further inquiry, what it was all about.

Despite Peters's pleas for secrecy of the incident, Manager Libson takes great delight in repeating it, while Clark vouches for the truth of the story, vigorously maintaining that it was not "planted."

Manager Jules Frankel, of Gifts Theatre, is gratified at the results of his continuous run programs, recently inaugurated. "Tess of the Storm Country," the first picture to be shown under the new policy, established a record in point of attendance for a four weeks' run, while "One Exciting Night," now in its fourth and final week, promises to do even better.

Those who have wished for "the lion and lamb to lie down together" have had their wish fully gratified, according to a report which has reached the writer's desk from Sandusky, Ohio, where the Rev. N. H. R. Moore, pastor of the Grace Episcopal Church, after viewing a Sunday night presentation of the picture, "To Have and To Hold," at the Star Theatre, occupied the stage and delivered a ten-minute discussion of the picture, pointing out the lesson which the film conveyed.

The theatre was packed to capacity, with as many patrons turned away as gained admittance. The minister, enthusiastic as the result of his initial venture into the movie field, announced that he would hereafter conduct these stage sermons several times a week, instead of Sunday nights only, as was his original intention, supplementing his statement by adding that messages of this nature delivered in the theatre would reach many hundreds who would not otherwise be able to hear them.

Cincinnati has a new municipally-operated picture theatre, the first of its kind to be established in this section of the country. It has been opened on the top floor of the City Hall, and is being operated by the Board of Examiners of Motion Picture Operators, the purpose of the venture being to test the knowledge of operators handling motion picture apparatus. The projecting machines and other apparatus were donated by the Nicholas Power Company, of New York. The Motion Picture Operators' Union and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association donated the necessary funds for the installation of the devices.

Mrs. Harry J. Myers, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Covington, Ky., just across the river, has filed suit against the United Artists Corporation seeking $100 and interest, claiming that the company failed to deliver a certain film on specified time. As a result, Mrs. Myers ordered the attachment of one of the company's films being shown at another Covington house.

Assistant Manager James Schwalm, of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, is receiving the sympathy of his friends over the prolonged illness of his wife.

The Literary Theatre, a new picture house recently opened at Wellsville, Ohio, is the first theatre to be opened in the Wellsville district since the closing of the old Cooper Opera House, which several years ago was famous throughout the Ohio Valley as one of the first burlesque houses in existence within the State.

All the Cincinnati picture houses have been enjoying unusual business for the past few weeks, the annual automobile show and the Shriners' ceremonial, immediately following, having attracted a large transient clientele. The ceremonial parade, with over 6,000 Shriners, was "shot" by Clarence Runey, the Times-Star-Pathe local cameraman, as was also the Shriners' indoor circus, which is holding forth for the week at Music Hall.

Manager Libson of the Capitol Theatre announces that Theodore Hahn, Jr., conductor of the Capitol orchestra, has arranged an appropriate overture and score for "The Christian," when that film is shown at his house shortly. Hahn will feature Guido Terranova in a violin solo, "Ave Maria," using it as a prologue setting. Libson has also placed Francis Kromar, Jr., in charge of the Capitol organ, with the promise of a number of musical novelties for the patrons of his house.

Manager Jules Frankel has dressed the front of his Gifts Theatre to represent "Main Street" in accordance with the settings of "The Flirt" which has just begun an indefinite run at Gifts. The interior decorations are also in keeping with the picture, Frankel changing both the front and interior to portray the atmosphere of each picture shown on the screen.

At the Strand Theatre Manager Libson is playing up the fact that Audrey Berry, a local girl who recently started a screen career, is in the city on a visit simultaneously with the showing of "Java Head," in which Miss Berry appears as one of the three little sisters.

Stewart Wilkinson, a Cincinnati boy who entered the picture game several years ago, is reported to have sailed for England with a company of motion picture players including Wanda Hawley. From England the party expect to go to Egypt to make pictures for a British company

Manager Schwalm, operating the Rialto Theatre at Hamilton, Ohio, reports the biggest week's business in the history of his house with "Dr. Jack." Managing Director Meyer of the Palace also kicks in with the information that "The Third Alarm," which he played in opposition, exceeded his highest expectation in point of attendance.

Lenten Slumps Ended

Time was when Lent meant a slump in business at the picture houses. But that day is gone, Milwaukee exhibitors agree.

"Years ago attendance at a motion picture show during Lent was considered bad form," said George Fisher, manager of the New Milwaukee. "Today, however, due to the higher standards of the motion picture industry and the broader views taken by pious people, the theatre does not suffer to an appreciable extent.

"Probably the underlying reason for this change is that motion pictures now are considered an education instead of simply an idle amusement. Religious leaders have come to realize this more and more and as a result have been inclined to lessen the restrictions. In the present age climatic conditions keep more people from theatres than observance of Lent."

Byron Brentlinger Retires in Indiana Theatre Shake-up

A general shake-up has been made in the management of eight picture theatres in Indiana that are owned and operated by the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation. The changes resulted from orders issued from the Chicago headquarters of the company.

Among the changes in the managmeent of the corporation is the appointment of C. E. Burdick, until recently connected with the B. F. Keith organization in New York, who has taken over the office of A. F. Brentlinger, general manager of the Indiana office of the corporation.

The theatres controlled by the corporation and which have been affected by the change in management are the Victory, Evansville; Liberty, Terre Haute; Orpheum, Fort Wayne; Capitol, Clinton; Strand, Kokomo, and Murray and Murrette, Richmond.

Mr. Brentlinger said his resignation was due to the fact that the Indianapolis offices of the corporation were to be moved to Chicago, where they will be united with the realty offices of the concern. He said he did not care to move his residence to Chicago as would be necessary under the changed plans.

F. H. Gruneberg, a representative of the company, said it is planned to departmentize the system He explained that the concern intends to centralize the operation of the theatres instead of permitting each individual manager to direct the policy of each house

Back of the changes there is going the rounds a story of friction between Mr. Brentlinger and some of the major stockholders in the corporation, which resulted in the withdrawal of Mr. Brentlinger and all of the local managers that had been selected by him.

Byron Brentlinger retires as manager of the Victory Theatre at Evansville; Russell Brentlinger from the management of the Liberty at Terre Haute; Byron Moore from manager of the Capitol at Clinton, and J. F. Daley as manager of the Orpheum at Fort Wayne. Fred Le Comte, of Chicago, has been named manager of the Liberty Theatre and O. L. Huffman, of Chicago, has been named manager of the Orpheum at Fort Wayne.

When a film ignited in the course of an exhibition at the Montgomery Theatre at Cynthiana, a little town south of Owensville, Friday night, it resulted in a fire which destroyed the theatre, the home of Al Montgomery, owner of the theatre, and the Methodist church. The loss was estimated at $15,000. Patrons of the theatre filed out in orderly fashion.

Hill Brothers, proprietors of a picture theatre at 414 Indiana avenue, Indianapolis, have bought the Douglas Theatre at Nineteenth street and Martindale avenue.

Newman Shows Kansas City Specially Made Radio Film

Massachusetts Audiences in Danger at Epidemic of Fires

More than 350 persons, the majority of them women and children, filed quickly from the Day Street Theatre at West Somerville last Saturday afternoon, during the matinee, when it was discovered that a small fire was in progress upon the roof. A passerby, who had noticed the flames, notified Manager J. Frank Mixer and District Fire Chief Charles F. Hathaway, who was one of the audience. The latter sounded a box alarm, while Mixer mounted the stage and asked the audience to leave the theatre in an orderly manner for a few minutes. Miss Jennie Gunn continued to play the piano accompaniment for the picture and the building was emptied in less than five minutes. The damage amounted to less than $100 and within three-quarters of an hour the show was resumed.

A large audience sat undisturbed in the Lancaster Theatre, near the North Station in Boston, last Saturday night, while a spectacular two-alarm fire raged directly across the street. A police sergeant remained in the lobby of the theatre, however, prepared to quell a panic or to assist in emptying the crowded house in the event it should become endangered. The blaze was confined to the building in which it originated, however, and the first the audience knew of its close proximity was when they left the playhouse at the close of the performance.

A fire that started in the bowling alleys in the basement of the building in which is located the lobby entrance to Gordon's Olympia Theatre, on Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, Sunday night, resulted in injury to several people not in the theatre audience. The building is a two-story brick structure, occupied on the street floor by the lobby and a dry goods store, a restaurant on the second floor and the bowling alleys in the basement. The theatre itself is in the rear, in a separate building.

The first intimation the theatre employes had of the blaze was when some one whispered to a girl usher that smoke was seeping into the place. She notified a policeman and he immediately ordered the exit doors opened. The audience was requested to march out quietly by the nearest exits and did so as the orchestra continued to play. When practically all were out, some one noticed the smoke and yelled "fire." Two women promptly fainted but were speedily revived when they were taken into the open air.

Louisville's Old Masonic Returns Again to Pictures

The Old Masonic Theatre, at Fourth and Chestnut streets, after another failure under the Shubert management as a stock company house, is again back in pictures. This theatre in many attempts has always proven a failure as a stage show house, but was one of the leading picture houses of the city when operated as the Strand by the Louisville & Cincinnati Amusement Company, which was forced out when its lease expired, after purchase by the Shubert interests of the property.

Just recently the house was leased by the Shubert interests to Fred J. Dolle, of the Alamo Theatre, Louisville, representing the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, which is linked with the Broadway Amusement Company interests, the Walnut Theatre, East and West Broadway and other houses.

The name of the house again becomes the Strand, and it will operate as a high class picture house, changing bills twice a week and playing the finer features. The house opened, after some remodeling, with "Paid Back" and a Larry Semon comedy. "When the Desert Calls" is the attraction of the latter half of the week.

According to papers filed with the County Clerk the present management has taken a five year lease on the theatre, with the privilege of ten years in all, at an annual rental of $22,500 a year. The lease is made with the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company. Mr. Dolle was recently in New York, where he closed the deal for the house.

Leasing the Shubert Theatre gives the Dolle-Steurle-Long and Reutlinger interests control of a great chain of theatres in Louisville. Keene heard of her proposed trip he gave her a letter to the Loew offices in New York so that she will be looked after until her boat leaves.

The Discovery Concerts launched two months ago by the California and Granada theatres, San Francisco, have grown in popularity until they have become a feature of the Sunday program at each house. This part of the program commences at 12.30 o'clock, so that patrons may see the entire screen program either before or after the concert.

James M. Triplett, formerly with the Theatrical Manufacturing Company, has been named business agent of the Moving Picture Theatre Operators' Union of San Francisco, succeeding Herman Lubfin, who has acted in this capacity for some time.

Manager Samish, of the California Theatre, San Francisco, recently had moving pictures taken of a party entering the house and showed them on the screen less than two hours later and before the party had left. The occasion was the screening of "My American Wife," a production in which Senor Santos Goni, consul general of the Argentine Republic, was interested, having been called into consultation in the making of the picture by Famous Players. Senor Goni attended one of the first performances in which the picture was featured, with a party of friends from South America, and this visit was the motif for the unusual stunt.

A. Salsky, of the York Theatre, San Francisco, has taken over the Dimond Theatre on Dimond street.

The Garden Theatre on Divisadero srteet, is being remodeled and a heating system installed at a cost of about $10,000. It will be reopened at an early date.

Representatives of film exchanges and San Francisco newspapers tended a farewell banquet to Eugent H. Roth at the Palace Hotel on the evening of February 20, the affair being one of the most widely attended of its kind ever held here. Mr. Roth, who has been a leader in moving picture activities here for the past twelve years, will leave at once for New York where he will devote much of his time to the exploitation of the H. A. Snow African game pictures, in which he is heavily interested. Arrangements for the farewell banquet in his honor were made by Miss Betty Deitrick, well known newspaper woman.

Strong Language

George A. Hunt & Co., Medford, Ore., theatre owners, sends us a copy of the Pacific Record Herald in which there is a rather strong editorial on "The Papers and the Pictures." Its sentiment may be expressed by these two paragraphs:

"We believe that corrupt newspapers are a greater menace to the morals of America than corrupt moving pictures could possibly be.

"As a general thing, the quality of the motion pictures shown in a city is far superior to the quality of front-page news printed there."

In Los Angeles It Appears Poor Week; No Records Fall

Sid Grauman celebrated the nineteenth week of "Robin Hood" at his Hollywood Egyptian Theatre with a midnight Saturday matinee. With the opening of his Eyptian Theatre, Grauman has changed Hollywood from a neighborhood theatre community to a big league, first run Broadway district.

"Adam's Rib" has smashed all attendance records at Grauman's Rialto and passed the high water mark box office record formerly held by "Manslaughter."

Grauman booked "The Ninety and Nine" into his Million Dollar Theatre to follow "The Third Alarm," which had a two weeks' run at the Third Street Playhouse.

The urbane E. C. Bostwick, manager of the Loew State Theatre, is buying more advertising space in the daily newspapers than any other first run playhouse in Los Angeles for the current week. The principal players in "All the Brothers Were Valiant" made a personal appearance at the Sunday night opening performance.

Grauman's new Metropolitan Theatre, seating 4,400 is getting over splendidly. The house has been jammed every night, with big throngs on hand for the matinees. "Racing Hearts" is the attraction for the current week.

"Oliver Twist" has been held over by Sol Lesser for a three weeks' run at the Kinema.

Mack Sennett's comedy, "The Shriek of Araby," was secured by Manager Breckwendel for the Symphony.

T. L Tally has booked "The Dangerous Age" into his Broadway Theatre for a week's return engagement.

Harry David, loyal manager of the Mission, is wearing the smile that won't come off at the way "One Exciting Night" has caught on.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF REAL ROPE WORK FROM THE ASCHER

Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, used this banner as a "coming" above the inner entrance doors. Real manila rope runs in the line above the title, being joined to the rope ends from the cutouts taken from the pictorial posters.

Albany Exhibitors Shocked by Tragedy in Brown Family

Exhibitors and exchange men throughout this section of the state were shocked the past week in learning of the catastrophe which had befallen L. B. Brown, of Watervliet, who has just opened a repair shop for projection machines in Albany, and who is well known in this territory. It appears that during the absence of the mother, Mr. Brown's children in some manner set fire to their clothing, the little girl dying from her burns, while the little boy will probably recover, although badly burned. The interior o the house was also damaged to a great extent.

The Grand Theatre, in Watervliet, was damaged to a considerable extent last Wednesday morning by a runaway which smashed the lobby of the house to bits. Occurring as it did on the day before a holiday, it became more than usually serious. The house is owned by George Tetrault.

Louis Buettner and a crowd from Cohoes and vicinity were in Troy last Wednesday night for the opening of the newest of Strand houses.

Exhibitors in this section of the state are complaining that the radio craze is hurting their business. Owing to the nearness of the Schenectady and Troy broadcasting stations, thousands of persons are using cheap homemade sets and receiving the nightly concerts, to the detriment of the picture theatres, particularly the residential ones.

It is said that Buckley and Tarsches of this city, who now operate the Leland and the Clinton Square, are dickering for the Playhouse in Hudson. It is also said that Nate Robbins, of Utica, has recently remarked that he will shortly break into Albany, and according to reports, he is seeking to acquire Harmanus-Bleecker Hall.

After being closed for several months, the Majestic in Troy will shortly be opened by a Mr. Deiches. The house will be a second-run one. The sum of $12,000 will be spent in bringing it up to date.

The Strand, of Troy, has changed its policy, and will now be a second-run house with lower admission prices. It is located directly across the road from the $300,000 Troy, which was opened the past week.

Myer Schine, of Gloversville, has added another one to his rapidly increasing circuit. This time it's the Strand at Dolgeville. which has been run by "Wild Bill" Hayward.

Fred Herbs, of the Strand in Philmont, dropped around to some of the houses along Film Row last week.

Exhibitors around Malone and Northern New York claim that there will not be good business in that section of the state much before next fall.. It appears that prices for the potato crop in that section dropped to a low level, and the farmers are not spending their money for the films these days.

George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Censorship Commission, was in Albany the past week speaking before the W. C. T. U.

Work for Sunday picture shows in Rensselaer has been abandoned by William and Irving Featherly, of the Broadway and Bright Spot theatres. It appears that opposition developed not only among the clergy of the city, but also among the city officials.

Rochester's Temple to Make No Policy Change, Says Finn

"No changes will be made in the management or conduct of the Temple Theatre during the present vaudeville season which extends to the end of May," said J. H. Finn, manager, in commenting on the recent acquisition of the Temple by the B. F. Keith organization. "The Temple has had the B. F. Keith franchise for 30 years," continued Mr. Finn, "and the change in ownership is in line with the policy of the Keith interests to operate directly all the theatres in its circuits. During the summer it is probable alterations will be made in the building and the interior will be newly decorated and the stage supplied with new scenery."

Manager Finn said he did not know whether he would be connected with the theatre or not. He has been in the business twenty years and is thinking seriously of a change of scene. Although no direct proposition has been made to him by President Albee of the Keith interests, he would like to make an arrangement by which he could exchange theatres and be in the South during the winter because of his health. He suffers from attacks of bronchitis which become worse each year, he said, and he believes that the climate in the South would be beneficial to him.

Exercises commemorating Washington's Birthday and the thirty-fourth transfer of the flags instituted by George H. Thomas Post, 4, G. A. R., were held in the Eastman Theatre Thursday morning, February 22.

Announcement has been made that the major portion of the block of stock in the Eastman Kodak Company, offered for sale through important brokerage firms, is part of the holdings of the University of Rochester, to be disposed of to raise the money needed to finance its pending building projects. Recent gifts by Mr. Eastman to the local university and Massachusetts Tech were evidently with the expectation that the securities would be converted into money when the need arose.

W. J. Morgan, assistant manager of distribution for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and E. J. Hayes, manager of the Buffalo exchange of the same company, were in town last week to confer with George Eastman and William Fait, Jr., of the Eastman Theatre on the booking situation at this house. Robert Lieber, president of First National, was also here. Allan S. Moritz of Paramount exchange, Buffalo, was here for a second conference on the same subject. The situation has been cleared up, it is understood. The house was clogged with bookings on old pictures. The companies were asked to relieve the Eastman of some of the older pictures so that new ones could be booked.

Sim Allen, Nate Robbins' general manager in Utica, N. Y., is a busy man these days. He is in direct charge of the Gaiety and DeLuxe, and superintends various matters in the other Utica houses controlled by Robbins. He reviews and passes on all of the pictures shown in the Robbins' Theatres and at the present time will give a flannel bicycle to whoever will invent a device to make this arduous work easier for him.

Paterson, N. J.

Cameron Dooley, who from South Bend, Ind., as a grad from Notre Dame came back to his old home town, is now manager of the Garden Theatre, Paterson, N. J. Mr. Dooley has had for his short time in the picture game quite a career. He was general sales manager for the Clydesdale Motor Truck Co. and was sub inspector for the United States Government at the American Shell Company at Paterson. The house is a First National one, seats 13,000 and has a nine-piece orchestra and a symphony organ. Mr. Dooley came to the Garden as manager direct from college. He is quite a young man but old in the picture business, having received his instructions from one of the best known men in the show business, his dad.

He's a corker, is Dooley's daddy. He was the first manager of the first house that Fabian opened, the Regent, where he now is. He has been with the firm now nine years (same house) and is one of Fabian's chief advisers. His theatre gave gold pieces for Christmas gifts.

Jacob Margolies, who represents the interests of Max Gold, is still at the same old stand at the Strand in Paterson. Jake is by no means a newcomer in the business, having started some fifteen years ago, and he has been at the Strand now seven years. Paterson is his home town, and he's seen floods and fires. Among the theatres owned by Mr. Gold in Paterson are the Strand, Lyric, Majestic, Capitol, Newark, Rivoli and Iron Bound.

Ben Ginsberg is with us again all the way from old New York. We are talking of the Three Star Theatre of Paterson. Ben's been in the business for fifteen years and there are very few who don't know him around 729 Seventh avenue. Ben always knows when to sell something and when to buy. He sold the King Theatre two months ago, at 1744 Third avenue, and says he bought a diamond ring.

Did you ever meet Bill Hill? Well, if you haven't, you've missed meeting a real chap. Bill just decided to hide himself away in a little hideaway town so that he could get away from all the noise of Fourteenth street. Bill was connected with B. S. Morse at the Jefferson Theatre in Fourteenth street, as manager, and then went to the Regent at 116th street and Seventh avenue. Bill's now manager of the Rialto at Passaic for Louis Rosenthal and is making that town his home, although he says he longs for the breath of Old New York.

Manager D. Robinson, of Proctor's 125th Street Theatre, New York, has as assistant, Frank Jones, one of the youngest to hold that position. Frank Jones has the "Up-and-at-'em" spirit, and as his ideas fall in with those of Manager Robinson, the team work is perfect and accounts for the prosperous condition of the house.

Buffalo Strand's Staff to Direct Criterion Destinies

The Criterion Theatre will be opened next week with second run pictues. Practically the entire staff from the recently closed Strand will be in charge of the house. The Criterion building is owned by Walter Hays, Moe Mark and Eugene Falk, all officers of the Mark-Strand interests. It is understood that the admission prices will be the same as the old Strand, 15 to 25 cents. The name of the house will also be changed, it is expected, to the Strand-Criterion. It is hoped to attract the greater part of the former patrons of the Strand, which recently closed on account of the impossibility of renewing the lease for the desired length of time.

The Criterion until a few months ago was the home here of the Shubert unit shows. The house closed when Max Spiegel went into bankruptcy. Mr. Spiegel and I. H. Herk had been sub-leasing the house to the Shuberts. Prior to the Shubert attractions, the Criterion was operated by Famous Players-Lasky and the Shea Amusement Company under the management of Vincent McFaul, now manager of Shea's Hippodrome. It was during this regime that much money was spent on the house in re-decorating and remodeling.

The decision of the Mark-Strand interests to open the Criterion as a picture house does not come as a surprise, as it had been understood that Mr. Mark wanted to keep Buffalo in the Mark chain, for it was here that both Moe and his brother, the late Michael H. Mark, started their chain of Strand theatres. Lionel Edel, brother of Harold Edel, the first manager of the Strand, has arrived in town. It is understood that he will be the manager of the Strand-Criterion. Mr. Edel is a nephew of Moe Mark. Walter Hays will supervise the operation as he did at the Strand. Mr. Hays' headquarters are in Buffalo. The house is now being renovated, an orchestra being assembled and bookings lined up.

Ralph W. Thayer, who has been manager of the new Strand Theatre in Niagara Falls since the house opened last summer, has resigned. So has George McKenna, assistant manager, and cousin of "Toughey" McKenna, a member of the Buffalo Metro sales staff. It is reported that Mr. Thayer is to manage a theatre in the South.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., reports that Thelma Edwards, the Buffalo dancer, attracted capacity audiences all last week. Miss Edwards went to the Bellevue directly from Shea's Hippodrome. Mr. Lorence will show "Robin Hood" the week of April 1, following it with "One Exciting Night" and "The Town That Forgot God."

William Shirley, manager of the Strand Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., was in Buffalo last week visiting friends along Film Row.

The new Strand Theatre has been opened in Endicott, N. Y., by the Kodeco Company of Binghamton, consisting of Newt Kornblite and David Cohen. The building is a yellow brick structure with a capacity of 1,000. An indirect lighting system has been installed, with five domes in the ceiling and with lights around the coves in the walls. The decorative scheme is in blue and gold. There are six beautiful mural paintings on the walls. In the lobby are the latest style frames and an ornamental box office. There is a concrete marquee over which is a large decorative electric sign bearing the name of house. Music is provided by an orchestra pipe organ. Pictures will be shown two days. Presentations will be every night, with matinees Saturday and Sunday. Mr. Cohen is managing the house.

Arthur L. Skinner booked "Dr. Jack" for the Victoria Theatre. Result, records smashed. Lines way around the corner from the box office.

James Cardina, manager of the Kensington Theatre, Buffalo, announces that plans and specifications have been completed for his new picture theatre at Bailey and Georgetown avenues. Bids will be called for immediately. Mr. Cardina plans to rush the construction work and if possible the house will be opened in the fall.

You've got to hand it to Harris Lumberg, manager of the Lumberg Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y. He has booked the entire Paramount "39" for his theatre and set the whole bunch down for dates. The Lumberg management is now planning a big exploitation campaign. Mr. Lumberg is also engaging a large orchestra. Prices will remain the same. He will put the big ones, such as "Bella Donna," "The Covered Wagon," "Adam's Rib," on for extended runs. It is a percentage proposition.

Ontario Theatres Corporation has been organized to be operated as a unit of Associated Theatres Corporation, of which Harold P. Dygert of East Rochester and Mayor W. J. MacFarlane of Canandaigua are officers, and which will take over the Temple, Smith Opera House and Regent theatres in Geneva, N. Y. The board of managers of the new company will consist of Benjamin B. Gustadt and Ross A. McVoy of Geneva and Mayor MacFarlane of Canandaigua. The consolidation, it is hoped, will enable the house to bring bigger pictures to town. The ownership and management will remain the same as at present, but the new company will operate the houses. Associated now controls fourteen houses in western New York. Lockport will soon have a big theatre under its direction.

H. P. Lally has inaugurated a series of Amateur Nights at the Drohen Theatre in Dunkirk, N. Y. They are held Friday evenings between the two screen performances. The innovation is very pleasing to the patrons and encourages the development of local talent, says Mr. Lally.

When Manager Howard J. Smith put on "The Third Alarm," at the Palace, Buffalo, he got a lot of front page publicity through a newsies' party arranged in co-operation with the Evening News. The special show was given Saturday morning, a day previous to the opening.

Betty Blythe is coming to Buffalo in person the week of March 5 to appear at the Lafayette Square in connection with the showing of her picture, "A Darling of the Rich."

The Western New York Motion Picture Theatres, Inc., has obtained a charter from the secretary of state at Albany authorizing engagement in business in Erie, Niagara, Chautaugua, Orleans, Allegany, Wyoming, Genesee and Cattaragus counties. This is the Cohen organization in this end of the state. Directors are Judge J. W. Schatt, Gowanda; Sidney C. Allen, Medina; Nikitas Dipson, Batavia; H. P. Lally, Dunkirk; F. A. Rice, Warsaw; H. F. Thurston, Lockport; Charles Babcock, Wellsville; Dewey Michaels, Howard J. Smith, J. Walter Morris and William T. Dellemuth, Buffalo.

Sam to Join Us Soon

Inspired by the success of Charlie McInerney, former rack boy in the Hotel Seneca, mecca of movie magnates, who has become a screen star under the direction of D. W. Griffith, and Jerry, the Greek, former bus boy in Hall's Front street restaurant, who is now a masseur in the retinue of Jack Dempsey, Sam B. Ernest, shoe shining and hat cleaning mogul in the Gilbert barber shop, 12 Scio street, is planning to wrest the crown of champion he-vamp from Ruddy Valentino.

Sammy has had his pictures taken as a toreador and a sheik. As soon as these photos are finished, Sam is going to send them to Hollywood and hopes to get an offer to star in pictures at once. "They tell me I'm wasting my time shining shoes and cleaning hats," says Sam, the Sheik of Scio street.

Kansas City

A bit of news which is a little late, but which should not be passed up, is the party given recently by the employes of the film exchanges in Kansas City. The party was held in an old southern mansion about a mile north of Independence, Mo., and dancing was the chief amusement, music being furnished by a five-piece orchestra. Managers, their wives, clerks, cashiers and everyone employed at the exchanges here met and motored to the mansion. During the intermission a buffet luncheon was served and when it came time to depart, everyone seemed in favor of giving these "get-acquainted" parties often.

Washington, D. C.

"Speed it up boys; got to get home," is the mandate hereafter likely to be heard by the members of the Washington Film Board of Trade when the more Bolshevistic among them seek to lengthen out evening meetings with arguments not calculated to get anywhere—President R. Clinton Robin has become a benedict.

Besides being president of the local organization, Mr. Robin is manager of the Washington branch of Pathe, and decidedly a live wire. He has just returned to his desk from Atlantic City, where he spent a honeymoon with the former Miss Mary Theresa O'Connor, now Mrs. Robin. They were married in St. Aloysius Church in the presence of a large gathering of friends, among whom were all the members of the Pathe office and most of the film managers and executives in Washington. Mr. Robin's father, who came here from New York, was best man, and Bob Smeltzer, of Pathe, and Fred Steele, salesman for Associated Producers in Baltimore, were ushers. After the ceremony all attended a big reception at the home of the bride, at 57 New York avenue. They will be at home to their friends in their apartment at the Cathedral Mansions.

"Bob" Smeltzer, eastern district manager for Pathe, and one of the most popular film men who ever served in Washington, has been spending some time here, managing the local office while Mr. Robin was honeymooning, and renewing old acquaintances in this territory. He came here from Pittsburgh and while in town looked the field over to secure some salesmen for the Pennsylvania office.

Albany

Charles Walder, manager of the Goldwyn exchange here, was called to New York the past week by the death of his father-in-law.

Many of the exchange managers were present at a dinner at the Hotel Ten Eyck, following the opening of the new Troy Theatre. The dinner was given by Walter Hayes, Moe Mark and their associates. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Vic Bendell, H. S. Gans, Mr. and Mrs. Moe Mark, Alex Wiseman, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hayes, Marvin Kempner, Moe Silver, and E. L. Falk.

Russell Clark, of the New York office of First National, visited the local exchange last week.

Harry Gans, of the American Releasing exchange here, was right on the job last week while the state gathering of the Men's Apparel Club was in session. Through Mr. Gans, the delegates were entertained at the Hotel Ten Eyck, with a screening of "What Fools Men Are."

Manager Herman, of the First National exchange, is proudly sporting an extremely handsome gold pencil just presented him by John M. Stahl, the well known director.

Archie Moses, manager for the American Releasing exchange in Buffalo, died the past week following a short illness of pneumonia. Mr. Moses was at one time a salesman for Univresal out of this city, and is well known over the state. The film exchanges of Albany sent a handsome wreath.

Canada

Charles Ramage, well-known exchange manager of Toronto, has taken unto himself a wife and has taken up residence at No. 1 Glen Road, Toronto, after a honeymoon to New York. The staff of the Toronto office of Associated First National, of which he is manager, presented him with a lamp.

Walter Golding, manager of the Fox exchange at St. John, N. B., is actively interested in local amateur athletics. He has aided in making basketball a success there this winter and he is known as a baseball authority. He is a nephew of Manager Golding of the Imperial Theatre, St. John.

Miss Margaret Frisen, stenographer in the office of Manager W. P. Wilson of the Garrick Theatre, Winnipeg, has been appointed private secretary to Ray H. Leason, Manitoba district manager for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, with office at Winnipeg.

W. F. Barrett of Toronto, Canadian general manger of the Fox Film Corporation, has returned to his Toronto headquarters after making a business trip through to the Pacific coast during which he visited Fox exchanges and the theatres of principal centres. At Winnipeg, he conferred with J. A. Wilson, Fox manager there. He met Mr. Sichleman of New York, manager of the Fox contract department, at Vancouver, B. C.

After a long spell of sickness, C. C. Kenning has returned to his work as a film salesman. Mr. Kenning was formerly Pathe representative at Winnipeg and later at Calgary. Having recovered from his illness, Mr. Kenning is now special sales representative in the Canadian West for Regal Films, handling Pathe, Metro, Warner and other releases.

CONSENSUS of PUBLISHED REVIEWS

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.)

The Young Rajah

Rodolph Valentino—Paramount—7,705 feet)

M. P. W.—Compared to his recent achievement in "Blood and Sand," it leaves a decided impression of being less virile, although none the less attractive to many of the fans.

N.—Among the younger set of women the picture will possibly be acceptable. It will not, however, strengthen the star's value with followers of really worth while screen plays, nor with men.

T. R.—It should be very delectable fare for the especial admirers of Rodolph Valentino.

F. D.—Not much to the story, but it will please star's following.

E. H.—The popularity of the star will doubtless carry it over.

White Shoulders

(Katherine MacDonald—First National—5,966 feet)

M. P. W.—Can be classed as far above the average picture.

T. R.—Ranks as a likely box office attraction and should win widespread popularity.

F. D.—Society drama that gives star better vehicle than those she has had recently; contains pretty fair audience appeal.

N.—Does not depend so much on the beauty of the star to put it over as it does on the dramatic situations and a fairly absorbing story.

E. H.—A society drama with an interesting plot and enhanced by excellent sets and good photography.

June Madness

(Viola Dana—Metro—5,600 feet)

M. P. W.—Where light, spirited entertainment is popular this Metro feature will be a good investment.

T. R.—Should be entirely satisfactory to an audience who enjoys light, humorous situations without exacting any particular thrills therefrom.

F. D.—Not as good comedy entertainment as star's recent pictures.

N.—A society comedy-romance, it sparkles with paprika without exacting any demands upon the spectator's imagination.

The Pride of Palomar

(Featured Cast—Cosmopolitan—Paramount—7,494 feet)

M. P. W.—Eight reels of dashing entertainment without any dull moments.

T. R.—The action is slow in starting, but after it gets into full swing lovers of straight melodrama will probably sit tight in their seats and gasp wildly in unison with the hero's narrow escapes from sudden death.

N.—There are very few variations offered in this familiar story on an old theme.

F. D.—Plenty of good action will make it popular with many.

Thorns and Orange Blossoms

(Featured Cast—Preferred Pictures—6,971 feet)

M. P. W.—A Preferred picture with splendid audience appeal and an out-and-out showman feature.

N.—The production is good and offers real atmopshere. We would call it a first rate audience picture.

F. D.—Will probably prove very satisfying box office attraction in certain houses.

T. R.—The chief factor of this story is its steady interest, its entertainment qualities, rather than its possession of any great moments.

The Marriage Chance

(Featured Cast—American Releasing—6,000 feet)

M. P. W.—Has a fascination beyond all doubt, but the reaction to it may not be entirely pleasant in all cases.

N.—Hampton Del Ruth has, in his latest production, turned out a really diverting picture, a bit uneven perhaps, but with genuine entertainment value.

E. H.—Is an odd mixture of comedy, tragedy and comedy-drama. It has a thrill or two, some very pleasing photography and is well acted by a large and well-known group of players.

T. R.—Exhibitors in search of an unique and soul-shivering attraction will surely find it here.

F. D.—Rather interesting picture except that mystery episode is a trifle too gruesome despite dream ending.

Minnie

(Leatrice Joy—First National—6,696 feet)

M. P. W.—Marshall Neilan has distinguished himself once more. "Minnie" is the latest tribute to his creative art. This is a production that offers truly exceptional entertainment in its display of original character studies and situations.

N.—It's all very entertaining and with a little speeding up should find a welcome place on any program.

F. D.—Original and sparkling comedy feature that offers sure-fire entertainment.

T. R.—Should prove to be first rate entertainment in practically any locality.

E. H.—It holds the interest throughout its seven reels by reason of being a well directed, evenly balanced little "ugly duckling" tale that touches the heart.

Brothers Under the Skin

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn—4,983 feet)

M. P. W.—It is a picture which practically all grown-ups, whether married or single, will enjoy, and should prove a good box-office bet.

T. R.—It is a picture that should appeal to all classes, men and women alike.

E. H.—A delightful satire on spoiled American wives and devoted husbands.

F. D.—Light, clever and entertaining, and should go well.

N.—Goldwyn has knocked another box office home run.

Wolf Law

(Frank Mayo—Universal—4,463 feet)

M. P. W.—It will be regarded as intense melodrama. In places it has great force and at all times it is entertaining.

T. R.—An exciting melodrama thoroughly well acted and holding good suspense.

N.—It is a quick-moving yarn, implausible but sufficiently snappy to please the boys and girls who want color and movement.

F. D.—Some fair action but story not as good as Mayo should have.

E. H.—Tense drama, well enacted, and carefully directed.

Up and At 'Em

(Doris May—F. B. O.—4,580 feet)

M. P. W.—Novel comedy effects the outstanding feature.

E. H.—Farce comedy of doubtful drawing power.

N.—There is little suggestion of earnest effort to the picture.

T. R.—This is a lively comedy, with plenty of adventure and romance thrown in for good measure, skilfully directed, and without a dull moment in it.

Driven

(Featured Cast—Universal—5,400 feet)

M. P. W.—Unusually fine production based on somewhat tragic theme.

T. R.—Emily Fitzroy and Charles E. Mack give unusual portrayals in powerful tale of Southern hills.

F. D.—A mighty fine picture and a very powerful dramatic entertainment.

E. H.—Here is a picture that should give a lot of satisfaction to exhibitors. From the viewpoint of story, direction and cast and photography it has every angle of appeal.

N.—Here is a picture that for gripping situations has not often been surpassed. If it has a fault it is that its tensity is too continuous; that there is no relief for an overwrought audience perched on the edge of its seat in eager anticipation of the outcome of each sequence.

Nobody's Money

(Jack Holt—Paramount—5,584 feet)

M. P. W.—Jack Holt makes good in his first comedy role in pleasing production.

E. H.—Snappy yarn about crooked politicians and just plain crooks. It doesn't permit a break-down in interest in the six reels.

F. D.—Very bright and amusing comedy number that makes sure-fire entertainment.

N.—It is a story that lends itself admirably to picturization.

T. R.—A fast moving, amusing comedy drama. * * * There isn't a dull moment in the whole six reels.

Pawn Ticket 210

(Shirley Mason—Fox—4,871 feet)

M. P. W.—A program feature graced with fully an average amount of entertainment.

E. H.—It will delight the Mason fans and not disappoint others.

F. D.—Pleasing human interest story that will go big with star's admirers and general public.

T. R.—It is a good program picture and should be a successful attraction from a box office viewpoint.

N.—It is suitable film material in that it offers enough appeal to entertain those who are not too discriminate in their tastes.

The Scarlet Car

(Herbert Rawlinson—Universal—4,417 feet)

M. P. W.—Herbert Rawlinson has a breezy role that features him as he is most admired.

F. D.—Good diversion in Rawlinson's latest; blends action, romance and comedy nicely.

E. H.—The picture is decidedly worth seeing, not big, but good.

N.—This is not a "heavy" picture, but it should provide an entertaining hour.

T. R.—Possesses all of the elements that go to make up a first rate picture.

Money, Money, Money

(Katherine MacDonald—First National—5,995 feet)

M. P. W.—Conventional drama on social values.

T. R.—Should be enjoyed by the majority.

N.—Will doubtless pass as a pleasing offering where the star is popular.

F. D.—Starts out to be an interesting picture but drifts into the commonplace very shortly.

E. H.—Presents the happy combination of a beautiful star, a good story and excellent direction.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

Applaud With Bookings

THE day of the independent—the enterprising independent producer and distributor—has arrived. Of that there is no doubt. Happenings during the season that is nearing its close strengthen that fact.

But this is only the beginning. It is merely the dawn of a new and more prosperous era for that essential factor in the motion picture business. The current season has been one of miracles, splendid productions, excellent box office showings and general improvement in the independent market; 1922-23 will go down into history as a housecleaning year. Undesirables have been pushed out. The competent, keen, aggressively determined class of producer and distributor is entering an era that promises to firmly and permanently establish the independent market as a most essential branch of the industry.

Without independent producers and distributors the motion picture industry would be paralytic. It is competition that builds and uplifts any business. And this business is no exception to the rule. The independent man is today a factor that the business in general must contend with. He is no longer to be ignored. He is no longer to be put in a corner.

The independent has learned his lesson.

He is ambitious—and will make even greater progress, for he is determined to continue giving theater owners a steady flow of money-making productions. And it must be borne in mind that the current year has, indeed, been productive of remarkable independent productions—pictures that have made money for everybody concerned.

The independent has proved his ability to turn out quality pictures of the highest standard. He is not a spendthrift, reckless individual—he is careful in calculations, considerate in his plans and original in his efforts. He has had his goal in mind for some years. But he did not reach it until 1922. And he is marching on, determinedly, progressively, confidently and fearlessly.

The job of independents for the future is keeping faith with those who have proved their friends. They must cherish the confidence they have won. And they must continue turning out pictures like "Brass," "Sure Fire Flint," "Poor Men's Wives," "Shadows," "Lost in a Big City," "What's Wrong With the Women?," and many others too numerous to mention.

They must better the achievements of 1922-23.

We have reached the goal. Only the timid, the uncertain ones are faltering now. The way is open. But the test is here.

We have won—won recognition by giving exhibitors worthwhile productions.

But there must be no slacking. On the contrary, we must fight harder. We must take nothing for granted. And we can only fight and win by turning out productions that will prove sound investments for exhibitor and exchangeman.

The independent producer is doing his bit—and doing it admirably. The distributor is the chap who must wake up; he must be more aggressive in his exploitation. He must "sell" his pictures properly, not only to the trade, but to the general public. Several of our leading distributors already are doing this and doing it satisfactorily.

Distributors must be more considerate of producers. They should encourage independent production by playing with the producer in the open. There must be no Shylocking. All cards must be on the table—and face up.

The exchange man, too, must continue laboring energetically and in co-operation with distributor and producer.

But the BIG job falls on the shoulders of the independent exhibitor.

Without the independent producer no independent exhibitor is safe. Each is dependent upon the other. And they should help each other.

The wise exhibitor will not clog his bookings. He will and must not ignore the independents.

He must play fairly and squarely with the independent. And he can do this by keeping open dates for independent productions.

And 1923-24 promises to be a season for truly big box office productions. There will be "big names" galore.

But the big thing, Mr. Exhibitor, is:—Help the fellow who is trying to help you.

Forget meaningless statements. We don't want an Independent Week or anything like it.

Independents have earned the right to DEMAND a fair play.

And we're demanding that now. We are not asking for charity or anything bordering on the charitable.

We're appealing to you—Mr. Independent Exhibitor; we're appealing to you in the name of fair play and basing our demand on our performances of the past season.

We're asking you to help us help you, Mr. Exhibitor.

And this you can do, Mr. Independent Exhibitor, by keeping open dates for booking of independent productions.

We're not asking you to book junk; we're asking you to book independent pictures on their merit only.

But we do DEMAND fair play, Mr. Exhibitor.

You who have been complaining about the lack of fair play—now is the time to practice what you have been preaching.

How about it?

ROGER FERRI.

Careers of Leaders in the Independent Market Read Like Horatio Alger's Books

Biographical Sketches of "Who's Who in the Independent Market"

The careers of heroes introduced in Horatio Alger's novels had nothing on the struggles and rise of leaders of the independent market. The independent market has always invited the efforts of the keenest within our ranks. Its success has been entirely dependent upon the shoulders of its leaders. And the latter have assumed the task of "putting across" the independents with markedly great success.

In fact, the history of the independent market furnishes as romantic a story as has ever been written. It was born literally "by accident," but was developed systematically by a group of business-showmen who put their heart and soul into everything they tackled. To these leaders the independent exhibitors of the country owe much. True, there have been obnoxious elements, but these are being crushed out gradually but surely. In fact, this element is now virtually conspicuous by its absence.

The past two years have invited the presence of truly great film men in the business. These have come—and conquered. Others have merely struggled along, watching and waiting. Others have taken moves more for selfish reasons, than in the interests of the market. But these have been left behind the procession.

This writer will say that Harry M. Warner and Al Lichtman have done more for the independent market during the past two years than any other force that has participated in the winning of the confidence independents now enjoy from exhibitors. The history of the Warner organization has been an inspiring one—it has inspired others to do big things. Al Lichtman's organization has accomplished wonders. He has associated himself with a string of representatively big exchangemen. And the success of the latter has been the success of the independents in general.

Charles C. Burr of Mastodon Films, Inc.; Dr. W. E. Shallenberger of Arrow Film Corporation; Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation; Joe Schnitzer and Lou Baum of Equity Pictures Corporation; Irving and Sol Lesser and Mike Rosenberg of Principal Pictures Corporation, and others all accomplished feats that elevated the standard of independent productions—productions that made money consistently for theatre owners.

Following are brief sketches of leaders within the independent market:

HARRY M. WARNER—President of Warner Brothers, independent producers and distributors. Started in show business with his father and brothers in 1904 when they formed the Duquesne Amusement Company, Pittsburgh. Shortly thereafter they opened an office in Norfolk, Va., but in 1910 they sold out to the General Film Company. Later they started a state rights exchange in Pittsburgh, handling Mutual and Universal product. Success attended their efforts in this line and they took advantage of an offer made by Clark & Rowland and sold out. Following this sale, Warners' Features was organized and the First National distribution idea was said to have been given its birth by Harry M. Warner. In 1912 the Warners came to New York and carried on their enterprise until finally they decided to organize under their present name—Warner Brothers. Under this banner the Warners brought forth their first box-office success, ex-Ambassador Gerard's sensational story, "My Four Year in Germany." Then came the successful distribution of the fifteen-episode wild animal serial, "The Lost City," followed by "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days," "Ashamed of Parents," "Your Best Friend" and the Warner Classics of this seasons—"Brass," "Main Street," "Little Church Around the Corner," "Beautiful and Damned," "Little Heroes of the Street," "Rags to Riches," and "Dangerous Adventure." The firm's offices are located on the ninth floor of 1600 Broadway, New York City. Warner Brothers are planning the production and distribution of eighteen Warner Classics next season.

Perhaps, the greatest accomplishment of Harry M. Warner was his acquisition of David Belasco's plays and his direct association with that great producer. The entrance of Mr. Belasco to the picture field will go down as one of the most important epochs in the history of the business. Every producer in the business had vainly sought to acquire Mr. Belasco. He will collaborate with Warner Brothers in the making of "The Gold Diggers," "Deburau" and "Daddies." They will make other Belasco productions. The Warners also have acquired rights to famous books and a number of George M. Cohan successes. They maintain their own studios on the Coast, which are being enlarged and renovated to cope with the increased production schedule.

Interested with Harry M. Warner in Warner Brothers are his brothers Albert, Sam and Jack, all three now on the Coast. Harry M. Warner is in complete charge of the executive work. Albert, popularly known as Abe, is one of the best liked and most competent showmen in the business, while Sam and Jack devote all their time to production on the Coast. The history of Harry M. Warner, incidently, is the story of the progressive careers of his other brothers.

Warner Brothers have more than a dozen well-known stars under contract, including John Barrymore. They are negotiating for others. Harry Rapf is producing regularly for Warners, in charge of two units. Sydney Franklin also has been signed by Warner Brothers.

HARRY RAPF — Producer for Warner Brothers. Mr. Rapf has been actively connected with the motion picture business for many years. For some time he was associated with the Selznick enterprises, serving as production manager for a time. Then he produced pictures for himself, releasing them on the state rights basis. Associated with him was William Nigh and the two later went over with Warner Brothers. Nigh produced the initial Harry Rapf independent productions, including "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days" and "Your Best Friend." These were made in the East. Last summer Mr. Rapf, on renewing his contract with Warner Brothers, went to California, where he has produced this year the following Warner Classics: "Rags to Riches" and "Heroes of the Street" with Wesley Barry and "Brass." The latter production is reported to be one of the greatest pictures of the year. He will be in charge of three producing units next season. Mr. Rapf is recognized in the independent market as one of its greatest producers, his productions having been consistent money-makers for exchangemen and exhibitors in general. His headquarters are located at the Warner Studios, Los Angeles.

W. E. SHALLENBERGER—President of Arrow Film Corporation. Dr. Shallenberger is one of the pioneers in the independent production and distribution fields of endeavor. He enjoys the intimate friendship of every man, woman and child of any consequence in the film business and is recognized as one of its keenest business men. His organization has grown into one of the leading ones in the business. Dr. Shallenberger entered the motion picture business many years ago. He was associated in an executive capacity with Thanhouser Film Corporation and later formed Arrow Film Company, which produced pictures. Some time later he changed his policy, forming Arrow Film Corporation to handle the independent distribution of pictures. Since then his organization has grown by leaps and bounds. He is serving as distributor for some of the leading independent producers in the business. He is releasing all of the Ben Wilson, Eddie Lyons, Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., Pine Tree Pictures Corporation, Maescher Film Corporation, Atlantic Pictures Corporation and Ideal Film Corporation.

To Dr. Shallenberger is given the bulk of credit for putting over Blazed Trails Productions' stellar attraction, "Ten Nights in a Barroom." This picture was turned down by virtually every distributor. Arrow took over the production and literally burned up the market by establishing record after record. Arrow Film Corporation is specializing in super-productions. The firm is now releasing "Lost in a Big City," "Streets of New York," "None So Blind," "Little Red Schoolhouse," "Jacqueline" and others. Its plans for next season, while not yet complete, will be pretentious.

Dr. Shallenberger is also financially interested in production and in several independent exchanges. His offices are on the fourth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street, New York City.

W. RAY JOHNSTON—Born in Bristow, Ia. Entered the motion picture business in 1914 as assistant treasurer of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. He was at that time president of the North Avenue Theatre Company of New Rochelle, assistant treasurer of Syndicate Film Corporation and secretary of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation. Joined W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, in 1917, and has been associated with him ever since. He is also president of Big Productions Film Corporation and treasurer of Arrow Exchanges, Inc., the latter operating the Arrow Exchange in New York City. Mr. Johnston is very popular with exchangemen. He is also vice-president of Arrow Film Corporation. His office is in the Arrow Film Corporation quarters, Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street, New York.

J. CHARLES DAVIS—Assistant to President W. E. Shallenberger, Arrow Film Corporation; entered the picture business ten years ago. Started producing comedies, features and industrials, specialized in that for some time. He later joined Famous Players Corporation, being detailed at the New York exchange of the concern. Later he was assigned to duties at the home offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Resigned that berth to join Arrow Film Corporation as director of advertising and publicity. He is now assistant to President Shallenberger of that firm, and also exercises active supervision over the advertising, publicity, and exploitation departments. His office is in the Arrow Film Corporation quarters, Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street, New York City.

CHARLES C. BURR—President of Mastodon Films, Inc., has been a prominent factor in the production and distribution field for the past ten years. He was the first to inaugurate the exploitation of pictures, for he exploited a series of single reels many years ago when he was connected with the Paramount organization. He resigned from Paramount while assistant manager, and since that time has been producing and releasing pictures on the independent market. Mr. Burr is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. For several years he was a newspaper man in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Kansas City and Chicago. Tiring of the newspaper business he came to New York and joined the advertising department of "Success Magazine," leaving that firm to join the McCall company where he was put in charge of an extensive merchandising and promotion campaign on their dress patterns. Later he joined the Allen Advertising Agency and then went over to the New York Times' staff.

C. C. Burr's first experience as a producer was with the Vitagraph Company and then with the South American travel series in conjunction with C. L. Chester and Jack Eaton. Since then he has produced features regularly. He also has turned out comedies and short subjects. Among Mr. Burr's most notable feature productions are "I Am the Law," "The Silent Barrier," "Secrets of Paris," "Sure Fire Flint," "Burn 'em Up Barnes," "The Last Hour," "Luck" and "You Are Guilty." He also produced the Johnny Hines' "Torchy" comedies of two-reelers and is now making the All-Star comedies, Earl Hurd comedies, a series of WILLIAM T. LACKEY is treasurer of Mastodon Films, Inc. He is a Cornell graduate. He also graduated from the New York University Law School. Mr. Lackey practiced law for some time and then served as captain overseas in the recent World War. He was attached to the Italian army on special duty. After his return he discontinued his practice and became associated with C. C. Burr in the formation of the producing and distributing units, of which Mr. Burr is the head.

RAYMOND HARRIS—Assistant to C. C. Burr, has had wide experience in the picture business. Also he was for some time a newspaperman in the West. He was largely responsible for the success of the Chester-Outing scenics and is well known throughout the trade for his ability in editing, writing and producing short subjects. Mr. Harris has direct supervision over the production of all of the one and two-reel films made by Mastodon.

LESTER F. SCOTT, JR.—Is in charge of sales of Mastodon Films, Inc. He is one of the best-known and best-liked sales representatives in the country. He has a host of friends among exchangemen and exhibitors throughout the country. He was for some time located on the Pacific Coast, where he was actively interested in production. Later he joined the distribution end of the business. At present he is on the road representing C. C. Burr productions. His permanent address is Mastodon Films, Inc., 135 West 44th street, New York City.

RICHARD S. THORPE—Is in charge of the production activities of Mastodon Films, Inc., at the Glendale, Long Island studios. He was formerly manager of a stock vaudeville and musical company and during the war served as Secret Service agent overseas. After his release from service he obtained a position at one of the Paris theatres where he played leading roles in musical shows. After returning to this country he played on the vaudeville stage and later began his picture career in a Dorothy Gish picture. He later joined the ranks of producers and directors. His permanent address is Mastodon Studio, Glendale, L. I. New York.

R. W. BAREMORE—Is publicity, advertising and exploitation director of Mastodon Films, Inc. He is a former newspaper man. At one time he was with Exhibitors' Trade Review and later handled publicity for the United Pictures Theatres, Inc. He returned to the Trade Review and resigned from that publication to go with the New York Morning Telegraph. He has also served as publicity representative for stars. He resigned from the Telegraph in December, 1922, to join C. C. Burr's Mastodon Films, Inc. His office is at the Mastodon Films, Inc., quarters, 135 West 44th street, New York City.

JOE BRANDT—President of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, is one of the leading men in the independent market. Mr. Brandt and Jack Cohn, one of his partners, have literally grown with the business, for the two were associated as far back as in the days of the old Imp company. Later, Mr. Brandt joined Universal as exploitation manager. He was promoted to the general managership of that concern, but later resigned to organize C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, which has been producing and distributing independent features and short subjects. Mr. Brandt is now active in releasing his "Big Six," comprising productions based on famous melodramas. The first two releases were "More To Be Pitied" and "Only a Shop Girl." The third release, "Temptation," is now being produced. His firm also is producing the Hallroom Comedies, Starland Review, Screen Snapshots and other short subjects. The firm is also handling other product of independent producers. Mr. Brandt has been one of the leading exponents of the independent cause and has participated in every move that has had the betterment of the field in general for its motive. He was president of the Independent Producers and Distributors' Association. His offices are at 1600 Broadway, New York City.

JACK COHN—Is one of the best known and oldest independent distributors and producers in the business. He is now secretary of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation and is generally referred to as the "short subject king." Mr. Cohn was Universal's greatest producer of short subjects. Prior to that, he was IMP. Later he organized C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation with Joe Brandt and his brother Harry. His offices are at 1600 Broadway, New York.

HARRY COHN—Is the producing head of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. For many years he has been concentrating on the production of short subjects. He is now overseeing and supervising generally all production on the "Big Six" program of C. B. C. on the Coast. His offices are on the Coast.

SOL LESSER—Is President of Principal Pictures Corporation, which recently absorbed all the Lesser and Rosenberg independent production and distribution interests. Mr. Lesser's career is one of the most interesting known. He first attracted attention while handling "The Birth of a Nation" on the West Coast. The venture reaped a fortune for him and his brother, Irving, and his other associates. Later he took hold of "Mickey," that maker of wealthy film men—and also cleaned up financially. His interests continued expanding. His next big assignment was that during the remarkable showing of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." By this time Mr. Lesser was gradually expanding his interests. He purchased theatres and producing companies and later attracted the attention of the world in general by signing up Jackie Coogan, the boy wonder. With Coogan, Sol Lesser made "My Boy," "Trouble," "Peck's Bad Boy," and "Oliver Twist." He has two other Coogan productions that will be released shortly. Later he organized the Western Pictures Exploitation Corporation and established with several associates independent exchanges in Los Angeles and San Francisco. Last year, together with Irving Lesser and Michael Rosenberg, he organized Principal Pictures Corporation, which absorbed all their combined interests. This company already is functioning actively and next season will produce twenty productions for the independent market. Last month Mr. Lesser and a number of his associates purchased the New York and Coast exchanges of First National, as well as a big interest in several Educational exchanged. They also took over the Turner & Dahnken theatres on the Coast, thus gaining almost absolute control of the first run theatre situation on the Coast. He was also instrumental in putting over a deal that gave Principal Pictures Corporation the ownership of the Vidor Studio in Hollywood. This studio has been renamed Principal Studios. The firm has acquired the rights to many well-known books and stage plays, including a number of Harold Bell Wright books and George M. Cohan plays. They have also signed Guy Bates Post, Bert Lytell and others for appearance in forthcoming releases. Mr. Lesser's offices are at the Principal Pictures Corporation studios in Hollywood, Cal.

IRVING LESSER—Is eastern distribution manager of Principal Pictures Corporation. He has been associated with his brother, Sol, in all the latter's enterprises. He is very popular with exchangemen in general. He was actively and financially interested in the Coogan production ventures. He is now in charge of the eastern headquarters of Principal Pictures Corporation in the Loew State Theatre Building, 1540 Broadway, New York City.

MICHAEL ROSENBERG—Affectionately known to the trade in general as "Mike," is one of the best known figures in the business. His career has been an exceedingly interesting one. He has been associated with the Lesser brothers for some time. He is secretary-treasurer of Principal Pictures Corporation and is also financially interested in exchanges in Seattle and other Northwest sections. He is also interested in theatre interests. His offices are located in the Principal Studio Building, Hollywood, Cal.

HARRY WILSON—Is publicity and exploitation director of Principal Pictures Corporation. He has been associated with the Lesser-Rosenberg interests. He played an important part in the exploitation of the Jackie Coogan productions and is one of the best known publicity men in the country. He recently resigned as press representative for Jackie Coogan Productions, Inc., to devote all his time to Principal Pictures Corporation.

BOBBY NORTH—Is credited with a career that is as interesting as that of any President of the good old U. S. A. When 12 years old he went on the stage and was known as one of the "boy wonders." He had a wonderful singing voice and attracted considerable interest. Later Mr. North joined the burlesque field as comedian and was in his day considered at the helm of his class. He was one of the earliest high-priced stars ever signed by the Columbia Amusement Company. Later he joined the famous team of Weber & Fields, being a headliner with the world-famous combination for some years. It was while he was with Weber & Fields that Bobby met and made the acquaintance of L. Lawrence Weber, brother of Joe Weber. He was induced by Larry to join him in production. The change appealed to Bobby, who was made studio manager of the Weber production activities, which were confined to the making of twenty-five pictures starring Olga Petrova, which Metro released. Since that time Bobby North and Larry Weber have been associated in various branches of the picture business. North & Weber first put Mary Miles Minter and Anna Q. Nilsson in pictures, "Barbara Fritchie" being their first picture. Then they produced "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" with Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson, and "Raffles" with John Barrymore. The two now operate the Weber & North Enterprises, producers and distributors of Will Nigh productions, the first of which was "Notoriety," and the second of which is now being produced. Mr. North is manager and owner with North of the Apollo Exchange and the Apollo Trading Corporation. The two are also interested in a number of "legitimate" producing ventures. Weber & North also are handling "The Curse of Drink." Mr. North knows everybody who is anybody in the show business—and he knows the show and picture business as very, very few know it. His friends are counted by the thousand, not only in this country, but in all parts of the world. His offices are at 1600 Broadway, New York City.

L. LAWRENCE WEBER—Is a wizard in every field of showmanship. At a time when the picture business was in its infancy he foresaw the future of the picture industry and helped organize Metro Pictures Corporation with Rowland and Engel as his associates. He followed this achievement with the organization of Popular Players Corporation, producers of the Olga Petrova pictures. Then came "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson. Next came the Weber productions, followed by the Tiffany Company. He filmed "The Heart of Maryland" with Mrs. Leslie Carter. Among the stars whose career Mr. Weber launched are Gail Kane, Mary Miles Minter, Anna Q. Nillson, Edmund Breese and many others. He is now President of L. Lawrence Weber & Robby North, producers of Will Nigh pictures. He is also President of Apollo Exchange, Inc., and Apollo Trading Company. At the age of 11 he was a star in a minstrel show; at 16

BEN BLUMENTHAL—Ranks as one of the "discoverers" of the picture business. It was Ben Blumenthal who first introduced the famous Pola Negri to the picture business, for he had considerable to do with the bringing over to America of "Passion," her sensational production that earned a fortune for First National. Mr. Blumenthal is head of Export & Import Film Corporation, which, in a quiet way, is doing a tremendous business with independent exchanges and distributors. Mr. Blumenthal is a pioneer and makes many trips between this country and Europe. He was responsible for the wholesale demand for foreign pictures, but his competitors, on invading Europe, discovered that he had obtained all that was worthwhile in European countries. He is associated with many enterprizes in the picture business and out. He is now sponsoring the distribution of "Othello," which opened at the Criterion Theatre in New York this week. Office: Export & Import Film Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Mr. Hoffman has been associated in numerous picture enterprises and makes his office in the Loew State Theatre Building, New York City.

PHIL GOLDSTONE—Was formerly an exhibitor and then an exchangeman. He still has exchange interests in the West. However, he has attracted most attention as a producer. His star, Richard Talmadge, is one of the "finds" of the year. He is now producing a series of melodramatic productions on the West Coast. In addition to the Richard Talmadge pictures, he has made "Deserted at the Altar." His offices are in Los Angeles, Cal.

ARTHUR LEE—Is a member of the independent firm of Lee & Bradford. Mr. Lee was brought into the independent market by the backers of "Determination," which he handled. Mr. Lee is well liked and a thorough showman. His offices are located in the Columbia Theatre Building, 47th street and Seventh avenue, New York.

OSCAR PRICE—Has had a remarkable career. He is first a keen and thorough business man. He has launched a number of successful ventures and has proved a life saver for a lot of shaky propositions. "Good Star-Director Scarce," Says Rapf

By HARRY RAPF
Producer of Many Warner Brothers' Successes

The observations noted in the Independent Department section of Moving Picture World of last week, in so far as they related to the scarcity of good screen players, were correct and emphasized the claims producers on the Coast have been making for some time.

As strange as it may seem to those who are supposed to know the inner workings of the production end of the business, it is extremely difficult to secure good screen players—players who, by virtue of their experience, are actors in the true sense of the word. This phase of the production end is very vital. Without good actors no worth-while productions can be made. And I must say that this fact—all statements to the contrary notwithstanding—is the biggest handicap in a producer's life.

A good screen player is as scarce as a good director. The big directors of today are all in demand. They have no days of leisure. The moment one production is completed, they are at work on another. All of which means that this coming season will see the passing of the cheap and sensational pictures. Instead, the public will be given real high class productions ably and painstakingly produced, containing stories that get under the skin and which are interpreted by the best screen players a producer is able to marshal together.

Motion pictures, and by that I mean good productions, cannot be produced within the requirements of five or six reels, as some exhibitors demand today. If we attempt this formula, and it is nothing but a formula, the art of the motion picture will become stagnant. And there would be no use of having producers. All you'd need would be butchers!

To produce a picture properly, so that the public will find the best entertainment in it, the producer must not be hampered by footage limitations. He must produce the feature in accordance with its just treatment. In other words, given a story that is vital and human, the producer who knows his business will turn out a picture that is a credit to the industry—provided the long arm of the so-called required length demanded by exhibitors does not interfere.

For example, my latest picture, "Brass," is in nine reels. To cut this great picture—and I'm not exaggerating when I call it great—down to six or seven reels would be nothing shorter than butchery. As a matter of fact we have looked at the picture dozens of times to find out whether some portion of it could be cut out. But we found it impossible. We found that if any part of the film was cut, that part would ruin the beauty of the production and the continuity of the story.

And if there is any attempt made to butcher this film the public will not be pleased. The attempt will react on the exhibitor's box-office, and that's the last place any enterprising showman will want a reaction. I cannot too strongly advise exhibitors not to tamper with the completed production.

"I can say with great pride that 'Has the World Gone Mad?' is without doubt the finest of its kind that I have ever handled since I have been in the film business."

man's Masterful Production

e world gone mad!!!

Life-hungry, folly-mad men and women groping, clawing, clutching at the glitter of passing pleasures and missing the golden glow of real happiness!

Youngsters smoking cigarettes and toting hip flasks!

Mothers more frivolous than their youngsters!

Fathers more greedy than the very gold-diggers they toy with!

Marriages decreasing!

Divorces increasing!

That's a brief word-drawn impression of this masterful drama—this poignantly piercing and scathing expose of modern life—this gem of a photo-drama which strikes at the very vitals of life itself!

Quantity of Quality Productions Helps Clear Up Exchange Market

That there is a general tendency among independent and State rights exchangemen to stabilize their interests is generally accepted as a fact among the well informed. The 1921-22 season—the worst the industry has known—proved a Godsend in so far as exchanges were concerned, for the situation developed virtually into a test for the survival of the fittest. With this test came a new class of independent exchangemen. The irresponsible, get-rich-quick, soldier-of-fortune, shoe-string and junk-dealing "exchangemen" found the going too fast. There was no demand for the product. Inability to get new product, lack of ready cash and loss of local and national prestige with exhibitor and national distributor, respectively, resulted in the virtual elimination of this army of hangers-on.

In the place of this army came a group of practical men—men who combined straightforward business methods with keen showmanship. The combination has been a blessing. It has helped clear the market of undesirables. It has increased exhibitor patronage—and what is more, it has won for the energetic independent that recognition for which he had been combating for years. Despite the tightening grip circuit magnates were getting on the theatre situation, with the advent of the current season came increased bookings and at figures that assured the exchangeman a reasonable profit on his investment.

The franchise proposition with which independents had been experimenting developed into a fact—a fact that contributed in an extremely large measure to the meteoric progress of the independent market, for Al Lichtman Corporation, Arrow Film Corporation, Warner Brothers, Charles C. Burr and others formed an alliance with leading exchanges that has brought glory to the field. The franchise method has proved successful—but it has been successful only for those exchanges that have been receiving a steady flow of quality product.

Other exchanges, that probably would have developed with the general development of the field, were forced out mainly because of financial obligations they incurred during the disastrous seasons of 1921 and 1922. They started the current season and bade fair to succeed, but their revenue from good pictures was dissipated by debts acquired in previous seasons. This developed a peculiar situation, for, although with splendid product on hand, these exchanges were without funds to properly merchandise it and had the alternative either of again running into a rut or selling out. A majority of them took the latter course.

The value of good independent productions with box office possibilities was quickly appreciated by theatre-controlling interests, who lost no time in allying themselves with national distributors of such product. We find these interests in virtually every territory. In New York there are the First National and Fabian interests, in New England, Nathan Gordon, Jake Lourie, Columbia Amusement Corporation; in the South, S. A. Lynch; in the Middle West, Balaban & Katz, A. H. Blank, Rubin & Finkelstein, Skouras Brothers, Ascher Brothers; on the Coast the Lesser-Gore-Ramish Theatres interests, and down the line.

While there are many who will insist that the invasion of this faction has not aided independents financially, the fact remains that they have furnished a medium through which independent productions have been given proper public and exhibitor recognition—and artistic prestige.

Appended is, for the first time published, a correct list of bona fide State rights exchanges:

How Exchangemen Sometimes Go Wrong

Roger Ferri On Inside Doings In Independent Market

Junk Dealers Find Going Is too Hard

THE current season has unearthed much interesting "inside information." But very little of that sort of information can be divulged in public print. And because of that fact those involved were able to go through with their questionable moves without fear of expose. Nevertheless, these "sure thing" operators have found it impossible to remain long in any one field—with the result that, while the lucrative promises of August threatened to see a wholesale campaign on the part of these operatives, most of them have been relegated to the "has-been" class or are traveling the road that leads to the poor house.

For a while it looked as if the "junk" dealer was to stage a determined "comeback" at the expense of enterprising State righters. The effort was determined enough, but far from effective. Many of these operatives died in the course of "trying." Exhibitors refused to "fall," with the result that they had to pack up and get out while the getting was good. This situation has helped the independent field in more ways than one. But most important is the fact that this reluctance on the part of the exhibitor to encourage this questionable clan by refusing to do business with it has tended to give the market a clean bill of health. And that's everything at this stage of the fight.

THAT exchangemen stand ready to buy any picture that looks like "real money" has been divulged time and again this year But a prize stunt came to the attention of this writer this week. A certain distributor who is also producing pictures, featuring a star formerly affiliated with a national company, came into possession of an unusually good looking box office bet. Two "big names" were featured in the picture, which cost the distributor $45,000. The production cost was $28,000. But that's neither here nor there.

Last week this distributor started his selling campaign, introducing it with advertisements inserted in trade publications. A buyer came to New York from Philadelphia, saw the picture and was pleased with it. He offered to buy and promised, after laying down his proposition, to return this week. The distributor was pleased with the proposition and offered to close then and there, but the exchangeman insisted on the week.

Meanwhile another rival exchangeman from Philadelphia came to New York and immediately set $7,000 as the price he would pay for the picture. The distributor immediately wired the first bidder, told him of the new offer and the latter told him to go ahead. The distributor did. And he cleared about $3,000 profit he had not expected on the picture for the Philadelphia territory, which is a four and one-half territory.

EVERYBODY is talking about Gene Roth's picture, "Hunting Wild Animals in Africa with Gun and Camera." This is by far the best animal picture shown in this country, and the theatre-going public is demonstrating its satisfaction by patronizing the Selwyn Theatre in capacity numbers to see it. The picture has been loudly praised by critics, and will be shown throughout the country on a legitimate attraction basis. Jeff McCarthy and Teddy Mitchell are handling the picture—and in big-league fashion, too. The production opens in Boston for a run of two weeks.

The owner of the picture peddled it to every national distributing and independent organization for several months. They all turned it down. They characterized it as hopeless. Then Gene Roth, who "dogged" it at his theatre on the coast, bought it, leased the Selwyn, and is mopping up with it. Now independent exchangemen are stretching every effort to buy territorial rights—but they are not available. Not yet, anyway.

THAT operating an exchange chock full of big productions is anything but a hugely profitable venture was demonstrated recently in the visit to New York by two exchangemen. Both hail from the same city. One gentleman is operating a money-making exchange, concentrating on the output of one distributing company. The other tied himself up with a concern that is releasing a series of productions that are making money consistently. However, he has tied up other so-called "big" product. Result is his overhead expenses have been so great that he had to hurry to New York for the purpose of lining up some cheaper priced product.

He made proposition after proposition, but the distributors gave him no satisfaction. Meanwhile, his rival managed to tie up about eight pictures. In desperation, the "big timer" offered to buy his competitor's product, offering him a profit of $2,000 in cash. But he was turned down. Then as a last resort he volunteered to buy his friend's exchange outright and engage his services at a princely salary. But again he flunked.

LOUIS WERBA, who has been in show business all his life, having won much attention some time ago as a member of the theatrical firm known as Werba & Luescher (Mark Luescher, publicity director for Charley Dillingham and the Hippodrome), will bring his production, "Barnum Was Right," into the Eltinge Theatre next week. The show opened in Baltimore two weeks ago and then played Providence, R. I., last week. The company is now laying off in New York. Newspaper reviewers have given the production a remarkable send-off. It is a second "Seven Keys to Baldpate," only better. It didn't take film men long to appreciate the screen possibilities of "Barnum Was Right" and the current week saw a half dozen producers' agents trying to buy the screen rights. However, Werba is sitting tight, pending the New York showing.

THE other afternoon we had the extreme displeasure of having to listen, for an hour, to a certain aggrieved State righter, who has had more or less of a see-saw career, bobbing up every now and then. Inasmuch as he was paying for our lunch, having buttonholed us in the Astor lobby, we had no other course but that of listening. And we proved "some listener." However, the point is that this gentleman had nothing but complaints. He insisted on acquainting us with his claim of just how good he was and at the same time of "knocking" those who are really delivering the goods. After the luncheon, he arose and said: "Far be it from me to knock anybody, but, on the level, doesn't it beat hell to see these birds mopping up?" And he kidded himself to believe he was right, so why kid a kidder?

WARNER BROTHERS are taking over the entire ninth floor of the building at 1600 Broadway. This is another evidence of meteoric progress. This organization has been growing in leaps and bounds. To Harry M. Warner, one of the brainiest men in any business, must go the bulk of credit for this remarkable showing. He is at the helm of an organization that has been doing "big things," and doing them in a big way. Their increased floor space is consistent with their announced policy of general expansion, for the Warners will produce eighteen pictures, which will mean that the entire personnel of the organization will have to be doubled. And we understand that is precisely what the Warners will do.

THERE is a report current in well-informed circles that Frank Hall is about to return to the film producing and distributing business. While he has been interested financially in a number of independent producing ventures, it is said that he will soon announce publicly the organization of an independent concern to handle pictures that will be made in the East at the Ideal studios in New Jersey.

JACQUELINE," a James Oliver Curwood story, has been in the "works" for four months. Arrow Film Corporation will release this picture, which was made by the Pine Tree Pictures Corporation. The amount invested in the production is said to have been considerably more than was originally estimated, some two hundred thousand feet of film having been taken. Dell Henderson directed. The picture was completed about two months ago and is still being cut and edited. Just when it will be released has not been made known, although Arrow officials are very enthusiastic about it.

ARTHUR C. BROMBERG, of Bromberg Attractions, Inc., Atlanta, Ga., is a keen showman and a shrewd business man. And incidentally a clever publicity man. Some time ago a certain Bishop took a fling at the movies in general, characterizing them as constituting the "worst form of amusement." The statement was published by all the Atlanta papers. Bromberg immediately sat down and wrote out a clever reply, shattering every contention of the reverend gentleman. Incidentally, the Bromberg statement was "played up" with two-column headlines.

NATHAN HIRSCH had a hard time convincing exchangemen he had a money-maker in "The Man Unconquered," a Maciste starring vehicle, until that film cleaned up in Baltimore and in Lawrence, Mass., where Nathan showed it as an investment and proof that the picture would coin argent. Both engagements proved hugely profitable and now Hirsch is hearing again from those he had approached in the first place. But Nathan is now on the listening end—and inclined to believe there is something to that Missourian theory.

Independents on Coast Already Have 200 Pictures Planned for Open Market for Coming Season

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Never before has the outlook for independents been so promising. Never before have independents been in the position to promise as much as they can now. And never before has there been such wholesale production activities among independent producers on the West Coast. Something like 30 independent pictures are being made. A careful survey of independents' plans for next season indicate that in so far as the West Coast is concerned independent exchangemen and exhibitors can expect something like 200 productions. This number is expected to increase as the new season approaches.

Warner Brothers' studio will house three units that will be kept extremely busy turning out eighteen productions that will be distributed through independent exchanges. So far as could be ascertained at the Schulberg studios, Preferred Pictures Corporation will have something like 12 specials for distribution through Al Lichtman exchanges. The Lesser-Rosenberg interests at the Principal studios report their firm will release some 20 pictures next season. Phil Goldstone is planning 12 pictures. Ben Wilson also is planning a dozen pictures.

Independent production on the Coast has increased approximately 200 per cent during the past eight months. Independents have come to realize that it is no longer a question of getting a market for their product; it is now a question of getting the proper stars, for they are satisfied that the best bet in the independent market is a product that is of the high class order and that the exchangeman can feel justified furnishes adequate competition with the national distributing organizations.

Edw. Dillon is busily engaged with "Broadway Gold," which he is making for Truart Film Corporation. Elaine Hammerstein is starred in this picture, in which also appears Elliott Dexter and Kathlyn Williams. It is understood that Truart will make a series of productions in which Elaine Hammerstein, the former Selznick star, will be featured.

Harry Rapf, the Warner Brothers' producer, will establish his home permanently in this city, according to information at the Warner studio. Harry has taken quite a fancy to the West Coast. However, he is only one of the numerous former New Yorkers who, when it came to a choice, decided to plant himself here.

Rapf and Sam Warner are now in New York and are expected to return here next week. Production activities will be started at the Warner studios some time within the next six weeks. Production on "Main Street," the last of the Warner 1922-1923 output, is nearly completed. This picture will be released in April.

Warner Brothers' float, which has been on tour for the past few months, advertising the pictures released by that firm, is expected in this city some time late next week. It will be in California about a month and then return to New York, advertising next year's product, via the southern territory.

After almost a year's preparations actual filming of "The Silent Accuser" a six-reel drama, wherein the intricate system of police identification plays an important part, has begun at the Hollywood studios under the direction of Richard Thomas. The cast includes Carmel Myers, Carol Halloway, Melbourne MacDowell, Kathryn McGuire, Clyde Fillmore, Spottiswoode Aitken and Edward Borman.

Mike Rosenberg and Sol Lesser are letting no dirt grow under their feet, for they are laboring overtime completing plans for next season. They are both negotiating through their eastern manager, Irving Lesser, with a number of producers of stage plays which they hope to adapt to the screen for next season.

The forces that made "The Drug Traffic," written by Harvey Gates, broke records here. They made this feature picture in about eight full days. The production was completed on the twelfth and edited and finally cut about a week later, and prints were shipped to the exchanges the middle of last week, and should have arrived at the exchange centres on Monday of this week.

Irving Cummings expects to have "East Side, West Side," which he is now making for Principal Pictures Corporation, ready within the next two weeks. He has been shooting on this picture for the past three weeks.

There is a strong possibility that Bert Lytell may make another picture for Principal Pictures Corporation. He is now appearing in "The Meanest Man in the World," which is being produced at the Principal studios.

Sanford Productions, Inc., are completing their next Pete Morrison five-reeler, entitled "Mistaken Identity." W. J. Craft, who directed Hoot Gibson for Universal, is directing the Morrison pictures for F. W. Sanford.

John Barrymore, who has been signed by Warner Brothers for roles in "Dubarau" and "Beau Brummel," is expected to start work on the first of those pictures early in the spring. The picture will be made at the Warner studios.

"Big Boy" Williams, the western star, according to reports heard in reliable circles here, will make a series of pictures that will be State righted by Nathan Hirsch of Aywon Film Corporation of New York. He made a series of pictures for Aywon last year.

Guy Bates Post will shortly start production at the Ince studios on his first independent picture. E. de Newman and Robert Thornby of Courtland Productions, Inc., will supervise the productions, which will be released through Principal Pictures Corporation in the open market.

Phil Goldstone announces the release date of the thrilling fire picture, featuring Richard Talmadge, entitled "Through the Flames," will be March 1. The city of Los Angeles' fire department was used in making this picture, and two three-story buildings were burned down to get thrilling realism. Richard Talmadge is supported by Charlotte Pierce, Fred Kohler, S. J. Bingham, Edith Yorke, Taylor Graves, C. H. Mailes, Ruth Langston, M. Geary and Pal, the dog.

Phil Goldstone announces that the special feature, "David Crockett," will be photographed in the exact locale. An exact reproduction of the Alamo is being built and will be destroyed during the picture in the same manner as the original Alamo was destroyed, and solid concrete is being used in building the replica of the Alamo of today. The remaining part is being made of wood, with the result that after the fire the Alamo will look as it looks today. An all-star cast will shortly be announced, and it is expected that shooting will start May 1.

Phil Goldstone announces that, following the second series of the Richard Talmadge Productions, the second of which, "Through the Flames," will be released Mar. 1, Richard Talmadge will appear in four specials, the first one being "The Pirate," from the famous book and story by Sir Walter Scott.

"His Last Race," a Phil Goldstone production, featuring an all-star cast of Pauline Starke, Gladys Brockwell, Noah Beery, Robert McKim, Tully Marshall, Alec B. Francis, Rex (Snowy) Baker and Boomerang, the Wonder Horse, is now being titled and will be offered for release about March 15.

"Oh Ye Fools" is the latest picture awaiting production on the list of the Big Six announced early in the season by C. C. Burr for the independent market; Edgar Lewis will direct the production. Three of the Big Six, "Luck," with Johnny Hines, "You Are Guilty," with James Kirkwood and Doris Kenyon, and "The Last Hour," with Milton Sills and Carmel Myers, are finished and being edited for first runs. Plans for the next program have not been announced by C. C. Burr as yet.

Word comes from the Schulberg studios to the Al Lichtman office that Ruth Clifford has replaced Harriet Hammond in the cast of Tom Forman's production, "April Showers." Miss Hammond was forced to leave the cast because of illness.

Eve Unsell has finished editing "The Girl Who Came Back," the Blaney play which is to be presented by B. P. Schulberg as a Tom Forman production. The feature will be released early in the spring by the Al Lichtman Corporation. Its cast includes Miriam Cooper, Gaston Glass, Kenneth Harlan, Fred Malatesta, Joseph Dowling and Zasu Pitts.

Three ring-side champions have been added to the cast of "April Showers," Tom Forman's production now in the making at the Schulberg studios. These are Kid McCoy, Leach Cross and Danny Goodman. The featured players in this film, written by Hope Loring and her husband, Frank Lighton, are Colleen Moore, Kenneth Harlan, Ruth Clifford and Priscilla Bonner.

Gasnier has started his next picture "Mothers-in-Law," at the Schulberg studios. This will be the next Gasnier production for release by the Al Lichtman Corporation after "Poor Men's Wives." Gaston Glass, Ruth Clifford, Joseph Swickard and Cranford Kent are in the cast.

Cohn Pays Glowing Tribute on World's Help to Independents

On the occasion of the Moving Picture World's special Independent Edition permit me to express my own appreciation—and that of the entire Independent field—for the fine co-operation and very real help your publication has tendered us during the year past.

If the Independents have grown in strength, have won attention, have merited the confidence of the exhibitors and the public—they owe more than they can ever repay of that debt to the Moving Picture World, and particularly to that publication's Independent Section, and Roger Ferri, the editor of that section.

It has consistently pointed out the mistakes, as well as the forward strides the Independents have made—and has, by virtue of its intelligent and far-seeing judgment, helped materially to guide them in the right paths of production, distribution, exploitation—all the many points that must be considered in the picture industry.

May you live long to carry on the good work. We all owe you a deep and sincere vote of thanks!

Gratefully yours,

(Signed) JACK COHN,

Treasurer, C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

"Othello" is a full-blooded motion picture. It has vitality, it is direct and true, it is a thing of action. It rises by many degrees of excellence above the usual offering on the screen.—New York Times.

"Othello" is acted with surpassing strength. The great German character actor, Emil Jannings, and that other distinguished German, Kraus, combine two superb performances and bring to Broadway what is beyond question the finest acting that is on view here at this time.—Quinn Martin—N. Y. World.

"Othello" excels in film form. A powerful, efficient work. Emil Jannings as the Moor and Kraus as Iago shine in a brilliantly balanced cast. Technically and artistically pleasing to the mind and eye. A prestige that is given few motion pictures.—Louella Parsons—Morning Telegraph.

"Othello" is presented with all of the splendor and with all of the enormous gatherings which distinguish the foreign productions. Superbly acted with Emil Jannings in the title role. A wonderful production.

Harriette Underhill—N. Y. Tribune.

Emil Jannings is impressive as Othello. He makes the Moor of Venice more human than we have ever seen him before. A motion picture one should not miss. Superbly acted.—Evening Sun.

Shakespeare-in-the-movies gains new and powerful impetus from this production of "Othello." Jannings looks and acts the part in a manner that is sure o add to his fame. The tragic pathos of his interpretation haunts one. Here is an Othello that seems to live the role.—Evening Telegram.

Independents Sign First Rate Directors for New Productions

One important phase of the independent market, as it has developed during the past year, concerns the directorial end of production activities, both on the Coast and in the East. The increased exhibitor patronage noted this season has been the means of inducing producers to get the best directorial talent available in the market. Until 1921 one could count the number of acceptedly notable directors who were making pictures exclusively for independent distribution on the fingers of one hand. True, the pictures of a few of the better known directors did make their way into the independently owned exchanges, but these represented product national distributors had turned down.

With the general betterment of the market in general came producers, who, realizing the necessity of "big" pictures—quality productions, if you please—immediately lassooed the best directors available, making them substantial propositions they found impossible to turn down. These got to work without loss of time, and, given adequate financial support, were enabled to make productions that proved their mettle at the box office. With the success of these now initiated independent directors came others, others with "names" that could be commercialized.

And today we find the independent market brilliantly dignified by the presence of successful and superlative directors who are devoting all of their time making productions for release to exhibitors through independent releasing channels. Those directors who have this year or will next year direct independent pictures follow, together with some of the 1922-23 productions they made, and releasing firms:

Cameramen Doing Their Share to Elevate Artistry in S-R Pictures

More and more the cameraman is attracting the attention not only of the trade in general, but of the theatre-going public. This latter development—this public demand for good photography in productions—has prompted independent producers to spare no expense in acquiring cameramen who knew something more concerning the requiems of production-making than merely to look on and turn the crank. Independent productions are improving remarkably from a photography viewpoint—and this fact is serving as a helping wedge.

Below is a list of photographers who have either worked at, or will turn the crank in the course of the making of independent pictures:

David Abel	Billy Bitzer	William Beckley
Jacques Bizuel	John Brown	Fred Chaston
William Crolly	J. Diamond	Charles Downs

"Keep Faith We Have Won" Is Sound Advice of Joe Brandt

By JOE BRANDT
President C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation

HOW time flies—a year?—why, practically nothing happens in a year!" We are apt to say—and that's pretty true almost anywhere—except in the motion picture business. A year is a longer time—or a shorter time, depending on how you look at it—in the motion picture business than anywhere else. Things happen more quickly and more suddenly there than anywhere else—when one considers in what record time this industry has grown to be the power it is—and how many companies have sprung into being and fallen by the wayside in that time!

For the independents this has been a time of perhaps the greatest achievement of any branch of the industry, because the independents have proved themselves more and more a power to be reckoned with, a very definite and important factor in the scheme of things. Who, a year ago, would have had the courage to predict independent productions of such a calibre that their showing in the big first run Broadway houses would be an accepted fact? Who would have believed that the "all star" cast in an independent production would be a reality rather than a publicity line? Who would have thought that the time would come when exhibitors would willingly show the independents the fifty-fifty break they had been literally begging for—that these same exhibitors would of their own will leave open dates, confident that there would come along a certain number of independently produced features that would merit their booking into these open dates?

Yet all these things have come! "Shadows," one of the outstanding successes of the season, was an independent picture! David Belasco has been induced to enter the motion picture field—and by an independent firm! John Barrymore has been signed up by an independent firm! The casts and calibre of independent productions, including our own "More to Be Pitied," "Only a Shopgirl," has attracted sufficient attention to merit their booking into the best first run houses throughout the country—with a first-run calibre exploitation campaign to back them up.

Now that we've got it, we must sit down, quietly and honestly, and think what we're going to do with it. We independents have gone far along the road we meant to travel—and now comes the most difficult part—to keep the faith we have won, so we may go even further.

The independents have fine plans for the coming months—plans that, when they shall have materialized, will mean much to the industry and to the public. Warner Brothers' program of Screen Classics is one of the biggest producing programs ever attempted. Weber & North, Equity, C. C. Burr, Lichtman, our own Six Box Office Winners, of which "Temptation," just completed, will, we believe, merit the term "big production"—all are undertakings of which we may be justly proud.

During the months to come it is safe to say all eyes will be on the independents. They will all be looking at us—some with approval, some with disapproval perhaps—but all with interest.

We have destroyed, forever, I hope, the myth exhibitors harbored that we are not dependable. The independents have proven their dependability—and with the continued and growing co-operation of exhibitors there is no limit to the scope of their enterprise, and no venture too costly if we can but get the encouragement we need.

Warners Enlarge Studio for Increased Production Schedule

Like a puffball shot from the heavenly blue, Jack, Sam and Albert Warner, who, with their brother, Harry M., guide the destiny of the Warner Brothers organization, unitedly declared this week that the coming season of 1923-24 will be the biggest in the history of their business. This statement has been made time and again by scores of other officials of producing and distributing organizations, but coming as it does from the Warners it can be taken at its true face value. And that, indeed, is saying a great deal.

The Warners plan eighteen classics of the screen for the coming season. They have engaged a number of screen players, Monte Blue, Marie Prevost and Harry Myers, under long term contracts. They have also secured the exclusive services of Sidney Franklin, one of the besst and ablest directors in the industry. With this constellation there has been added to the scenario staff such well known writers as Julien Josephson, Grant Carpenter, Edmund Goulding and Frank Dazey.

In order to efficiently carry on their production schedule, the Warner Coast studios had to be enlarged. As a consequence five and a half acres of ground were added to their previous studio acreage, which consisted of about four acres. On this nine and a half acre site in Los Angeles Sam, Jack and Albert Warner have had constructed what is declared to be one of the greatest, if not the greatest, studio on the Coast at an approximate expenditure of $50,000.

It will contain every modern appliance used in the production of motion pictures.

"Our production schedule for the coming season," said Sam Warner, who came to New York to confer with his brother, Harry M., "will be facilitated by our exceptionally efficient studio staff, in addition to the vast expanse of ground that is available for our directors. We have spared no pains nor expense in making our studios thoroughly modern in every respect, especially for the convenience of the many actors and actresses we will engage for the producing units.

"One of the big factors in the production of a feature is the elimination of waste motion and waste film. Many organizations pay little if any attention to this fact, and as a consequence the cost of a feature even staggers the producer. They figure a certain amount for a given production, and after the shooting has been completed they cannot understand why they have more than doubled their original estimate. In many instances, this cannot be helped, because unlooked for situations occur which necessitate the added expenditure.

"But taken on the whole the curtailment of wastage of both film and time, and by that I mean closely watching the production and its many phases, will make it possible for exhibitors to book films far cheaper. Exhibitors have long decried the published statements that such and such a picture cost in the neighborhood of six figures Such costs are rare exceptions, of course, but estimates close to that figure have been splurged time and again. The result is that people in and out of the industry gain the impression that producers are running wild, spending money recklessly and for no ultimate good purpose.

"As far as the Warner Brothers are concerned every picture will be produced within reasonable limits, and there will be perfection in every department of our production forces. We have guarded ourselves against any possible emergency. The best obtainable craftsmen in the business have been secured, and with these we hope to bring forth an array of independent productions that will not only help to elevate the art of the motion picture, but also help to restore and create renewed interest on the part of the theatre-going public."

FRANK ZAMBRENO
One of the most popular men in the business—Owner of the Progress Exchange in Chicago and Indianapolis.

Co-Operation Is Aiding 'Changemen In the Southwest

DENVER, COL.—(Special)—This is perhaps the most unprofitable territory in the independent market. This is chiefly because of the distance between points and the time required in transporting prints from one theatre to another. The territory is valued at a trifle over one per cent, and even with that low valuation local exchangemen are not at all hasty about buying pictures. However, better productions and better pictures in larger quantities have earned for the independent exchangeman here the cooperation of exhibitors. This has helped tremendously in more ways than one. However, the situation here is still somewhat gloomy and wonderful only in spots.

Optimism among independents is the watchword. News from New York and the Coast has brought information giving an inkling to the splendid product slated for next year with the result that exhibitors are planning and expecting a steady flow of consistently good pictures from the exchanges. The advent of Harry Nolan in the exchange field has attracted much attention locally, for Harry is well known as an exhibitor and immensely popular with theatre owners and exchangemen alike. He will handle the Al Lichtman Corporation product of Preferred Pictures in this territory.

There are about a dozen firms here handling State rights pictures, but the leading distributors are Arrow Photoplays Company, Mountain States Film Attractions, Warner Brothers' Exchange, Harry Nolan, Independent Film Exchange of America and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange.

Following is the complete exchange list with managers thereof: All-Star Pioneer Features, 1742 Glenarm street, A. J. Hepner; Argus Enterprises, Inc., 1519 Glenarm street, F. A. Ramenstein; Associated First National of Colorado, 2108 Broadway, J. H. Ashby; Arrow Photoplays Company, 1753 Welton street, Charles Zagrans; Independent Film Exchange, 2000 Broadway, H. A. Kyler; Lannon-Sheffield Exchanges, 1734 Broadway, L. T. Fidler; Merit Film Company, 2104 Broadway, M. M. Kravetz; Mountain States Film Attractions, Inc., 2104 Broadway; E. J. Burr Made Good His Promises with Big Box Office Winners

Some little time ago C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films Inc., made the announcement that he would release a series of features to be known as the Bix Six, for the independent trade that would prove of exceptional box office value because of big stories, big casts, big productions and big directors.

A brief outline of what Mr. Burr has accomplished proves that he has lived up to his promises.

The first of the Bix Six was Edwin Carewe's, "I Am the Law" with Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Wallace Beery, Rosemary Theby Wallace and Noah Beery. It went over like a house afire and is still going strong.

Then came "Sure Fire Flint," Johnny Hines' second melocomedy and it is a matter of recent film history the record this feature has made. It was accorded highest praise from public, critics and exhibitors. Supporting Johnny were such well known players as Doris Kenyon, Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson, Effie Shannon, J. Barney Sherry, and Russell Griffin, the remarkable child actor.

Following this "Secrets of Paris," the Whitman Bennett production, was released. It is an adaptation of Eugene Sue's story, "The Mysteries of Paris," started on a box office career that is sweeping the country and bids fair to keep going strong for many months. Another all-star cast appeared in "Secrets of Paris," including Lew Cody, Gladys Hulette, Montague Love, Dolores Cassinelli, J. Barney Sherry, William Collier, Jr., Rose Coghlan, Effie Shannon, Jane Thomas, and Walter James.

"The Last Hour," adapted from Frank R. Adams' story "Blind Justice," which originally appeared in Munsey's Magazine, was the next on Mr. Burr's list. This Edward Sloman production had it's premiere in New England, thirty-two first run theatres booking it in that territory where it still is enjoying a remarkable success. Still another unusual cast is seen in this production. Milton Sills and Carmel Myers are featured with Alec Francis, Charles Clary, Pat O'Malley, Eric Mayne and Walter Long prominent in the support.

"Luck," the newest and said to be the greatest of the Johnny Hines' melocomedies, is number five on the schedule. It has not as yet been released but at a recent try-out, going in "cold" at a little out of town theatre, it had the audience laughing and thrilled from start to finish. "Luck" was written by Jackson Gregory with titles by Ralph Spence, who performed the same successful work with "Sure Fire Flint." Supporting Johnny in his latest are Violet Mersereau, Charlie Murray, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Flora Finch, Warner Richmond and Polly Moran.

Following "Luck" will come, "You Are Guilty," an Edgar Lewis production with James Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Mary Carr and Russell Griffin. The story and scenario are by Roy Middleton and the feature was directed by Edgar Lewis. Advance reports lead one to believe that it is a melodramatic photodrama that will undoubtedly prove most successful.

C. C. Burr has just announced his plans for the future. At least eight feature productions will be made, two Johnny Hines melocomedies and the others adaptions from widely read novels or specially written stories. "Rich Men's Sons," by Gerald C. Duffy, the author of "Sure Fire Flint," and, "The Average Woman," the Dorothy de Jaegers Saturday Evening Post story, are already being prepared for production.

In addition to the features, a complete list of which will soon be announced, Mr. Burr will continue to release the beautiful scenics photographed by Rollin Lester Divon and E. W. Van Scoy, together with his novelty one-reeler, Burr's Novelty Review. There is also a strong likelihood that a series of pictures starring little Russell Griffin will be placed on the independent market.

Although Johnny Hines has graduated from the ranks of the two reelers the famous Torchy Comedies will continue to be produced. A well known star to play the title role in these films has been signed.

Maurice Cohen Manager of W.-B. Buffalo Exchange

BUFFALO — (Staff Special) — Maurice Cohen, formerly with Grand & North and Nu-Art in Albany, and who has been with several local exchanges, is the new Warner Brothers' exchange manager, succeeding J. R. Levee. Norman Speer and H. A. Seed have arrived from New York to tour the western New York territory as W-B salesmen.

George Schaeffer has been assigned to the Rochester territory by Manager Harry Bernstein of the Buffalo Universal exchange.

Ralph Myserson, of Macmy Pictures Corporation, Buffalo, has made an arrangement whereby Local-Grams will be shown in the Eastman Theatre early in March. The film will be put on i nco-operation with the Rochester Times-Union. Prizes will be given by the newspaper for the best local contributions each week.

Fred Zimmerman, general sales manager of Bond Photoplays Corporation, was in town last week to meet Ed Fay. Fred signed up the Federated, Hallroom and Joe Rock comedies for showing in Fay's Theatre.

Max Rowley is now a Merit salesman. He is well known in this part of the state, where he has been connected with several exchanges. N. I. Filkins, manager of the Merit office, has signed up "A Darling of the Rich," for presentation at the Lafayette Square in connection with a personal appearance of Betty Blythe, the star.

R. T. Murphy, manager of the Renown Pictures exchange, announces the resignation of Howard Riehl from his sales staff. Mr. Murphy has just received a print of Irving Cummings' "The Drug Traffic."

Cubberley Shows Way in Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS—(Special)—J. Fred Cubberley is back at his office at the F. & B. Exchange, after a most successful visit to New York where he closed for 31 pictures which his exchange will handle. Mr. Cubberley has met with unusual success in this hard-hit territory, his grosses on pictures already released in many instances being even greater than those hung up by exchanges in more lucrative territories. Considerable interest was aroused among film interests when it was made known that he had bought the 31 pictures.

Twenty-nine westerns including series of productions featuring several of the most popular western stars of today, are included in the purchase announced by Cubberley. All of these pictures are five-reel offerings, and will fill a long-felt exhibitor need for shorter features, he said.

The group of 29 westerns acquired by Cubberley comprises: Six Neal Hart pictures, six William Fairbanks pictures, six "Big Boy" Williams' starring vehicles, six starring Jack Hoxie, three featuring "Snowy" Baker and two pictures which boast special casts.

Johnny Hines' new feature, "Luck," which Cubberley predicts will surpass the records set by "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "Sure Fire Flint," is to be distributed in the territory by F. & R. under the terms of a contract closed by Cubberley with C. C. Burr. "His Last Hour," another Burr production, in which Milton Sills and Alice Lake are featured, also was acquired by the F. & R. manager.

Ben Friedman, of Friedman Film Exchange, has announced the arrival of prints for "The Drug Traffic," featuring Gladys Brockwell and Barbara Tennent. He will release the picture in this territory. The release date has been fixed for Monday, March 5th.

Business in this territory has been a surprise to the hardest-boiled film men. Prospects for a good season for independents were not so promising last Summer, but with a deluge of good product, exhibitors have fallen in line.

The Finkelstein & Rubin theatre circuit's interest in the F. & R. Exchange has contributed in no small way to the success of that exchange, for productions handled by that office have been given splendid showings and elaborately explointed in key cities in the territory. In this way the pictures have been properly "sold" to exhibitors who have seemingly grabbed all the big specials independents could send here.

Friedman Film Exchange will handle all the Principal Pictures in this territory, according to reports current here. Friedman has purchased "The World's a Stage" and "Environment," the first two Principal releases.

Associated Photo-Plays, Inc. Reorganizes; to Star Sills

Announcement is made by Samuel H. London, general manager Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., of the reorganiation of that company and the re-establishment of their franchise plan of distribution.

The Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., will re-enter the independent market with a series of five productions starring Milton Sills, directed by John Gorman and produced by the John Gorman Productions.

The first production, "Why Women Remarry," has just been completed. It is announced as a human drama of everyday life from the story by Van A. James.

Milton Sills has been surrounded with an unusual star cast headed by Ethel Grey Terry, and including such well known screen players as Carol Holloway, Clarissa Selwynne, Wilfred Lucas and William Lowery.

The Asociated Photo-Plays has just opened a sales office in the Loew Building, 1540 Broadway. Another production unit starring a well known screen player will shortly be announced.

"Brass" Opens at Park, Boston, for Long Engagement

BOSTON—(Special)—Warner Brothers' latest production, said to be their masterpiece and characterized generally by those who have seen it as the "greatest picture of the year," "Brass," opens an indefinite engagement at the Park Theatre in the downtown section on Monday, March 5, at advanced prices. The top price will be $1.50, the same figure asked for "Robin Hood" during the run of that feature in this section.

William D. Shapiro, manager of Franklin Film Exchange, which is handling the Warner product in this territory, is particularly enthusiastic about this production, which will be given a de luxe showing. Al Feinman, the Warner exploitation man, is here, already advertising the engagement.

In the victory scored by the Emery Brothers' interests over the Shuberts last week, when the former regained control and possession of their theatre, the Majestic, a 2300-seat house, independent exchangemen found considerable room for enthusiasm. The house will open as a first-run picture theatre on March 31 and, according to Bill Mahoney, manager of the Rialto Theatre, who, together with Martin Touhey of the Emery Theatre, will book the pictures into the new auditorium, either "Poor Men's Wives" or "The Hero" will be the opening attraction. An orchestra of 25 pieces is now being organized. The performances at the Majestic will be de luxe affairs, and two pictures shown on the bill, together with musical interruptions.

Equity's latest Daniel Carson Goodman production, "Has the World Gone Mad?" will be given its New England premier, showing at the Victory Theatre here late this week on the same bill with "The Pilgrim," the Charles Chaplin production, which will be shown at every Providence theatre simultaneously.

Business generally in New England picture houses has been on the increase, although the demand insofar as independent exchanges are concerned, has been confined exclusively to the better type of pictures.

Reports along film row verify the story published in Moving Picture World that Harry Ascher, manager of American Feature Film Company, and Sam Grand of Federated Exchange, while on the Coast will make a study of conditions with a view of entering the production field.

Franklin Film Exchange, according to reports heard in reliable sources, has already signed with Warner Brothers for their output of pictures for next season.

Sam Moscow will continue handling the productions made under the supervision of Charles C. Burr.

Principal Will Make "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

Another classic is to be given everlasting life on the silver sheet of filmdom. Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, announces the intention of that organization to start work immediately on a massive production of Harriet Beecher Stowe's famous story, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." This production promises to be one of the biggest film achievements in the career of Lesser and his associates. The Stowe story will be filmed in strict adherence to the original volume and one of the interesting facts pertaining to its production is that the entire story will be made in Los Angeles.

Instead of going to the ice regions, Principal Pictures will bring the ice and snow to their studio. Experts on ammonia process for ice making will be engaged to transform the studios of the Lesser organization into huge ice fields and frozen rivers. The entire studio area of Principal Pictures Corporation will be used for this production which is the main reason for the recent arrangements made by Lesser for production of Guy Bates Post's initial picture at the Thomas H. Ince studios and the Irving Cummings productions will all be made at Hollywood Studios.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" was made by the World Film Corporation ten years ago. "Oliver Twist" was made many years ago also and Lesser has just released his Jackie Coogan version of the Dickens story to big success.

"Any book," says Mr. Lesser, "that survives generation after generation and that is read and re-read by the public, is deserving of everlasting life on the screen. We aim to gather together a cast of exceptional screen players to enact the Harriet Beecher Stowe story and it is our plan to start work as soon as sets are built and the players engaged."

Lesser also stated that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" would probably be given the public in road-show form.

"The Greatest Menace" Is New Drug Film

"The Greatest Menace" is now ready for the screen. This brand new picture which has its theme a "kayo" punch at the drug evil is to be released for territorial presentation by Mayer and Quinn on the state rights plan. Nothing has been left undone by the producers, J. G. Mayer, is making the production complete in every particular and the cast is an all-star one and includes some of the biggest players in filmdom. The story is the original work of Angela G. Kaufman, with the screen adaptation by Albert Rogell, who also directed the film.

"The Greatest Menace" tells the story of a young American, who becomes enmeshed by the drug horror. The authorities are making a fight against the drug system and in the metropolitan city where the locale offers proper environment, the son of the District Attorney is used by the system leaders to offset the work of the legal battlers.

It is a love story. A sister of the boy who becomes a drug addict, takes up the fight to save him from total destruction and her triumph is realistically and graphically depicted by the motion picture camera. The role of the sister is portrayed by Ann Little, who has starred in numerous big features. Robert Gordon enacts the brother and his characterization as a "dope fiend" is one of the bright spots of the story. Wilfred Lucas plays the boy's father. Harry Northrup is seen as the master mind of the dope ring. His chief-of-staff is played by "Red" Kirby. The part of a girl drug addict is taken by Rhea Mitchell. Other roles are played by Jack Livingston, Andrew McClellan, Mildred June, Gordon Mullen and Lew Meehan.

Hirsh Closes Many New Picture Sales

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, which is releasing an anti-drug picture entitled, "The Drug Monster," this week reported numerous sales on productions that his firm is state righting. Melvin Hirsh is now on the road and reports sent back to New York intimate a number of other deals will be closed before the expiration of this week. The sales announced follow:

Progress Pictures of Washington, D. C., purchased for the territory of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, "White Hell" and "Dawn of Revenge," both starring Richard Travers; "Woman of Mystery," starring Francis Ford, and "The Rum Runners," starring Leo Maloney. Big Feature Rights purchased for Kentucky and Tennessee, "The Woman of Mystery" and "The Unconquered," starring Maciste. Apex Pictures of Pittsburgh, purchased for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, "The Unconquered." The Pearce Films, of New Orleans, purchased for Louisiana and Mississippi, "The Unconquered," and "Oh, Mabel, Behave," starring Mabel Normand.

AN ARRAY OF AGGRESSIVE LEADERS WHO ARE MAKING FILM HISTORY
Will Nigh, producer for Weber & North; Bobby North, L. Lawrence Weber, and Sam Saxe

Morey, Breese and Billings Are Signed for Nex t Nigh Film

The efforts of Director Will Nigh and his distributors, L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, to capture the finest screen stars available for their second release, has been crowned with success. Not only have Tom Moore and Ann Forrest been secured, but an aggregation of sterling screen characters as famous in their particular roles as the leads are in theirs, has been added to the cast. Harry T. Morey, foremost "society strong-man," and star of "Beyond the Rainbow," "A Man's Home," "Silent Strength," "The Gauntlet," "The Sea Rider," "The Wildness of Youth," and "The Curse," has been cast for a fitting role in Nigh's second, now being made at the Metro Studios, New York.

Edmund Breese, veteran paternal character of the stage and screen, plays his famous role in Nigh's second production. He comes to this picture with a long list of laurels, including feature parts in "A Man's Home," "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," "Beyond the Rainbow," "A Master Mind," "Sure Fire Flint," and "The Curse."

Florence Billings, renowned beauty, and famed for her art as well as her fascinating physical charm, is remembered from her past performance in "Who Are My Parents," "What Fools Men Are," "Destiny's Isle," "Why Announce Your Marriage," "Handcuffs and Kisses," and "Nobody."

Shannon Day is another favorite included in the cast. She appeared in "Manslaughter," "Affairs of Anatol," "One Clear Call," "The Woman He Married," "All the Brothers Were Valiant," "Forbidden Fruit," "Man, Woman, Marriage," "Sacred and Profane Love" and others. She won her first laurels as a Ziegfeld Follies star.

These are not all. Announcement of further additions of nationally-known actors and actresses, each with an individual following among picture fans, will be made next week.

Equity Closes Another Big Deal on Goodman Feature

Activities during the past week at the office of Equity Pictures disclose the fact that two more big deals are about to be announced to the trade on "Has the World Gone Mad," the latest Daniel Carson Goodman "Special" and the actual closing of another foreign sale on this same production.

The latest buyer to be attracted by this Equity "Special" is Millard Johnson, representative of Australasian Film Ltd. Mr. Johnson has secured "Has the World Gone Mad" for the territories of Australia and New Zealand, the Dutch East Indies and Strait Settlements and in buying these latter two territories he took an additional territory on "Has the World Gone Mad"—something that he did not do with "What's Wrong With the Women," the previous Equity release and on any other picture previously sold to him by Equity.

This latest buy of Mr. Johnson is significant of two facts—firstly, he proves to Equity Pictures Corporation that he has supreme confidence in "Has the World Gone Mad" by buying it for his complete territory, the first time in his business dealing with that Corporation. Secondly, this sale again supports the contention of Equity that "Has the World Gone Mad" is a bigger and better production than "What's Wrong with the Women."

Many Changes In Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH—(Special)—For the distributors of established and consistently good product, this season is proving a financial winner, but for others it has been a see-saw proposition. The Federated, Lande, Columbia, Skirboll's First National and the like have been doing a splendid business. Others have not been so fortunate, due to their lack of funds with which to effect the proper line-up and incidentally, inability to get the needed product. The Lichtman product has grown immensely popular with exhibitors, as has also the Warner output. Arrow, C. B. C., Equity, Charley Burr and others also have fared profitably this season, but the firm with mediocre product obtained on paper or on percentage, have had hard going.

"What's Wrong With the Women," an Equity Daniel Carson Goodman production, has proven a big money-maker for everybody who has handled it. C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "More To Be Pitied" and "Only a Shop Girl" also have made considerably more than the wiseacres predicted, with Richard Talmadge proving the surprise star of the season. Charles C. Burr's pictures, because of their exploitation angle and careful production, have reaped a good harvest in this territory.

Samuel Blum, of the Superior Pictures Exchange, announced last week that the pictures owned by that firm have been turned over to the Exhibitors' Film Exchange. They include "A Child for Sale," "Heritage" and "Ashes of Love."

Harry Charnas' Federated Exchange has started its drive to put over Harvey Gates' "The Drug Traffic." Incidently, during the past week local exchangemen have received propositions from half a dozen distributors of "dope" films.

Joe Lefko, who was recently promoted to the general managership of the Harry Charnas' exchange interests, is a frequent visitor to Pittsburgh. He is immensely popular with exhibitors and always welcome on Forbes street, his old stamping ground.

Looks Big for Next Year—Is Seattle's Report

SEATTLE, WASH.—(Staff Special)—With the 1922-23 season still on in full bloom and the leading exchange managers reporting satisfactory business, every exchange in this territory is laying its plans for the coming season, which promises to be an even more lucrative one than the one that is gradually passing out.

Several of the exchanges, at the close of the season, will be able to show little profit. However, it cannot be said that these have not made money. On the contrary, they have made more money than ever before, but what money they have pulled in has been consumed in paying off obligations made last season, which was particularly disastrous in this section of the country.

De Luxe Film Exchange here has started exploiting "The Drug Traffic," which is reputed to be the first anti-drug picture on the market. Local newspapers have been conducting a vigorous campaign against dope peddlers and on this publicity exhibitors here expect to cash in. The picture is reported to be good entertainment and it is on the guarantee that it is that many important houses have booked it for extraordinary engagements.

"Service" was exemplified during the recent blizzard by Art Winstock, Washington representative for L. K. Brin, Warner Brothers' distributor in the Pacific Northwest. Rather than disappoint an exhibitor, who had booked "Rags to Riches," Winstock undertook to deliver the film by automobile, when the trains were stalled. He eventually got stalled, and set out afoot, carrying the film. As a result, both of his hands were frozen severely. He was cared for and sent home. His suitcase, and Warner Brothers' press books and literature were found in the snow and returned to Seattle, without further address. They found their way at once to the Kwality exchange.

L. K. Brin has just returned from New York, where he was in conference with Warner Brothers. Mr. Brin purchased the entire product, consisting of eighteen pictures, including the famous Belasco stage successes, for his territory.

Arrow announces the purchase of the Woman's Home Companion series of pictures by the Winter Garden Theatre, for Seattle, and the Circle Theatre, Portland. Bookings throughout the territory are lining up very satisfactorily.

Prints of "The Worldly Madonna" are due in Seattle this week.

Big Pictures Needed Says Truart Head

After months spent in a careful survey of the independent market, M. H. Hoffman, vice president of the Truart Film Corporation, makes the sweeping declaration that the leaders of the state rights field are convinced that the day of the small picture is doomed.

"The Independents," said M. H. Hoffman, "must have big pictures; pictures which will stand the keenest competition of the product of the National organizations. When I fully realized this fact I immediately began the task of reorganizing the Truart Film Corporation so that it could meet these new demands of the independent exchange.

"We began to study big production, and as a result Edward Dillon's 'Women Men Marry' was made to fill a definite need. Burton King followed next in line with his 'Empty Cradle.' 'Broadway Gold,' Mr. Dillon's second production for Truart, with Elaine Hammerstein, Elliot Dexter and Kathlyn Williams in the stellar roles, will uphold the high standard we have set."

Truart is now working out a production plan, the details of which are not ready for publication. This plan is based upon data obtained in the sale of the first of the Truart Special production, "Women Men Marry," and will include only highly meritorious productions, which will be made to solve the problems confronting the independent operator.

"Women Men Marry" is reported to be an attractive offering. In the New York and Philadelphia territories it has played the big houses and leading circuits. It is playing at the Randolph in Chicago, and will soon open in Kansas City at the Liberty Theatre.

Bromberg Takes up Fight Against Reform Element

ATLANTA, GA.—(Special)—Not so long ago Bishop Warren A. Candler made certain accusations against the motion picture industry in general. The charges made in the course of a statement to the local press came as a bitter surprise to exhibiting interests and picture people in general. However, nothing was said until last Sunday when Arthur C. Bromberg, head of Bromberg Attractions, Inc., sent a letter to local newspapers, condemning the charges. His defense was a brilliant one and has won no end of praise for him.

"I count it a privilege to know many of the biggest people in the business," he said. "Bishop Candler states that the simple truth is the movie is the worst form of entertainment the world has ever known. He infers that motion pictures have played an important part in the wave of crime which has lately swept over this country. He quotes paid reformers and the like. Is not the reverend bishop aware that several thousand churches throughout the United States employ motion pictures as a means of stimulating attendance, spreading information and inculcating the higher morals of the young?"

"Shadows," the Al Lichtman special, starring Lon Chaney, played the Metropolitan to good business last week.

"Doc" Graham, for many years proprietor of the Gem Feature Service of Birmingham, Ala., an independent film and supply house, died last week at his home there.

William K. Jenkins, president of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, is now on the West Coast studying production and collecting advance information on forthcoming independent productions. He will visit the mid-west and Southern exchanges of his company before returning.

Considerable interest was occasioned in local film circles during the past week when word was officially received that the Warner Brothers are seeking the services of "big star names." Rumors heard here mention a number of stars now appearing in program pictures.

Johnny Hines' Latest Feature Now Ready

Johnny Hines' latest melocomedy is ready for release. It is titled "Luck," and from all advance reports exhibitors that play it may consider themselves lucky.

It is a combination of comedy, pathos, drama, pep and punch so cleverly woven together, it is said, as to provide even better entertainment than "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "Sure Fire Flint." At least this was the result when it was "tried on the dog" at a New York theatre recently where it went in "cold" and unexpectedly, scoring a remarkable laughing hit. The opinion of those who attended this try-out performance was to the effect that "Luck" would outshine all of Johnny Hines' previous efforts as a box office attraction.

"Luck" was written by Jackson Gregory and the titles are the work of Ralph Spence who created so many laughs with his subtitles in "Sure Fire Flint." The story concerns the adventures of a young millionaire who has been accused of being yellow and sets out to disprove the aspersion. That he does so, and with a vengeance, is a foregone conclusion. He begins by winning a cross-country run in most amusing fashion, aided by an elephant, and ends up by acquiring a valuable real estate development and the girl of his heart. Interwoven throughout the plot are numberless highly amusing situations and countless thrills, it is said.

As in all of the Hines' melocomedies the peppery star is supported by one of C. C. Burr's carefully selected all-star casts. In "Luck" Violet Mersereau, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Warner Richmmond, Charlie Murray, Polly Moran and Flora Fincn have prominent roles. All of them lend their talents to the general excellence of the picture and combine to put over what is conceded to be one of the finest feature films of the season.

Live News

Wyndham Standing, who has recently returned from Holland, where he made the "Lion's Mouse" and "The Hypocrites," two feature films which Producers Security are handling, is on his way to the Coast to confer on an important motion picture deal.

There has been some confusion due to the similarity of names and themes between Griffith's "One Exciting Night" and the current Producers Security release, "In the Night." Both are mystery melodramas full of thrills and suspense. "In the Night," however, was made from the great stage and book success of the same title. The happenings all taking place in one night. This film has a complete all-star cast.

While Oscar Apfel was filming "The Wolf's Fangs," starring Wilfred Lytell and Nancy Beaver, in the north woods of Maine near a famous trading post, Wray Physioc was making "The Love Nest," starring Richard Travers and Jean Scott, on the sea coast of Maine. There was a race on between the two directors and a native trapper carried weekly reports, traveling on skis through heavy blizzards. Mr. Apfel won by a day and was presented by his company with a pair of snow shoes. These two films are released through Producers Security Corp.

Word comes that not since "Earthbound" has Wyndham Standing made such a success as in his last picture, now receiving final titling under the supervision of Charles Giblyn. Producers Security Corp., who have control of releasing arrangements, say that Giblyn and Standing have kept the message of "The Hypocrites" intact, and presented a screen story of the famous Henry Arthur Jones success that will in every way measure up to the standard set by the stage production.

Carlton King, president of the Carlton King Productions, is back at work in the Hollywood studios after a trip to New York with his manager, J. Frank Moore, and reports good progress on the fifth of his series of twelve two-reel rural comedy dramas. Producers Security will issue one a month. Each drama is complete in itself, but the character of Jed, the Town Marshal, runs through the series. These rural dramas have much of the flavor of "The Old Homestead," and should attain the success accorded that world beater.

Will Richard Barthelmess, who has just become a proud father, sing as a lullaby that old melody, "Just a Song at Twilight"? This song of many generations should be familiar to him, as he is starred in this Producers Security release in which he is supported by Evelyn Greeley of "Bull Dog Drummond" fame and Pedro de Cordoba.

There is a run on now for sea pictures. "Fury," with Richard Barthelmess and Dorothy Gish, both of whom are starring in two Producers Security successes, "Just a Song at Twilight" and "The Country Flapper," Hodkinson's "Down in the Sea in Ships," and now comes Producers Security with "The Love Nest," taken on the Maine coast and featuring an old sailing vessel a hundred years old.

"The Wolf's Fangs," the Producers Security release, starring Wilfred Lytell and Nancy Beaver, which Oscar Apfel directed, should not be confused with another current release of similar title. This picture was filmed in the northernmost parts of the Maine woods, and is a picture particularly suited to young people. Besides striking photographs effects, it contains scenes of native trappers, exhibiting their skill with snow shoes and skis.

Dorothy Gish, starring in "The Country Flapper," a Producers Security release, surprised the actresses of the famous Stage Door Inn last week by presenting them with an almost life-size doll dressed like herself in the character of a gingham-clad flapper. Glenn Hunter, who played opposite Miss Gish in the film, and is now starring in the current New York stage success, "Merton of the Movies," was on hand to assist in the presentation.

Carlton King, while in New York settling the releasing arrangements with Producers Security for his series of twelve two-reel rural comedy dramas, was approached by a delegation from the Navy League, of which he was manager during the war, on the subject of starting a similar league in Los Angeles.

"The Beast," Thomas Dixon's new super-production, for which Producers Security has the releasing arrangements, is the seventh straight success from this famous writer's pen. It is a thriller with a powerful message of self-determination, and produces on as big a scale as his "Clansman." Madlyn Clare plays the leading feminine role, and Warner P. Richmon, well-known stage and screen actor, handles the juvenile lead. In "The Beast," Mr. Dixon is said to outdo all his previous sensational successes and achieved a masterpiece.

According to Wyndham Standing, star of "The Hypocrites," the part of the curate, Rev. Edgar Linnell, is one of the finest roles he has ever portrayed. The sincerity and strength of "The Hypocrites" gave it its phenomenal Broadway run. The play itself is said to be one of the favorites of the fifty plays from the pen of its prolific author, Henry Arthur Jones.

Thomas A. Curran, special representaive of the Arrow Film Corporation, is at present in Boston, visiting exchangemen in that territory.

While in New York last week Bill Shapiro of Franklin Film Exchange of Boston virtually closed for the entire 1923-1924 output of Warner Brothers in New England.

Francis Hawkins, secretary of Producers Security Corporation, left on Tuesday of this week for a swing about the country, visiting exchange centres. He will be away from New York about eight weeks.

Al Lichtman, president of Al Lichtman Corporation, sailed on Tuesday morning for Europe, where he will be for several months.

Sam Moscow, of Moscow Films, Inc., of Boston, while in New York last week, closed for the New England rights to the entire Charles C. Burr product. His next release will be "Luck," a Johnny Hines special.

As yet no distribution arrangements have been made for Bennie Zeidman's independent picture, "The Spider and the Rose."

Mr. Independent Exhibitor

ON the level, Mr. Independent Exhibitor, do you mean business?

You have been crying for good pictures. You've accused the independent market, in the past, of being conspicuous by its absence of good pictures.

Well, in a large measure, you have been right.

But your complaints have not been in vain. They have been heeded. And you know it.

But, on the level, Mr. Independent Exhibitor, did you do your "bit" toward helping those who have invested their all to help you?

True, more exhibitors have used good independent pictures than ever before.

But, on the level—just between ourselves—have you ever given thought to what might happen to you if those independent boys were out of business?

You can bet your right optic you have.

You bought independent pictures this year because they made money for you.

There was no other reason.

And we know it.

But in booking those pictures have you considered the future of the makers of those productions?

You can bet your left optic you did not.

And you know it.

But remember one thing, Mr. Independent Exhibitor, the independent producer is your best bet.

He's your ace in the hole.

And you never waste aces.

Don't waste this one. Think it over.—R. F.

ture ventures. Like his brother, Louis, he has extensive holdings outside the picture business. Office: Loew State Theatre Building, New York.

ALFRED WEISS—Is now in control of Clarion Pictures Corporation, Artclass Pictures Corporation and a number of other independent distributing and producing properties formerly operated by the Weiss Brothers. Mr. Weiss is one of the best known executives in the business. He was associated with the Goldwyn Company, having helped organize that firm. Last year he sold his interests in that concern and joined Weiss Brothers. Offices: Loew State Theatre Building.

NAT ROTHSTEIN—In addition to successfully handling all the publicity exploitation, and advertising for Film Booking Offices, in a manner that leaves no doubt as to his ability, also serves as publicity and exploitation director of Equity Pictures Corporation. Nat's advertisements know no rival, for they always hit the mark. He made history when he devoted all his time to Equity productions and is repeating with Film Booking Offices. His offices are in the R-C Film Building, Seventh avenue and 48th street, New York.

JOHN LOWELL—In addition to being the star of that sensational Blazed Trails production, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," is also a producer. Mr. Lowell came into the picture purely by accident. A certain film man in Boston was indebted to him and unable to meet his obligations, gave Mr. Lowell control of his picture interests. That was some five years ago. Since then Mr. Lowell has been producing regularly. His latest production, "Lost in a Big City," in which he is starred and for which L. Case Russell wrote the scenario, opened this week in Paterson, N. J. Office: Blazed Trails Studio, Gloversville, N. Y.

DAVID P. HOWELLS—Is another leader in his line. He, too, is a pioneer, having first attracted general attention with "The Hope Diamond Mystery." At present he is associated with Ben Blumenthal in the handling of "Othello." While generally recognized as a leading exporter, Mr. Howells also has from time to time released specials in the independent market. His offices are at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

DIRECT-TO-PUBLIC ADVERTISING

DDED to the fact that audience values are deliberately built into every Preferred Picture, each production is backed up by a consistent advertising campaign that reaches millions of persons each month.

In Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, hundreds of outdoor billboards carry the mighty message of each attraction to the public. These stand out in bold relief on the main thoroughfares, highways and railroads.

Many thousands of dollars are expended yearly on this one item of exploitation alone. The Al Lichtman Corporation and Masterpiece Film Attractions maintain the most complete and systematic methods of reaching newspaper columns; gathering column after column of important space for newsy stories about stars and cuts that portray important scenes of individual Preferred Pictures.

Masterpiece Film Attractions has long been recognized as the foremost exchange in this territory extending the fullest amount of cooperation to exhibitors. Billboards, newspapers, and special exploitation stunts, will be even enlarged during the coming months so that each individual theatre may reap the greatest results with Preferred Pictures.

New Season Promises Much in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA — (Special) —Independent exchangemen in this city are not worrying much about exhibitor patronage next year. The current season has proved conclusively to them that, given the right kind of pictures, they cannot help but get bookings. This fact developed in no uncertain way during the current season, which has been the greatest independents here have known. In the first place, Philadelphia boasts of first-class exchanges, owned or managed by men who have been in the picture business for many years. True, most of them have literally grown with the industry itself.

Independent distributors have been unable to cope with the demand of local exchanges for product. In fact, this territory has grabbed everything the minute national independent distributors have advertised the product. Exhibitors have been given every cooperation and exchangemen here are vieing with each other in the matter of exploitation, with the result that the good pictures have had no trouble catching on.

Philadelphia's exchanges are a credit to the independent field in general. The local independent exchanges are Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., Independent Film Corporation, Twentieth Century Film Company, Royal Pictures, Inc., Metro Pictures Corporation, De Luxe Film Company, Inc., and Imperial Pictures, Inc.

Ben Amsterdam and Louis Korson own the Masterpiece Exchange, which ranks among the wealthiest and best patronized independent exchange in the country. This exchange is also a co-partner of Al Lichtman Corporation, handling the entire Preferred Pictures output in this territory. Messrs. Amsterdam and Korson also own the rights to the Weber & North output. The exchange is located at 1329 Vine street. Walter Greene is the exploitation director. Some of the bigger winners of this exchange include "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows."

Independent Film Corporation is owned and managed by Lou Burman, one of the livest wires in this territory. This exchange, at 1331 Vine street, handles Warner Brothers' product exclusively. The progress of this exchange has been consistent with the meteoric progress of Warner Brothers. Mr. Burman has signed for the entire Warner output for next season. He is now dickering for other independent product for this territory as well as for Washington, where he operates a branch exchange.

Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufeld operate the De Luxe Exchange, Inc., located at 1318 Vine street. This concern has been buying the bigger independent productions, but for the past 18 months has been stressing every effort putting over the product of Arrow Film Corporation. Mr. Luchese is well liked and a pioneer in the distributing end of the film business. His partner is recognized as one of the keenest business men here. Bill Haggerty handles the exploitation.

Gene and Harry Marcus have been making history for the Twentieth Century Film Company, Inc., which they own and which is located at 256 North 13th street, here. This concern has taken over the entire output of Principal Pictures Corporation and is now releasing that firm's initial pictures, "Environment" and "The World's a Stage." It is also in the market for big exploitable productions.

David Segal is manager and owner of Royal Pictures, Inc., located at 1331 Vine street. Segal is one of the youngest exchange owners in the country. Until last season he handled all the product of C. C. Burr and Pioneer Pictures Corporation. He is now buying pictures on the individual plan.

Bob Lynch is the genial and popular manager of the local Metro exchange, 1321 Vine street, which is doing a splendid business. In addition to handling the entire output of Metro Pictures Corporation, Lynch is buying pictures in the open market and has tied up with Charles C. Burr of the Mastodon Films, Inc. He is releasing all the current C. C. Burr releases. He also is handling the Betty Blythe productions and the Ed Sloman special, "The Last Hour."

The other exchanges here are Graphic and Imperial Exchanges, handling state rights pictures exclusively.

The Censorship Commission in this territory has apparently put its foot down on anti-drug pictures, for salesmen from New York with such prints are finding no buyers willing to gamble with the censors.

"Women Men Love," with E. K. Lincoln, an Ed Dillon directed picture, which Bob Lynch is releasing here, had its premiere showing at the Arcadia and Capitol Theatres here this week.

Dave Starkman is operating the Standard Film Attractions, Inc., at 1322 Vine street, and right now he is working on "The Expose of Cutting a Lady in Half."

Harry Grelle Buys Iron City Film Exchange

PITTSBURGH (Special)—On Tuesday, February 13, one of the biggest film deals ever consummated in Pittsburgh was completed. Harry F. Greele of the Supreme Photoplay Company, formerly known as the Supreme Photoplays Productions, took over the Iron City Film Exchange, owned by Joseph Skirboll and J. B. Clark. This exchange has the franchise for the distribution of the Warner Brothers' Classics of the Screen in the western Pennsylvania-West Virginia film section. Mr. Skirboll stated that his only reason for selling the Iron City Exchange was for the fact that he is going to the West Coast for First National, and it would be an impossibility for him to attempt to retain the film company here.

He spoke of the great popularity of the Warner's productions here, and expressed the opinion that Harry Grelle is the right man to give the productions the representation that they deserve. The Supreme Exchange is located in the heart of Pittsburgh's film row, at 1026 Forbes Street. The office and sales forces will of necessity be increased in the near future, however. Messrs. Kelly and Wilkinson are already out on the road, and Miss Hazel Good remains in the office as secretary to Mr. Grelle.

Samuel Blum, of the Superior Pictures Exchange, Pittsburgh, prior to his departure for Philadelphia last week, informed the World representative that his pictures will be released in this territory by Manager William I. Forrey, of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange. This includes new prints of 44 issues of the Vod-a-Vil Movies, and three big features, "A Child For Sale," "Heritage" and "Ashes of Love." Mr. Forrey's offices are located in the Seltzer building at 1201 Liberty Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Saul Frank, formerly in the West Virginia section on the road for Federated, is now working the main line, while Frank Windstein is his successor down state.

Manager Fisher and General Manager Lefko, of Federated, spent a few days in Cleveland recently at a sales conference of Federated officials.

Louis K. Sidney Hooked Mystic Shrine to Big Ticket Sale. Here Is Your Tip

MORE than passing notice is due the exploit of Louis K. Sidney in tying up El Jebel Temple, the Denver temple of the Mystic Shrine, to the sale of The Town That Forgot God at the Isis Theatre.

Merely as an exploit it is good business, though somewhat along the lines of the sales by the American Legion, Boy Scouts and similar organizations, but Mr. Sidney's stunt does more than that. It gives emphasis to the fact that now is the time to hook fraternal organizations to a ticket sale with the best chances of getting big results.

Here was the situation in Denver. The Imperial Council, the national Shrine body, meets in Washington, D. C., in June. Denver wants the session of the Council in 1926; the first date they are likely to be able to secure. One of the campaign stunts is sending the uniformed bodies, the band and Arab Patrol to the intervening conventions to whoop things up. It will cost a lot of money to move these large bodies from Denver to Washington and back.

Both Profit

Giving El Jebel a percentage of the sales, Mr. Sidney gets not only the Shriners, but the business section of the town, for to obtain the convention means money. The bank clearances at San Francisco last year were six million dollars above the average the week the Imperial Council was in session there.

Naturally the entire town got in behind the temple. Merchants donated the use of their trucks, hotels permitted all sorts of advertising, the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and similar organizations came out in favor of the movement, and naturally the general public trailed.

It is only in isolated instances that so heavy a campaign can be planned, but in most large cities not one but several hook-ups can be arranged, for the Shrine is but one of a number of organizations having a national convention attended by large delegations. The Elks, the Tall Cedars of Lebanon and many others send uniformed units to the conventions to take part in the street parades, and it is seldom done at the cost of the organization. Generally it is accomplished through the medium of entertainments and indoor circuses.

No Risk Here

Not infrequently something goes wrong with the plans and the offering is a failure instead of a success and creates a deficit instead of a surplus.

A percentage scheme involves no risk to the society other than the cost of printing, and is apt to yield a better return. The uniformed units supply a good ballyhoo, and the large membership gets out and works and works hard.

Scout around and find out just what organizations in your town are planning to send delegations to the National Conventions. Make your deal with them at once. Give them a good attraction to sell, and you will be able to make not one but perhaps several hook-ups with the same organization.

This holds good even in the smaller towns. There are numerous Shrine Clubs contributory to the various Temples, and these can be approached on a local drive to help the movement, and in towns too small to have much ambition toward National Conventions there are often State Conventions to call for a visit and a disbursement; not so large, but on a scale commensurate with the town. All of these can be hooked in, if properly approached, but the deal must be put over before May, since most of the conventions are in May and June.

If you are not a joiner yourself, hunt up a badge-wearing friend and get the dope from him. You may lose some of your immediate receipts, if you offer the right sort of attraction, but you will more than get it back through the year in the good will you create.

Get busy.

Garden of Eden Set to Sell Adam's Rib

If you cannot get an authentic fossilized rib of Adam for your lobby display, and probably you cannot, try the prehistoric set for Adam's Rib as suggested by the Paramount Exploitation Department. It is effective and involves less work than the cut suggests.

The figures can be taken from the 24-sheet and set up in a forest of real or painted trees as your taste and purse indicate. The box office is masked in to suggest a rock hut, and a little moss or grass mats around the base of this and the tree trunks will help the effect a great deal. If you use such material, see that it is fireproofed, or you will be advertising a forest fire the film will not show.

But the exploitation department is all wet on the cutout letters. John (formerly Max) Rosenfield, suggests that these be strung from the top of the arch and weighted to prevent their swaying in the March breezes. It's all wrong. String them on fine wires in the usual way. Let them hang pendant and they will get all entangled. The idea is good, but the method is essentially golem.

This style of lobby will work well on a wide area and even better on the corridor style. Here the middle distance should be kept fairly dark with the box office strongly lighted at the far end with blue-white lights rather than straight white or yellow. A corridor lobby can also be made into a cave. Soak paper in flour paste, work it while still wet into rock formation over a wooden frame work, let it dry and then paint and you'll have a real cave for your cave people.

Don't spoil the effect with lobby frames. Set these to either side or get them into nearby store windows.

Herschel Stuart Had an Advertising Film

There has been a lot of talk about running advertising films on picture programs, but it took Herschel Stuart to work it right.

The Cadillac agency had a film showing the construction of an automobile; of course, of their own make. They could not get a theatre showing for it. There was an automobile show coming along. Stuart told them he would run the film—which really was of audience interest—if they would do the advertising for Racing Hearts and whoop things up for the Agnes Ayres feature at the auto show.

The agency took a full page for the Missouri Theatre in the St. Louis Sunday papers, and simply plastered the show with heralds printed up at their expense, and Herschel wore a wide smile every time he looked at the hole in his ledger where that week's advertising bill ordinarily would have been represented by three figures.

And no one in the audience thought it was other than a special feature booked in to match up with auto show week.

HERE ARE THE MAKINGS OF A LOBBY FOR ADAM'S RIB

It plays up the episode, which in a De Mille story is almost always more important than the plot which excuses it. The modern angle can be sold through a display of stills in the side frames. The 24-sheet supplies the figures

Illustrious Guests Praise Blanchard

J. M. Blanchard, of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa., pulls something entirely new in a reader tag to a display for Norma Talmadge in The Eternal Flame.

He uses four fives in a straight display, with a plan book cut of the star and the candle, and drops down a two fives, set in twelve point Roman in a lightly paneled box. In this he tells how a representative crowd approved the picture, and in addition to the local lights he lists among the audience visitors from Philadelphia, New Orleans, Chicago and New York and quotes their opinions. This gave dignity to the gathering, and doubtless carried a real punch to the local readers. It is a permissible fake, and the idea might convey a suggestion to others.

For the Prince

Looking around for something new on "When Knighthood Was in Flower," T. W. Logan, of the Allen Theatre, and George A. Smith, Paramounteer, announced a beauty contest.

Nothing new in that, of course; but hist! The prize was nothing less than the promise that the photograph of the winner would be sent to H. R. H., the Prince of Wales,

There was no promise that the Prince would make reply, or even the assurance that he would even shed the light of his royal lamps on the print; just the promise that it would be put in the mails, more or less properly addressed.

That was enough to get the entire town talking and to bring out about one thousand contestants.

And it brought a raft of business to the Allen Theatre, London, Ontario.

Butterfly Wives

Arthur Swanke, of the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark., sends in a pretty lobby on "Rich Men's Wives," but the photograph is too dull to stand reproduction.

The essential is a trio of compo board butterflies strung across the front. The larger carries the title and the others these legends: "Are they butterflies to be pitied or scorned?" "Are they butterflies to be envied and denied?"

With the painting done in the brilliant colors the butterfly suggests, the effect was striking and selling.

SELLING OLD PHONOGRAPH RECORDS WITH A NEW FEATURE

Pete Smith hooked the phonograph shops to the old musical records of the opera when "Robin Hood" played Pittsburgh, and all of the delivery trucks carried this modest display of advertising matter to supplement a generously planned window campaign.

Found One

Walter D. Nealand, a Goldwynner, has found a town where the bannered street car is new—or was until he went and spoiled it by chartering a car for three days, three hours a day.

The town was Springfield, Ill., and a report has it that people would line up on the curb to see the strange sight. Nealand was working with W. W. Watts, of the Princess Theatre, on "Broken Chains," and fighting a big opposition attraction. The picture was to open on Sunday, but the car and other stunts aroused such interest that the Saturday picture was pulled and the "Broken Chains" started a day earlier. From seven o'clock on there was a standout and the Saturday business was even better than the usual Sunday attendance, which is the star day.

We wonder if Nealand thought to tie some broken chains to the tail of the street car. It would have helped.

Pepping it Up

Roy Miller, advertising manager of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, hooked to the manufacturer of an after dinner mint for 10,000 packages of the candy, each containing four pieces in a glassine envelope printed up:

After dinner
a Jevne Mint or two and then—to the California Theatre,
Hall Caine's
mighty love story,
The Christian.

These were distributed in restaurants and cafeterias and caught the patrons about theatre-going time. The connection was not as close as it might have been with some other plays, but it helped business on a picture they wished to put over to the limit.

A Universal Release

A SIMPLE RACE TRACK FOR "THE KENTUCKY DERBY"

Recently we showed an elaborate lobby miniature. F. H. Miller, of the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., gets much the same effect with a smaller outlay by setting cutouts on the rim of a circular table covered with sand and masked in with cloth.

Reprinted Feature

Reprinting the article on happiness written on Dr. Jack by a medical authority, the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, took three-quarters of a page for the reprint, with a top line reading, "The article below, by a world-famous physician, is enormously interesting; possibly the most thoughtful and informative article in the paper tonight. Read every line of it." Only a border suggested this as a paid advertisement, and it helped very materially to start the Liberty on a fourth week of the Harold Lloyd comedy, "to accommodate the unending crowds," which is a very neat line.

Dr. Jack has supplied the managers with better material than was ever before sent out on a farce comedy, and intelligent use is being made of the stuff in all parts of the country.

More Angles for "The Third Alarm"

Harold F. Wendt, a F. B. O. exploiteer, put over "The Third Alarm" at the Strand Theatre, Canton, Ohio, with some new trimmings.

The fire department was hooked to the scheme on the basis of a percentage of their direct ticket sales, and they made several fake runs to buildings where smoke pots on the roofs were raising dense clouds of smoke. After running the ladders up to the roofs, the firemen canvassed the crowds on ticket sales.

They also sold tickets in blocks to the fire insurance people to send their policy holders that they might be warned to be careful, and the fire hydrants were tagged with no parking signs. Some 15,000 tickets were disposed of.

Tying up to municipal departments is going to be worn out pretty soon, but it is good while it lasts. The rumor that the F. B. O. is going after the street cleaners next has not been verified.

A Pathe Release

PUTTING OVER "DR. JACK" WITH A JAZZ ORCHESTRA

E. E. Bair, of the new State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio, had a jazz band as part of his opening bill. Harold Lloyd was his underline. Dressing his players like Lloyd, with lettered hats, gave him a splendid ballyhoo for the coming attraction.

Had Oilcloth Mats for Denver Streets

Oilcloth street mats have bobbed up again, this time in Denver, where Goldwynner Eddie Carrier has been helping Manager Talbot, of the Colorado Theatre, put over "The Strangers' Banquet."

A dry goods store supplied the material: a patent floor covering, in return for the advertisement of the store at each end of the strip, calling attention to its wearing qualities. The house ad was painted in the center. Carrier's share of the job was to get police permission to place these mats on prominent corners. The house ads were dual, being placed back to back so that no matter which way you were headed, you could read without difficulty.

Taxis were induced to use windshield strips reading "Official car to 'The Strangers' Banquet,'" and 200 time cards were supplied the factories urging the employees to ring in on time and to be sure and see the advertised feature.

Trailers were used at the Colorado, where "Robin Hood" was having a ten-day run, and at the America, a sister house.

John C. Green Pays Tribute to Wallie

John C. Green, of the Capitol Theatre, Guelph, Canada, a veteran showman, pays a tribute to Wallace Reid in his advertising for "Thirty Days," and not only plugs the nasty suggestiveness of a few yellow newspapers, but he wins the approval of his patrons, with whom Reid was a favorite star.

He hit up his usual space to nearly three columns and gives more than half of it to a panel headed "Taps for Wallie Reid," in which he pays a graceful tribute to the always clean productions in which Wallie was starred and winding up with an eulogy which concludes:

"Wallace Reid has passed on, but his name and the joyful hours he brought into many a drab life, as his laughter-bringing pictures flashed on the screens of the world's best theatres will long be remembered."

After the signature comes the quotation: "Let those who are without sin cast the first stone." The lower half of the space is given to the picture with the assurance that it was the last in which the dead star played. It was a nice handling of a somewhat delicate situation.

Beats a Summons

H. C. Beardsley, who has a theatre named after him in Red Oak, Ia., has worked a successor to the automobile infraction card. He had larger cards printed up so that the "For Sale" was the prominent feature, and these were hung upon all parked cars at a busy hour.

The full text read: "This automobile is not for sale as the family will need it to carry them to the Beardsley Theatre to see Norma Talmadge's greatest picture, "The Eternal Flame."

The shock of seeing a for sale sign on your car is great, but not as unpleasant in its effect as the supposed summons, and so it works better.

We do not like so well Mr. Beardsley's "apology" in which he retracts a previous statement that "Smilin' Through" was Miss Talmadge's finest picture and substitutes "The Eternal Flame." Sell the "Flame" on its own merits.

An Associated Exhibitors' Release

HERE'S A NEW AND GOOD IDEA FOR A "GRANDMA'S BOY" LOBBY

It was planned by R. D. France for Holton's People's Theatre, Port Arthur, Texas. The novelty is the yard scene, shown at the right, built up from cut-outs from the paper. A similar recess on the left carries straight cut-outs.

Practical Good

Because "Outcast" deals with a woman of the streets A. C. Feinler, of the Virginia Theatre, Wheeling, gave a pre-showing of the Elsie Ferguson film to the most prominent minister in town and so wrought on the clerical sympathies that a pulpit announcement was made that the church stood ready to help any similar outcast.

Of course the papers took up the story from a news angle, and several girls availed themselves of the proffered aid, while most of the town came to see the picture which was getting all the comment.

If You Haven't

If you have never used a stunt it is still good for your town. Ray Koch used the home-made movies for "The Crossroads of New York" when it came to the Palace Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

It was still new there, and so still good.

Don't overlook the chance to ballyhoo with a prologue now and then. It gives a new approach and sells tickets.

Meyer Is Now Using Letters of Greeting

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, is using the greeting letter which is almost forgotten; indeed, it is so old he thinks it is new.

A letter carrier told him of a family which had moved onto his route, coming from Columbus, and suggested that the manager place the name on the mailing list for the house program. Meyer did better than that. He devised a form letter with this copy:

"We have just learned that you have moved to Hamilton from Columbus and perhaps are more or less a stranger in this city. For that reason may we place the Palace Theatre at your disposal as a sort of information bureau?

"If you want to know the accurate time, call 2530. If you want to know anything of interest in sporting, society, or amusement circles we will be glad to have you call on us and will endeavor to give you every possible information and assistance. And while we have not had the pleasure to meet you in person, you may rest assured that upon any visit which you may decide to make to this theatre we will accord you the same friendly welcome and 'make-you-feel-at-home' spirit which has made the Palace Theatre not only Hamilton's leading playhouse but also a semi-public institution. In brief, we shall consider it a pleasure if we may in any way serve you.

"Welcome to Hamilton. May your stay be permanent, prosperous and pleasant."

This is not new, but it is mighty useful, and it has not been done lately. If we recall, Charles Ryan, of the Garfield Theatre, Chicago, first brought the letter idea to attention some years ago. It is a wonderful business maker. Offer a pass for each new name and grocery and meat clerks and others will keep you amply informed.

ANOTHER FORM OF H. G. GRIFFIN'S ILLUMINATED FLOAT

It works for the Plaza Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., and for "The Prisoner of Zenda" the castle windows were lighted from within at night, while the bottom banner was a transparency also illuminated from the rear after the sun went down.

Children in Parade Still Getting Attention

First National exhibitors would be lost without the kid parade, but so long as it works, it is a good stunt. L. Burkhart, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Crestline, Ohio, writes that this layout of kids cost him less than five dollars; mostly for horns. The kids got the horns and a free show, and they brought in the rest of the town on paid admissions to see Sonny.

The banners are made on the backs of old window cards, which are collected after showing and saved for such purposes, so they represent no real cost and the horns made a bigger racket than would a brass band, and cost less than a single musician.

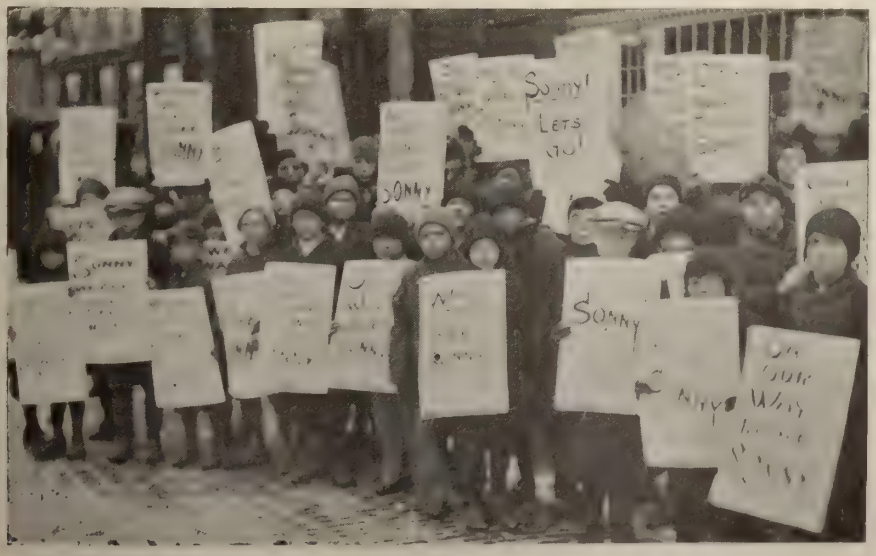
Mr. Burkhart does not believe in the split sign. Every one of these cards carries the title, and you do not see all of the cards, at that. Look close and you will find that about half the kids have something to advertise the Barthelmess picture, though not all of them show clearly.

Cheer-up Pills

In the Texas section of Southern Enterprises the Dallas office is sending wires to the leading physicians in other towns just before the Dr. Jack campaigns break, backing up the newspaper teasers.

J. M. Edgar Hart used the wires and teasers along with the rest, and put a huge medicine satchel of compo board in the lobby.

But as the special stunt he sent out a young man, looking something like Lloyd and carrying a black satchel from which he distributed a novelty piece. This was a slip of paper printed up with an advertisement for Dr. Jack's Cheer-up Pills. A small pill box was glued to each slip, each box containing two or three small candy pills. Some 1,500 slips were handed out, and helped not a little to swell the business. The pills were "warranted to cure all cases of the blues" and the slip announced daily demonstrations at the Palace Theatre.



A First National Release

THE FIRST NATIONAL TRADEMARK WORKS ONCE MORE

The Kid Parade seems to be a part of the First National, but L. Burkhart, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Crestline, Ohio, reports that this cost him only $5 and brought him many times the investment in tickets the stunt sold.

Kicked In

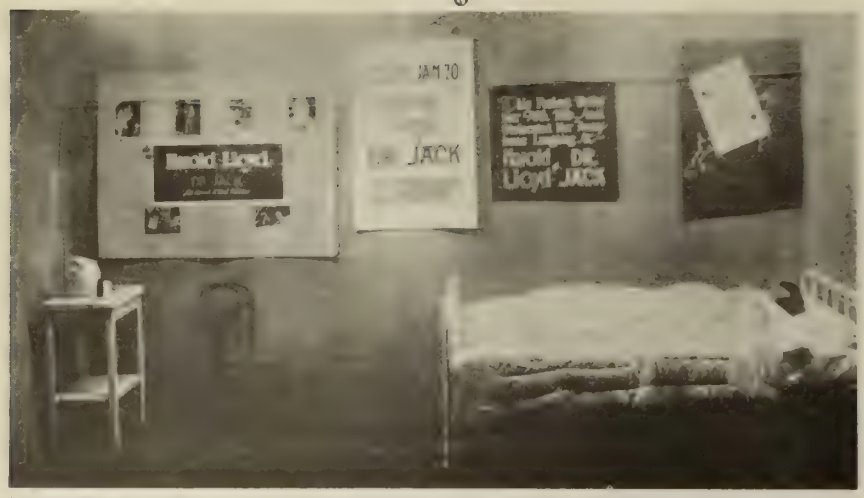
When the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, played Kick In, the lobby attractor was an unusually elaborate miniature on which Manager E. B. Roberts and his staff had been working in their odd moments for some time. It showed a tenement district with electrically illuminated houses and plenty of street life. In the block were a saloon, pawnshop and a second-hand store, and a real old-fashioned lamp post gave the light to the scene.

Because it was so unusually well done, the impression was created that the picture must be unusual, and it went over the top in the matter of receipts, at a cost of less than ten dollars.

Free Prescriptions

Getting a hook-up page from Dr. Jack is doing pretty well. Ross D. Rogers, of the Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, did it by heading each of the merchant boxes, "Dr. Jack prescribes—" whatever that merchant had to sell.

Three drug stores came in, which is unusual for a co-operative page, but there were other things which Dr. Jack prescribed to save labor and bring health.



A Pathe Release

A "DR. JACK" STUNT WHICH WILL WORK ON ANY COMEDY
The Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, used it in the lobby of a closed house. The sign reads: "This patient broke her fifth rib and dislocated her funnybone laughing at Harold Lloyd in 'Dr. Jack.'" It can work as well in a store window as the lobby.

Beat Sheik Record with Dr. Jack Run

Down in Columbus, Ga., I. C. Holloway, of the Grand Theatre, broke all the records for the town at regular prices, and did it with a comedy.

Up to that time the record went to The Sheik, but Dr. Jack chased the Arab back to his desert and played to 2,754 persons in a 600-seat house in one day.

The last night of the Grandma's Boy run the departing patrons stopped to look at the Dr. Jack poster Mr. Holloway had put up while they were watching the last show. That was about two months before Dr. Jack was due. At no time after that was there absent from the lobby some paper, but a change of bills kept up a fresh appeal. An occasional slide was also used.

The week before, the town was plastered, ten show windows were stuffed with paper and 75 bags and 50 goggles were given the kids, redeemable when the picture came along to ensure their use and preservation.

Fifty personal letters were sent physicians, and a co-operative page was obtained, while a truck perambulator was put out for the two days before the opening. Just keeping at it put it over and put it over to a triumph.

M. K. Moore Gets Good Painted Snow

Recently in commenting upon the snow burned signs used in Middletown, N. Y., we suggested that package dyes would probably give as good or better results.

Before the item got on the press, M. K. Moore, of the Victory Theatre, Timpson, Texas, anticipated the stunt and reports that he painted the snowbanks around Timpson with bright red water color and put it on with a brush. It works, as we thought it would, and we are glad to have Mr. Moore confirm the suggestion even before he got a chance to read it.

Texas was having the heaviest snow in years and it took Mr. Moore only a couple of hours to avail himself of the naturally formed billboards. We think that a small spraying tank will be even better than a brush. Try that, too.

Three Way Light

E. B. Roberts built a lighthouse in the lobby of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, for Tess of the Storm Country. Lots of others did the same thing. But Mr. Roberts put a cutout of Tess in the doorway of the lighthouse, holding at bay a couple of tough looking characters, and backed the scene with a painted drop.

In the lantern he set an oscillating light with a globe striped in three colors, so that these showed as the fan swung. As the openings were small, tissue paper pasted over the openings and oiled, if necessary, would have worked as well and would have entailed less work, but the fan flasher is useful, though not new.

Tagged Hydrants

Hand it to Harold F. Wendt, F. B. O. exploiter for Cleveland. He found one way to use the obliging fire department on The Third Alarm. In Akron, when it played the Orpheum Theatre, he put a card on every fire plug in the city. Wendt added this stunt to everything in and out of the press book and put over the picture to the limit.

Pete Smith Proves Chivalry Will Pay

The days of chivalry have come again, and to Pittsburgh, of all places! But it's only one of Pete's stunts for the run of Robin Hood at the Pitt Theatre, and it pays at the rate of fifty cents an afternoon.

It is very simple, yet it supplies a much talked of exploit at a tiny cost.

He hired a bunch of boys about sixteen years of age, provided them with the familiar Robin Hood hats, obtained from a local costumer, and stationed them on prominent corners with instructions to be polite to the ladies, particularly the old ones.

The first afternoon the boys wore no sign of identification other than the hats, but on the second day they wore badges lettered "Robin Hood Boys of Chivalry." They got stories and pictures in the papers, and the stories were framed to suggest that the play and not the press agent was the guiding force behind the movement. That is where the value of the stunt lies. It gets public approval for the production.

The boys assemble at the theatre each afternoon and proceed in a body to their work, each boy dropping from the squad as his "post" is reached.

It gets unlimited talk at the cost of a few dollars, and it is brand new If you have the film booked, look around for the hats. You can make them out of old felt hats by wetting the felt and stretching and shaping it.

Made a Second Day Better Than First

Because he had Smilin' Through on second run, Frank Burns, of the Grand Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., could use the personal endorsement to help put it over, but his best drawing idea was to put "Coming: Norma Talmadge in Smilin' Through" on all of his advertising for several week in advance. His insistence convinced those who had not seen the picture that it must be above the average to warrant this especial attention.

This and a throwaway, with a cutout head in the lobby, put the picture over big the first day, and gave a surprisingly better second day, which is the real test of a picture's merit. Most houses would profit through a repeat on such pictures as this.

RED MILLS ON STAGE ADVERTISED THE COMING FEATURE

Ninety-six lights were used on the four windmills on the stage of the Grand Opera House, Meridian, Miss., to advertise the coming of "Queen of the Moulin Rouge." Three classic dancers motived the production and made an act of the ballyhoo.

Two Ballyhoos Have a Dispute

Down in Bristol, Conn., there has been a war of ballyhoos. Jack Sanson, of the Princess, put out a jockey ballyhoo for "The Kentucky Derby," and the opposition house had a mounted Klansman for "One Clear Call."

The two riders met near the public square, each disposed to question the right of the other to follow him around. The result was a wordy, and none too polite joint debate as to the ancestry, moral turpitude and physical beauty of the other, and it waxed so warm that the horses took fright and were five miles on their way to New Britain before they could be quieted down. As New Britain has a police prohibition against the Klan, some joker put in a call to the police there that a clansman was last seen headed in the direction of that town, but though the police were alert, the runaway did not get that far and the story was not made better through a pinch.

The newspapers all ran kidding stories of the runaway, with the result that both attractions profited. And to add to the mixup the story is sent in by Russell B. Moon, the Paramounteer, who saw the scrap.

Plugged with Puzzle

F. H. Burns, of the Grand Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., felt that he could make money with Sherlock Holmes if he got back of it, but he was none too confident that the picture could get over alone, so he went to work and showed the picture to double the usual business.

His best btt was the "21" puzzle. This was printed on heralds, on one sheets, and run in the newspapers. The initial one sheet was placed in the lobby Saturday night, to show during the idle Sunday, and so many persons anchored in front of the house they blocked the sidewalk, and Mr. Burns had to station a boy in the lobby to hand out the heralds so the people could go home and work on it at their leisure.

No prize was offered for the solution. It was just a puzzle and not a contest, but the announcement that the solution would be given on the screen the opening day built a surprisingly large matinee business.

Mr. Burns also used the "What I know about" blank page book, but the front cover read "How to become a great detective" and the back cover was printed "See John Barrymore in Sherlock Holmes at the Grand" with the dates. All in between was blank.

The stunts were not costly, but they worked, and the solution on the screen gives a business getter. Do not offer prizes if you use the screen, as this probably would make it a lottery.

Wilder's Novelty Costs but Little

Many theatres have hooked Cigarette in Under Two Flags to the American Tobacco Company in various ways, but we particularly like the way William S. Wilder, of the Norva Theatre, Norfolk, Va., worked out his idea.

He used a card two by three and a half inches printed with house, date, star and title. A real cigarette was glued diagonally across the center of the card with the legend, "They call her Cigarette," just below it.

Cigarettes Were Free

The printing cost was small and probably a few passes covered the charge for gluing the cigarettes, which were supplied by the tobacco company, and the resultant card was a real attractor, for anything affixed a card will increase its attention value manyfold.

A rule panel is printed to guide the boys who glue the cigarettes down. A single strip of rule probably would work as well.

Hooked Boy Scouts Just for a Change

Giving the unfortunate Navy Recruiters a brief vacation, Walter Murphy, of the Crown Theatre, New London, Conn., hooked "Kick In" to a drive for the Boy Scouts with a pair of posters.

A Paramount Release

THE SCOUT POSTERS

These were posted by the boys, who obtained locations that could not have been gained by a theatre bill sticker and they had the added advantage of telling an event of general local interest.

Russell B. Moon, Paramounteer, was accessory before the fact.

Walled in Love

Although there was nothing in particular in Love Never Dies to suggest a brick wall, there was nothing in the story to suggest any other exploitation angle to Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, so he walled in the lobby, setting white globes on gate posts, lettered with the names of Madge Bellamy and Lloyd Hughes. The title was lettered on the arch between the posts and "now showing" globes were used at the sides remote from the gateway.

The title and billing was repeated on the wall, with cutouts from the paper.

It may not have been atmospheric, but it pulled in extra business, and that was what most concerned Mr. Clemmons.

TWO TO A CHAIR AT "THE STRANGERS' BANQUET" IN D. C.

Tom Moore's Rialto, Washington, put out this truck with twelve chairs surrounding the table, each chair back-lettered with the names of two of the stars in "The Strangers' Banquet.' This was the first truck licensed for street work in the city.

Getting Ahead of Harold Lloyd

Harold Lloyd heads have always been popular with exhibitors for exploitation use, but the Strand Theatre, St. Paul, uses no less than 13 heads, not to mention a pair of cut-out figures and a number of straight posters.

A Pathe Release

THE LLOYD HEADS

Two of them are taken from 14-sheets and the others are from the threes and sixes, with the world for a centerpiece, connected to the stethoscopes by means of small ropes to suggest the flexible tubes.

Eddie Collins Has Fine Lobby Frame

E. E. Collins, of the Capitol Theatre, Houston, Texas, has a special lobby frame he uses only for the big pictures. It is high enough to take a three-sheet cutout and wide enough to take in a six, with a wide border cut into a fanciful shape. Cutouts and painted cards are set into the frame and backed by fabric.

For Agnes Ayres in A Daughter of Luxury he used the pose in the dancing dress with a lettered escutcheon set in on the right to fill the space and carry the selling talk, the title and star being worked into a panel below the opening. Backed by yellow sateen and lighted from behind, it gave a striking effect.

For this picture he also made up some special frames for display in hotels and stores and boosted the receipts at a cost of only $10.

The cut shows the same frame used for Jack Holt in Making a Man.

White Horses

White horses were the attractors to The Hottentot when it played the Arcade Theatre, Ann Arbor, Mich.

The lobby was draped in black and white, the racing colors of the horse, and two box stalls were arranged, all black within and black and white checkerboard outside. In these were stabled two pure white horses, obtained from a riding academy, which also supplied a parade of five horses for street work in return for the advertising it shared in.

And to get the other angle, a cutout figure of Sam was made the centerpiece of a drug store display of liniments and ungents, the cards telling that even Sam could have healed his hurts with the materials offered by the store. Here is an angle that will match the tar soap for East Is West without any national hook-up.

Soft Stuff

Details are lacking as to its composition, but S. S. Wallace, of the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, helped put over Back Home and Broke by persuading all soda bars to sell "Meighanade." The lobby display was a working oil well.

EDDIE COLLINS HAS DEVISED A GOOD IDEA IN FRAMES

The head is taken from a poster for "Making a Man" and the skyline is home made. All of the lighting is done from behind the frame, plus a spot on the face from across the lobby, and the backing is purple sateen. He uses the frame on big pictures.

Laundry Enclosures Worked for Shadows

Shirt bands were among the first of the exploitation ideas, and they are still good. Feld, of the Twelfth Street Theatre, Kansas City, took a hint from the Chinese character played by Lon Chaney in Shadows and used enclosures. The cut shows both sides of the slip.

A Lichtman Release

THE LAUNDRY SLIP

The tie-up is based on the contrast between the modern machine methods and the old-fashioned Chink laundry and the idea was so well liked that three thousand were used the week before the house played the picture.

Ross Agreed

Putting over Back Home and Broke cheaply and yet to a third more than usual business, Ross D. Rogers, of the Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, used the endorsement angle.

In his lobby were three panels of compo board, on one of which the play was advertised by title and star. On a second were the endorsements of the eleven Governors who saw the picture, and the third was given to his personal guarantee that the picture was exceptionally good.

The personal guarantee was also used for the mailing list, and it was this which was reproduced in the lobby as his own opinion. The entire campaign cost about ten dollars.

Some Trick

Everyone pulled together to put over When Knighthood Was in Flower at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, and they played several days to a standout. A castle front was the lobby scheme, with arches for entrance and exit, and an arched window before the box office in which stood a cut-out of Miss Davies in her boy's dress.

No one seemed to notice that she stood on one foot for an entire week, but it was some stunt. A little thought would have provided a rest for the upraised foot.

Good "Skin" Card

H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., got a good idea for a distributed novelty on Brothers Under the Skin. It is a slip 5½ by 6 inches, folded once the long way. On the outside is printed, "Everyone should get married, but—"

Inside the message is continued to read, "they should first see Brothers Under the Skin at the Empire," with the dates. As this took only half of one side, the rest was given to the announcement of Mary Pickford in Tess for the second half of the week, making one attractor line sell two productions.

A BIG TIME DISPLAY FROM A SMALL TOWN NEWSPAPER

How William B. Small, of the Tabb Theatre, Mt. Sterling, Ky., advertised his First National Week in the Mt. Sterling Advocate. It is nothing sensational, but this double page in two colors would be a credit to a newspaper of any size.

Agreeing with Small

Sending in a couple of double truck advertising displays for First National Week at the Tabb Theatre, Mt. Sterling, Ky., William B. Small, the manager, opines that even small city papers might well feel proud of the display and says he never saw better in a small town in his twenty-two years in the business.

We second the motion with a great deal of pleasure. Typographically, the work is as good, both in point of composition and press work, as can be had from any paper, large city or small town. It is mostly plan book material, as applied to attractions, but the work comes up clean and inviting and the type display is really better than some of the big cities can boast. A two-color was used for smash and a straight black for the other, the double truck being used twice, three days apart.

Of course Mr. Small cannot in modesty add that his own share of the work is as well done, but we'll say that for him, and in all honesty. It's a really pretty display. We particularly like his last line, which runs: "When better photoplays are produced you'll see them at the Tabb, and they'll likely bear the First National trademark."

2 and 2 Make Much

Two and two used to make four, but I. B. Holloway made two dollars and two dollars make a great deal more than four dollars on East Is West. Half the money was sunk into paper lanterns and the other two into air balloons, both at wholesale prices. They completely filled the lobby of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga., and made a fine flash.

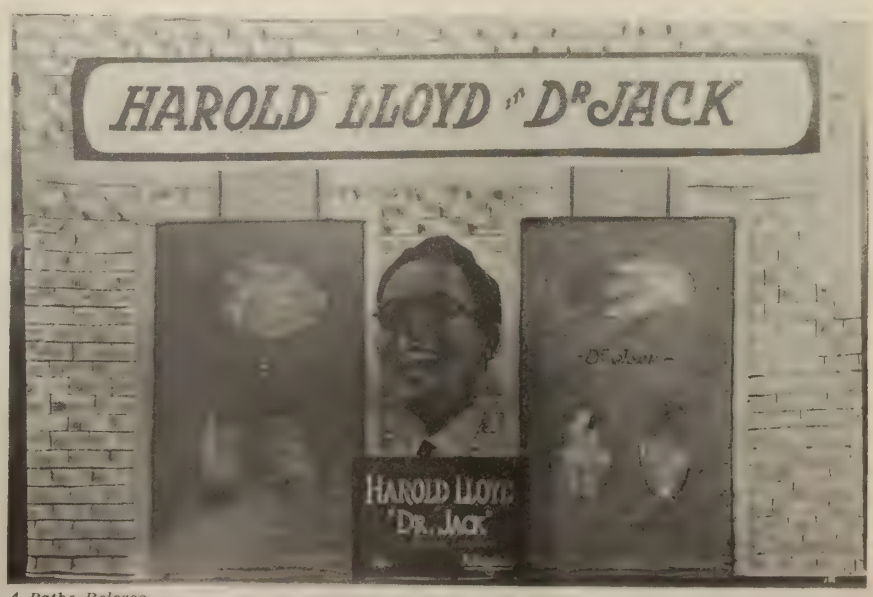
Five hundred heralds were mailed out and another 1,500 peddled, and slides were used during the showing of Dr. Jack to tell that Constance Talmadge was coming. Four vacant store windows were stuffed with lithos, and the lobby lights were mixed amber and pink, supplementing the lanterns.

Even poor weather could not hurt much and business was away ahead of clear-day averages.

Dressed the Box

E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, dressed up his shadow box for Singed Wings and got a very pretty effect. With the box for a foundation, he placed a cutout butterfly, lettered with the title, at the base, and above some painted rocks from which Spanish moss was draped, doing away with the harsh outline of the opening. Back of this was a cutout of Miss Daniels against a backing of foliage, the whole making a very charming display and suggesting a play of unusual daintiness.

It was comparatively little trouble to fix up the box and it was well worth the time it took.



A Pathe Release

"DR. JACK" HAD TWO OFFICE ENTRANCES IN KNOXVILLE

With Billy Sunday as opposition, and spending only $10 in extra exploitation, W. E. Drumbar of the Riviera Theatre just missed breaking his records in the face of the revival with Harold Lloyd. This was the lobby front he employed.

Gimme Buttons Made Direct Sales Stunt

A. W. Force, of the Bijou Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., found a new use for the buttons used for Gimme, and which are provided in various forms for many features.

The local Masons were having a drive for a new wing for the Masonic Home in the health resort and were trying to raise $150,000. Mr. Force showed the committee the Goldwyn feature at the Detroit exchange and arranged a sale on a commission basis, the Masons taking 20,000 tickets.

Buttons for Tags

An ample supply of buttons was purchased and these were supplied the canvassers, who pinned a button on their prospective victims and then explained that the Gimme meant "Gimme the price of two tickets." It made a tremendous volume of sales, and also enabled Mr. Force to get special locations for his other advertising matter.

The button-tag idea is a distinct addition to the commission sales scheme for which Mr. Force is to be thanked.

Midnight Preview

Jean Finley gave a midnight preview of One Exciting Night to one thousand invited guests at the Old Mill, Dallas, Texas.

He figured that midnight was a good time to show the mystery picture, for one thing, and for another he decided that a thousand persons waiting in the lobby as the last night crowd passed out would help to impress those patrons.

He issued nicely printed invitations for a performance to commence at a quarter to eleven the night before the opening, and sent out 500 of these, each good for two persons. Refreshments were served and it was what the society reporters called a "gala event."

A novelty in teasers was a set of five displays. The first carried five concentric circles and no type. The next carried four circles and "It thrills." Then came three circles and "What? When? Who? Where?" and the next had only two circles and the title, with the house name outside the circles. The fifth was the first full announcement.

Exploitation Helped Keep House Going On

Sending in a display for When Knighthood Was in Flower, which includes cutouts from the three, six and 24-sheets, the Gillis Theatre, Clarksburg, W. Va., explains that exploitation had helped materially to keep the house going through the dull times in the past year or so.

Formerly the Palace, a tabloid house, the theatre was taken over in November, 1921, and since that time intensive work has kept it on the up grade in the face of business depression.

In the display for Knighthood there are cutouts from the paper as well as a simple castle front, seven frames and a perpendicular banner at one end of the building. There is almost too much, and some of the cutouts would have done better work in store windows, but it gets the business.

Mr. Gillis adds that the house has been and is going to be "one hundred per cent Paramount."

EXPLOITATION PUT OVER THE GILLIS PALACE THEATRE

Formerly a "tab" house, the Palace, now named the Gillis, in Clarksburg, W. Va., the house in the past year has weathered the dull times and gained a firm foundation through heavy exploitation, as shown on "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Hooks Merchants to Third Alarm Special

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, did well with a locally made picture of the police department on In the Name of the Law. When The Third Alarm came along with the same proposition with "fire" substituted for "police," he felt that he needed something new. It could not be just the same to be of value.

As a result he offered to take moving pictures for six merchants who could qualify on the fire angle, and sent a circular letter to all his advertisers with the statement that the first six took it. As the picture was run as a teaser one week and in connection with the film the next, this gave two weeks publicity on a screen never for sale for commercial advertising in a general way, and Meyer's only trouble was in deciding which six spoke first.

It is a good idea, and will really make for local interest, since today as in 1896 the chief interest is seeing the everyday things on the screen. Try and work this in if you have either of the pictures yet to play, but if you book both, reserve it for the second kick, since then you will need it more.

Dr. Jack Called

Using the telephone call on Dr. Jack, W. Q. Byers, of the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C., used this message: "This is Dr. Jack talking. I understand you have not been laughing well lately. I can give you an appointment at 2, 3:30, 5, 6:30, 8 or 9:30 at the Liberty Theatre. I will be in town tomorrow and the day after." It was one of the helps to a doubled business.

THIS KENTUCKY DERBY WAS A CONTINUOUS PERFORMANCE

H. B. Clarke, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, made an elaborate display with a string of moving horses on an endless belt in the miniature stage set in front of the horseshoe. It sold a lot of extra tickets to the men with its racing suggestion.

Gave a Big Party to Davies Feature

Because most exhibitors are playing When Knighthood Was in Flower on a percentage, the exchanges are doing all they can to make business big. Harry Swift helped Miss Tudor over in Portsmouth, Ohio, with a ball the night before the opening.

It cost you $1.50 to come and bring your best girl, but for that you had a dance and the girl had a chance to win a prize if she dressed to match any costume worn by Miss Davies in this production. And your seventy-five cents per included a pre-viewing of the picture, which was run off as the feature of the entertainment.

Thirty dollars in prizes were offered for costumes, and the affair a great deal more than paid expenses. Of course the guests bragged about seeing the picture before the rest of the town, and the verbal advertising was not the least productive result of the party. Moreover the social event gave a different standing to the run of the film. It ceased to be just a picture.

Stage Stars Sat at Strangers' Banquet

For the Pittsburgh run of The Strangers' Banquet, Bill Robson tied a restaurant to the title. Twenty-three visiting theatrical stars were persuaded to be the guests of the restaurant; the same number as appear in the film; and the regular patrons and a lot of new ones sat at the other tables and looked at the collection of stars.

It got the restaurant some extra patronage and newspaper write-ups.

The banquet table float as used in Washington was sent through the streets, set for the twenty-three players, and white-clad chefs marched the sidewalks, the backs of their coats proclaiming that they were on their way to the banquet.

Over the entrance was a painted table at which were seated the guests, with Eleanor Boardman offering a toast, and the book of toasts, which is one of the Goldwyn accessories, was distributed at all public and semi-public banquets.

Roy Miller Invents Regular Ruff Line

A line that even Ralph Ruffner might envy is the latest contribution of Roy Miller, of the California Theatre, Los Angeles. He is urging the reader to be sure and see Gimme and ends with "Obey that impulse today—or even better, this afternoon." That's as neat a come early line as you can reasonably ask for, and stands in a class with "brought to joyous life by this cast of merrymakers." Miller is getting better and—never mind. Just better is enough. The layout is a good one with the musical program sold in the left hand corner and the comedy in a bank of small eight point a trifle too wide as to line. It would be better to double that up and make two columns of it or, still better, to make two banks of about seventeen ems each. A 35-em line in an eight that is little larger than a big six point is tiring on the eyes if more than one line is used and this is a five line bank. Make a note of that "brought to joyous life." It will be worth money to you on the first real comedy you get hold of. Miller will soon find a place among the prize phrase makers. If you want you can also use his patrons "whose visits to the California Theatre are a weekly habit —and a delight." Write that down in your little book, too.

Personal Guarantee Was Help in Denver

Louis K. Sidney, of the Isis Theatre, Denver, used the personal guarantee in the form of an affidavit on behalf of "The Village Blacksmith." The panel at the left is a sworn statement to the effect that "The Village Blacksmith" "is the best motion picture entertainment the Fox theatres have presented in Denver this year." This might not carry any very great weight in January or February, but this was offered late in December, when the returns were all in. And so long as he was talking under oath he went on to tell that it sold for two dollars in New York, but would be offered at regular prices in Denver. He also made the sworn statement that certain named players would appear in the cast, and he concluded by swearing that the attraction would open the following Saturday. It seems odd that the Saturday opening has not come east. It is a real money-making stunt in the West, where the Saturday and Sunday houses—always the largest of the week—go out to spread the verbal advertising through the town. For convenience in booking, the drama attractions usually open on Sunday or Monday; but west of the Big River it has been found that a Saturday opening will help a good show very materially, and will hurt a poor one less than when the big day comes at the end of the run. Mr. Sidney's artist has given him a very pretty sketch, and has done a better job of lettering than most hand-lettered spaces yield, partly, perhaps, because he had more space in which to work, as this display is 145 lines across the page at the bottom. The chief selling angle was the affidavit, which is good for once a year and sometimes less than that. The personal guarantee will work every time you have a big offering if you hold the device strictly to the big stuff. You can make it the sign of the better show, and use it every week if you so desire. This is merely a statement of fact, and is of value in proportion to the esteem in which your patrons hold you. It does not become hackneyed through use if it is used regularly. But the guarantee, if it is not made a regular and accustomed feature, is good only at intervals of six weeks or longer, and the sworn statement should be reserved for a final effort to get them in. It will stale very quickly if used repeatedly, but for a very occassional it is a capital device.

Ruff's New Idea for Doctor Jack

Ralph Ruffner had "Dr. Jack" for his holiday bill at the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, and he devised a rather unusual and wholly characteristic attractor. He figured that he would not have to work overtime to sell his patrons the idea of seeing "Dr. Jack," but he wanted them to know that Harold Lloyd was there, so he concentrated more upon his attractor and achieved this effect. It is not characteristic of the story, but it gets over the idea of the big laugh, and we think that if he had had one handy Ruff would have used a line cut of the star instead of a fancy sketch; but very often Ruff is not able to get hold of what he wants and has to make the best of what he can get. The main idea, of course, is the curving arrows enclosing the text. Very often you will find it better to discard the panel work inside and let the type run free. This will permit a larger letter to be used, and still give you the desired white space in addition to that outside the curves. It will be noted, if you can make out the bottom line, that Ruff is using the community sing idea still. A long time ago, when he was in Butte, we told how he jazzed along the sing by means of slides designed to get the audience worked up. He really makes them sing, with the aid of a good song leader, and in Vancouver he has the collaboration of one of the most experienced of the war-time song leaders, known as "Everybody Sing Lyons." If you discarded the sing idea merely because the war was over in 1918 you are throwing money into the waste basket. The sing idea is just as good today as it was in the heart of war times, and you can use it to make business on dull nights or to help a lame feature over, or you can use it just to make a little extra money; but however you use it you spell "sing" this way, "$ing." You can't tell Ruff an idea is old or out of date so long as he can make money with it and please his public, and we gather that he frequently uses the sing idea along with a lot of other ideas you others have forgotten. Dig out the sing stunt and you'll find it is like discovering a dollar bill in the suit you packed away in moth balls. It's found money.

A CROSS PAGE DISPLAY FOR AN AFFIDAVIT AS TO THE VALUE OF A FEATURE

Hook Up Stores to a Paramount Title

Overpraising Harry Swift for his window grabbing in the early days of exploitation gave him a false sense of the value of this one device, and he dropped down on other forms. But lately Harry has come into the limelight with a lot of good stunts not even remotely connected with windows. The nearest this last stunt comes to a window is that it is put out by a dry goods store. Working with a seven-column paper, he persuaded the store to take a drop of seven inches. This is about double what the theatre took because the theatre then needed to take less space, since the dry goods firm was putting the title over. The house display ran about four inches above the space shown here, and part of the text in between was a story, contributed by an admiring editor, telling how Harry had tied ten enterprises to the title. This included the paper itself, dealing with "real news," and a restaurant classified under "Food digestion." Probably it was argued that it was manslaughter to serve poor foods. This was done down in Maysville, Ohio; not a very large place, but important to the local manager; and as Harry was putting over the De Mille picture for the Washington and Gem Theatres he did better with the town than if he had pulled a larger stunt in a more important town. It was evidently a real stunt in a virgin territory. We are glad to see that Harry is working along more versatile lines. He was one of the earliest of the exploiteers, and seems to be doing better than merely holding his own. Hooking a merchant to so large a display space merely on the title is something new, and it is good even at a small inch rate.

No Minarets for Talmadge Feature

It might have been expected that the special displays for Norma Talmadge in The Voice from the Minaret would pull a lot of minarets and things suggestive of imported cigarette ads, but the majority of exhibitors have picked up the idea of the combination of Miss Talmadge and O'Brien and have played that up instead, which will probably bring a great deal more money. This is the layout for Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, and outside of the fact that poor press work kills down the cost, this is a very nice display in a four elevens, but it makes the mistake of using the "Better than Smilin' Through." It is almost to be regretted that Miss Talmadge made such a powerful impression in Smilin' Through that she must be tagged with the comparison for the next couple of years. The Voice is not better than Smilin' Through. It has no particular points of similarity and Miss Talmadge should be permitted to stand on each production and not measured by a single yardstick. It is unfair to the capable actress to hitch her to one success, no matter how great that success may have been. Undoubtedly Smilin' Through will ever rank as one of her greatest successes, for it is but seldom that a player finds a part so well suited to her personality. She was wonderful in Smilin' Through, but she is just as good from another angle in The Voice, and should be permitted to make her appeal in this play of distinctly another type without a forced comparison with her magnum opus. Don't drag Smilin' Through into every Talmadge advertisement to the end of time. Let her have a fair chance. She pulled as big business with The Eternal Flame. She will probably do as well with this. It is not necessary to drag in the past, as though it were the only decent thing she has ever done. Let the audience remember for themselves her fine work in the older play, but do not invite them to make comparisons any more than you would invite them to compare a horse with a giraffe. Let each Talmadge production be an event in itself and not an effort to trail on past history. She is clever enough and popular enough to be a star in her own right and it is unfair to attempt to nail her to a single role and measure all her other achievements by this standard. Forget Smilin' Through and remember Norma Talmadge. That comparisons are odious has passed into a proverb, but comparisons are never so odious as when they are used to handicap players. The Voice from The Minaret is too different to be 'better than" Smilin' Through. Dr. Jack is not "better than" Grandma's Boy. It's different and should be sold on the difference. And that goes down the entire line. Never permit your stars, who will appear in a variety of productions, to become so identified with a single product that all judgment is based upon the personal liking for or dislike of that one role. Try and be more original, and more just to a real artist. This goes for about a thousand exhibitors and not just the Valentine.

Ruff Lost Out

When we were in Vancouver last summer Ralph Ruffler had a pair of parrot like birds from Australia as one of his ballyhoo stunts and told us that he was trying for a laughing jackass. When he came east we asked if he had obtained the bird, and he told the sad story. The exportation of the laughing jackass is forbidden, except for display in zoological collections, and the ship captain who promised one to Ruff was smuggling the bird aboard in a carefully covered container. All might have gone well had not the blamed bird started to laugh just as it was being carried up the gangplank, and bird and conductor were taken to the police court where the bird was confiscated and the captain was fined five shillings. Ruff is still without a laughing jackass to help along with his comedies.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST. (6,377 feet). Featured cast. A fine one for an after school matinee. Photography, or lighting, rather poor. American output has had poor lighting on every subject I have used so far. Advertised with billboard, dodgers. Attendance fair, good matinee. Town of 8,000, draw working element. Admission generally 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,377 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This is great and you can make no mistake in playing it, provided you do not pay too much for it. Advertised heavily with special prologue. Attendance great. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,377 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Oh, boy! I knocked them dead with this. Pleased young and old; a comedy that is a comedy. You can't go wrong on this. Did better with this than any Chaplin I ever ran. Lloyd has Chaplin outdistanced in every way, here. Advertised with twenty-fours, cutouts, heralds, etc. Attendance great. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. Admission 10-55. Alodph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

F. B. O.

BROADWAY MADONNA. (5,602 feet). Star cast. Boost this one; it is a Special. Big cast. A vampire story. Many favorable comments. Advertised with six, three, ones, slide, lobby. Attendance very good. Draw all classes, get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

CALL OF HOME. (6,000 feet). All star. The best we have had yet from F. B. O. Better than a lot of so-called Specials. Advertised with threes, ones and photos. Attendance good. Mining town, drawing mixed class. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. (5,400 feet). Star, Harry Carey. The usual Harry Carey picture. Nothing extra, nothing to condemn. Used usual advertising to general patronage in big city. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. (5,400 feet). Star, Hary Carey. The first three reels drag very much, but all of a sudden the story seems to change into new life. Those who saw it seemed to be pleased. It will go over where Westerns are enjoyed. Advertised with ones, threes, sixes. Attendance fair. Town of 4,800, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES. (4,900 feet). A Sherlock Holmes (Conan Doyle) story. I'd stay away from this again. Good story, ruined. Due no doubt to poor direction. It will pull them in but you will have to hide after it is over. Advertised regular ways. Attendance fair. Town of 3,000, draw all classes. Admission, 15-30, 25, 50. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

STEALERS. (7,000 feet). Star cast, Wm. Christy Cabanne production. Very good production. Will take anywhere. Good moral. Print in good shape. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Town of 350, draw small town and surroundings. Admission, 10-28. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

THELMA. Star, Jane Novak. A money maker. Will not rank among the big specials. Don't look for much Norway scenery. However, the price was right and it's a puller. Used extra advertising; attendance was good. Town of 1,100. Admission, 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. The picture was just splendid, and enjoyed a week's fine business, pleasing all seeing it. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

First National

BOND BOY. (6,902 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Good. Used window cards, billboard, newspaper, to pull good attendance. Town of 9,237, drawing general type. Admission 10-20-30. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,650 feet). Features dog, "Strongheart." A splendid picture both from standpoint of scenery and of story. Pleased everyone. Advertised with twenty-fours, three threes, two ones, photos, window cards, to get good attendance, drawing merchants, residents of town and farmers. Herbert Taft, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. (6,091 feet). Featured cast. This took well here. Leave out the little kid and there would not be much left to entertain. Used heralds. newspapers, three and one sheets to get fair attendance. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. We consider this a very good picture, but cannot see where it should be considered a Special. It teaches a very good lesson and one that will be remembered. The advertising slants are exceptionally good. Our attendance was fair. Town of 7,100, draw better class. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

EAST IS WEST. (7,737 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. By far the best that Constance has ever done; with this picture she has won countless friends and if she continues to produce this calibre of play, Norma had better look to her laurels. I used a front with Oriental flavor, got capacity attendance. Big city, drawing transient trade. Admission 17-20. J. L. Stallman, Savoy Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER. (6,000 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. A very good drama for those who can appreciate drama. Photography excellent. Attendance was poor. Town of 500, draw rural class. Admission on this, 20-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

HOTTENTOT. (5,953 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This we can say truthfully is the best audience picture we have ever presented. It has that "something" that makes it go over with a whoop. Half my audience were up waving their hats during the steeplechase. It's big. It is wonderful, and it will please just any audience, we care not where it is. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. Fine sea picture. The villainy is supplied by Wallace Beery and the comedy by a monkey. One of the best melodramas I've run. Used photos, ones, slide, newspaper to get good attendance. Town of 3,700, draw general small town classes. Admission 10-20. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LOVE'S REDEMPTION. (5,889 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Although this is a little bit old, Norma's acting seemed to please all. Attendance was good. Town of about two thousand, regular small town draw. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,600 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Good picture, but for me they ask too much for it. Advertised big with fair attendance. Town of 3,700, draw general class. Admission 10-20. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Illinois.

OMAR, THE TENTMAKER. (8,090 feet).

A fine picture of its knid, but who wants this kind in a small town like ours? Play it now and get them in while they are reading the national advertising or you'll be sorry. Attendance was fair. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

ROSE OF THE SEA. (6,037 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. It's good entertainment, and especially pleasing to the ladies. Seemed to please all who viewed it. Attendance fair. Town of 2,500, draw farmers and retired farmers. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SEVENTH DAY. (5,335 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Not the star's best picture, but a good one that seemed to please all the younger people and most of the old ones. Print in good condition and sold at a fair price. Advertised with regular window cards, newspaper and lobby. Attendance good. Town of 2,000, draw general patronage. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum Theatre, Quinton, Oklahoma.

SIGN ON THE DOOR. (7,100 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. It may have been a good picture—I could not tell, and neither could anyone else as the print was cut to pieces. Did not even have an ending. When people went out they asked when we were going to show the next episode. Look out for this stuff—it was rotten. Advertised usual way. Attendance good. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

SONNY. (6,900 feet). A good picture. If you have not played it go for it big. Advertised usual way, had good attendance. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

TEN DOLLAR RAISE. (5,726 feet). A Peter B. Kyne story, with William V. Mong. A very good picture indeed, but refused to draw. We didn't take in film rental. I wouldn't say play it unless you are assured of a crowd, because it won't draw. Used ones and threes to advertise, with poor crowd. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

WHITE SHOULDERS. (5,966 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. A little better than usual for a MacDonald subject. She has a certain following, but there are plenty who do not care for her here. Advertised well. Attendance was fair. Town of 7,500, draw better class. Admission 10-17-28-35. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Fox

BAR NOTHING. (4,311 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Very good star. People rave about him. They think he's the coming star. This type picture pleases everybody. Used ones, three, six, photos, heralds, for fairly good attendance. Tom Marksby, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

BOSS OF CAMP FOUR. (4,236 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Oh, boy! Talk about action and fight. In other words, he's there with the goods. I think if he keeps it up, Tom Mix cannot have anything over Charles Jones. Attendance was fair. Town of 3,000, drawing poor class mostly. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York. k

BRASS COMMANDMENTS. (4,829 feet). Star, William Farnum. Although star does his usual style of acting in this picture, it does not seem to please the majority. Usual allotment of posters drew mixed class in pretty good attendance. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

CRUSADER. (4,780 feet). Star, William Russell. A good enough story in which Russell gets everything out of it that is possible. It pleased our people and drew good business—and that's what we're here for. City of 15,000, draw younger set and foreigners. Admission 10-20. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

FAST MAIL. (6,000 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Played this on January first, and as that is quite a holiday here, did a fine business. It was a good holiday picture and I hooked it up with a good comedy and a single reel. Of the feature alone—it would not have stood up; it's wild and woolly melodrama of the "wildest" kind. I can see where it goes over in some towns and more than make good, but being a picture built on stunts—and the plausibility none too marked—these "weisenheimers" here had a lot to say. Summed up: the picture is not a picture for this town, but has value in certain communities. I don't get the "Special" idea, though I presume it did cost some money hiring railroad trains, wrecking houses, burning and sinking steamboats, as outside of that I see no cost in production. Advertising usual, got good attendance. Patrons are health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HONOR FIRST. (6,000 feet). Star, John Gilbert. This picture is very good and pleased majority. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Town of 1,800, draw mixed class. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, featuring horse "Tony." Good Western. All compliments. Regular line of advertising got good one day attendance. Town of 3,000, draw from oil field patronage. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, featuring horse "Tony." By far the greatest picture Mix ever made. Drew splendid business and pleased a hundred per cent. By all means don't pass this one by. Used ones, threes, photos, slide, to pull good attendance. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. Star, Dustin Farnum. Absolutely the rottenest print I ever received. Had to purchase another feature. If you boys want to stay in the show business, stay away from this bad print. Regular advertising got good attendance; had to hide to avoid patrons. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

MY FRIEND THE DEVIL. (9,555 feet). Star cast. For me, poor. Attendance the same. City of 17,000, draw family trade. Matinee admission 10-17, evening 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

NERO. Stars, foreign. A costly picture that has the most limited appeal of any ever shown here. I kept the film two days and on the two days didn't do the equal of one capacity house, and my total seating capacity is exactly 787. Gave a matinee daily and one performance at night. Went after this strong. Teasers, heralds, mailing list, special Nero book, "What I Know About Women." The first day I got a fair attendance, due to publicity efforts, but after they saw the picture that ended it—the word went forth and the picture was killed. I paid "important" cash for this and barely "got by." Small towns—keep off this one by all means; it will lose you money; the more you pay the bigger the loss; as entertainment, it's nil. Advertising, heralds, house programs, teasers, mailing list, ones and threes. Nero special booklet printed locally. Attendance, putrid. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

NERO. (11,500 feet). Special cast. Not as good as they say it is. First six reels not of much account. Last six reels better. Advertised with slide, heralds, posters, photos. Attendance was poor. Town of 600 in Winter. Draw all classes. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

NIGHT HORSEMAN. (4,970 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A very good Mix picture. Fine scenery. Advertised with slides, posters, bills; got good attendance. Town of 2,800, draw from factory people. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

PRIMAL LAW. (5,320 feet), Star, Dustin Farnum. Never saw this one but they came out telling how good it was; by that, it must be O. K. Running Fox stuff, some of it two days, can't make any money, series too high, falls off second day, but the service is O. K. City of 15,000. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

ROUGH SHOD. (4,486 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. This is one of Buck's good ones and is the sort of picture my patrons like to see him in. Attendance was good. Town of about 2,000, regular small town type. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

STRANGE IDOLS. (4,300 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. This went over real well and took the best of any of his thus far. Farnum seems to be of worn out name. Regular advertising got fair attendance. Town of 282. Admission 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

THUNDERCLAP. (6,745 feet). All star cast. First four or five reels are slow, the last two reels will keep 'em on the edge of their seats. The suffering of Mary Carr as Mrs. Jameson, overdone. Lots of complaints on that. Advertised with photos, sixes, newspapers, got poor attendance. Town of 600. Admission 10-25. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

WESTERN SPEED. Star, Charles "Buck"

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

R. K. Russell, whose reports you see often coming from Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa, puts into words the whole spirit of Straight From the Shoulder:

"It is my utmost desire to be of some good to my fellow men."

J. W. Creamer, Ned Pedigo, Dave Seymour, Walter Odom, Jake Jones, K. H. Sink, and the seldom-in-but-often-missed E. L. Partridge have all said the same thing, but it's never before been put in quite such snappy and plain terms.

"It is my utmost desire to be of some good to my fellow men."

That's the feeling that prompts the many busy exhibitors to fill in reports blanks. It's the feeling that prompted the beginnings of Straight From the Shoulder. That spirit will keep the dependable tip department going strong and growing stronger.

VAN.

Jones. Good picture, with plenty of action; the kind most of them like here. Advertised with photos and ones. Attendance good. Town of 2,000, draw town and country. Admission 10-25-35. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

Goldwyn

ACE OF HEARTS. (5,883 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Good picture. A good lesson in this story. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE. A fairly good program picture. Some liked it and some didn't. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ALWAYS THE WOMAN. (5,450 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good picture nice story. Pleased our patrons. Advertised regular way. Attendance poor, account bad weather. Regular type small town; admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

BRANDING IRON. (5,000 feet). Stars, James Kirkwood, Barbara Castleton. Very interesting all through. Good moral. Picture clean. Unusual settings, mostly in the West. Advertised with one three, one six, two ones, photos and slide to draw fair business. Town of 650, draw mixed town and country. Admission 10-22-25. E. E. Stearns, "Dewtell" Theatre, South Dayton, New York.

DUST FLOWER. (5,651 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. A mighty fine little picture that seemed to "go over." Ran it as a Special on Christmas Day. Used no advertising. Attendance was extra fine. Town of 2,850, draw railroad transients, farmers. Regular admission 10-25, special 15-35. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

GREAT LOVER. (5,000 feet). All star. For me, no good. If they would take pictures of this sort and junk them they would be better off; they help kill the good ones, and still you are forced to take it. Attendance of sixty-five—glad there were no more. Town of a thousand, draw all classes. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

INVISIBLE POWER. (6,000 feet). Star, House Peters. Good crook story. Made a good Saturday program for me. No kicks heard. Usual advertising got fair attendance. Typical small town. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

INVISIBLE POWER. (6,000 feet). Star, House Peters. A heavy drama that should be played on a very stormy night, because then the feelings of the audience will attune with the picture. Used combination program, heralds, newspaper, window cards, drew fair business. Usual farmer and small town patronage. Admission 15-25. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). All star cast. A good program picture. Is not worth an advance in price. Spent so much for it, had to raise prices. Some told me it was better than "Old Nest" and "Over the Hill." Used photos, window cards, newspaper and ones to get fair attendance. Town of 600. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). All star cast. A picture sold to me as a Special. Lost money, and patrons walked out before it was half over. Poorest Saturday we had for a year. Used weekly town herald and big front to very poor attendance. Town of eight thousand, draw good class. Tom Andrews, Strand Theatre, Sharpsburg, Pennsylvania.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. A five-reel everyday program picture in nine reels, sold to us as a Special. Paid big money and lost big money. Poorest Friday and Saturday we ever had. Advertised with window cards, newspaper and big front. Town of 8,000, draw from good class, attendance was "rotten." Thomas Andrews, Strand Theatre, Sharpsburg, Pennsylvania.

SIN FLOOD. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Never had a picture to cause such various reports as this one. Some liked it and boosted it to the sky, while some thought it was "rotten," but as a whole it went over. But I lost money on it as I have on all of these Special (?) pictures. Advertised as usual, getting poor attendance. Town of 2,000, draw farmers. Admission 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

WET GOLD. (6,000 feet). Ralph Ince produced and starred. For me, no good. Extremely poor print. Watch out for this stuff. Ordinary advertising brought usual Saturday night attendance. Town of usual small town sort, 2,500. Admission 17-28. Stanley G. Allen, Allen Theatre, Chatham, New York.

Hodkinson

BROKEN GATE. (6,000 feet). Star, Bessie Barriscale. Very good picture. Could use more like this. Advertised with threes, ones, photos to draw good attendance. Draw mixed type. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadara, Oklahoma.

DOWN HOME. (7,000 feet). Star cast includes Leatrice Joy. Moves rather slowly but has many good touches and should hold the interest of average small town crowd. Announced on monthly program and with ones and slide, getting average attendance. Town of 300, draw farmer class. Admission 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

FREE AIR. (5,600 feet). A-1 and will get the money if they like this kind of story, and nearly everyone who drives a car will see some of their own experiences. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Synder, Oklahoma.

KEEPING UP WITH LIZZIE. (5,000 feet). Star, Enid Bennett. A fairly good light comedy drama with the accent on the "light." The star did her best, apparently, but the play as a whole did not register very high in local approval. Regular paper, newspaper and mailing list brought fair attendance. Town of a thousand, farming community. Regular admission 10-20. Once a week 20-40. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

Top Six and Another Six

Jack Kaplan's reports from Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York, have always been sincere and straight from the shoulder. Now he sends something besides reports—you'll find it helpful, too.

"The following consists of a pick of the pictures shown in our theatre since last September, every one of which completely satisfied the audience attending:

"Silver Wings" (Fox)
"Star Dust" (First Natl.)
"Monte Cristo" (Fox)
"Fool There Was" (Fox)
"Honor First" (Fox)
"Under Oath" (Fox)

"I don't mean so say these are the best pictures produced last year; they're simply the most prominent of the successful pictures presented at our theatre.

"Now you'll have six pictures that we played that did not seem to strike the bull's-eye. In other words, they turned out to be something like failures:

"Barnstormer" (First Natl.)
"Calvert's Valley" (Fox)
"Nero" (Fox)
"Deuce of Spades" (First Natl.)
"Wife Against Wife" (First Natl.)
"Gas, Oil and Water" (First Natl.)

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALLIANT. (6,265 feet). Star cast includes Chaney. Any one who would call any picture a name like this one has done does not show much business sense to start with. Even if the picture be ever so good, it is killed by this infernal name. Picture only fair—too rough for the females and little folks. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

ENTER MADAME. (6,500 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. This one is only fair. Don't promise much on it for the star has made a lot better; not in same class with "Charge It." Buster Keaton, in "The Electric House," saved the day for us, for this comedy is a riot. No advertising, had fair attendance. Town of 7,125, draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-20. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

FASCINATION. (7,940 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Very good attraction; well liked by all. This is the kind of stuff they should keep on making. Used program and newspaper, had good attendance. City of 12,000, draw all classes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

FIGHTIN' MAD. (5,436 feet). Star, William Desmond. As fine a Western as we have seen any place. Used ones, threes, stills, newspaper, slide, heralds. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

FOURTEENTH LOVER. (6,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A very good program picture of the light comedy type. Used regular paper, newspaper and mailing list, but due to heavy snow and subsequent slush, business was off. Town of a thousand, farming community. Admission regularly 10-20, special 20-40. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

HOLE IN THE WALL. (6,000 feet). Star, Alice Lake. Good. First class picture. Used regular advertising for good attendance. Town of 14,000, draw working class. Admission 10-25. H. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

I CAN EXPLAIN. (5,000 feet). Star, Gareth Hughes. Why are such pictures released? Just one more good reason why people stay away from pictures. Attendance was poor. City of 110,000, draw medium working class. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. (5,481 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Another one of those pictures that never fails to please my patrons. The best Reid picture to date. Advertised with ones, threes, sixes, heralds, photos. Attendance very good. Town of 2,150, draw all classes. Admission 10-20. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

ANNA ASCENDS. (5,959 feet). Star, Alice Brady. This is a very good production and all who saw it liked it very much, but it is a hard one to draw to. Attendance usual. Draw best people in city. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Very good. One of the best pictures that I have had. The patrons all enjoyed it very much. Advertised with one, three, six, twenty-four, 11x14s. Attendance good. Draw best people in city. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. One of the best pictures. Everybody seeing the picture was highly pleased, at least most of 'em said so, and many returned for second helping. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Valentino. A story interestingly told and, in the main, well acted. A sure fire attraction. In the opinion of the public Nita Naldi far outshines Lila Lee. Rodolph Valentino is still first in the hearts of the fair sex. Advertised usual way, had good attendance. City of 10,000, draw medium and working classes. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BORDERLAND. (5,405 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A pretty good, well developed story along New Thought lines that carries a theme many people are growing to believe in. It is well mounted, well acted and will please almost any audience. City of 15,000, draw younger set and foreigners. Admission 10-20. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre. Bellaire, Ohio.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star, Milton Sills, A good picture in every respect. We advertised rather heavily and had good attendance. City of 10,000, draw working people. Admission twenty-five cents. Dan Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

DICTATOR. (5,221 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Man, when you look at this one it will surely make you realize what a fine asset we lost when Wallace Reid died. It's just bully good entertainment from beginning to end. Walter Law steals the picture, but it's my idea of a "humdinger." Not a big picture, but a corking good little one. Advertising slants are Reid, author, comedy. Attendance good. City of 14,000, draw all classes. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BEHOLD MY WIFE. (5,000 feet). Stars, Julienne Scott, Milton Sills. Picture very good. Film very bad; at least fifty bad frames; did not have time to repair account of late arrival. Advertised with ones, three, six, slide 11x14s. Attendance fair. Town of 1,195. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

FOR THE DEFENSE. Star, Ethel Clayton. This is the best of the last of the features she made for Famous Players. She has never failed us for a good, clean picture, and this is what our people want. Advertised with photos, insert cards, threes, ones, had fair attendance. We draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-20, 10-25. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

Which ?

H. H. Hedberg, of A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana, says: "Your department is growing. Now there are two theatres in this town. One of them books from Straight From the Shoulder. Which has the best chance at good shows?"

Put your bets on the A-Muse-U.

FOREVER. Stars, Elsie Ferguson, Wallace Reid. The one word that describes this picture for me, "cheese." How long are we going to continue to get such stuff? Advertising slants are none except stars. Attendance average and disgusted. Town of 2,500, regular small town patronage. Admission 5-10, 10-20. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

GREAT MOMENT. (6,372 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Very good attraction, liked by the particular kind. To my opinion better than "Beyond the Rocks," at less rental. Advertised with newspaper and posters, had poor attendance. City of 12,000, draw all classes. Change admission. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

GOOD PROVIDER. (7,753 feet). Star cast. A great picture that failed to pull. They must have fancied it was another "sob film." Really, a very classy comedy-drama. Attendance was fair. Town of 4,000, draw from families and students. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

GREAT MOMENT. (6,372 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A good picture, the average program picture. Advertised with daily papers and lobby, drew fair. A. R. Workman, Colliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

GREAT IMPERSONATION. Star, James Kirkwood. Pretty good entertainment for program picture. Advertised as usual, with average Saturday attendance. Town of 2,700, drawing general, transient, railroad, farmers. Admission 10-25, 10-35. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

IF YOU BELIEVE IT, IT'S SO. (5,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A rather weak imitation of the "Miracle Man." Pleased fairly well, but fell down at the box office. It is far from a bad picture, however, and was worth what we paid for it. Where Meighan is popular it is worth playing. Theodore Roberts and Charles Ogle are fine in it. Advertising slants, play on star and Theodore Roberts. Our attendance was rather light. City of 14,000, draw merchants, farmers, etc. E. W. Collins, Liberty and Grand theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

KICK IN. Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. A very pleasing picture which enjoyed capacity business for entire week. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. (5,795 feet). Star, Jack Holt. An old Paramount, but is a good picture. Ought to please them all. Good story, good direction, good cast. Regular amount of advertising brought good attendance. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

MORAN OF LADY LETTY. (6,360 feet). Star, Valentino. A splendid picture. Everybody liked it. Best Valentino picture I ever ran. W. Ventera, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

ORDEAL. (4,592 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Not so good. Star not so well liked in this town. Only an average show. Advertised to better class with posters and slide. Had fair attendance. C. A Anglemire, "Y' Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

OUTCAST. Star, Elsie Ferguson. Very ordinary. Pleased only a few of the star's followers. Business poor on account of bad weather. Advertised with lithos and newspaper. Town of 6,000, draw general type. Admission, 10-25. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

PINK GODS. (7,062 feet.) Stars, Bebe Daniels and James Kirkwood. A picture that meant nothing at the box office, for after the matinee exhibit the evening performance was notable for its empty seats. It's similar in theme to many shown before. Advertised with mailing list, etc. Attendance, fair. Patrons are health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Featured cast. Frank Borzage-Cosmopolitan production. This picture did well for us and would consider it a good drawing card for any house. Advertised as usual with fairly good attendance. City of 10,000, draw middle class people. Admission, 25 cents. Daniel Buss, per Bert Jackson, house manager, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

SOUTH OF SUVA. (5,000 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. A good program picture. Minter takes an entirely different part from those she usually plays. We like her better in her old roles as the sweet little thing, although she plays her part admirably in this one and the picture should please. My theatre draws the better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

TRUTHFUL LIAR. (5,243 feet). Star, Wanda Hawley. Wanda brings in as big a crowd as the other Realart stars and this one will average up with her previous offerings. Attendance was fair. Town of a couple thousand, drawing county seat and surrounding country class. Admission, 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

WHILE SATAN SLEEPS. (4,850 feet). Jack Holt and star cast. Maurice Tournier production. The picture will please a majority of those seeing it. William Noble, Riako Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHITE AND UNMARRIED. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Meighan. An entertaining, pleasing picture all the way. A crook drama that seems to lack much of a moral, but runs along just as entertainment. Makes no lasting impression, but is good pastime. Ben L. Morris, Elk Grand Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

WORLD'S APPLAUSE. (6,526 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Both old and young will enjoy it as it is an honest-to-goodness picture that pleases all seeing it. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

YOUNG DIANA. (6,744 feet). Star, Marion Davies. While those in the profession may see the good points of this, frankly it will not please the masses. A beautiful picture—but not good for small towns. Advertised regular way, pulling fair attendance. Town of 7,000, drawing general class. Admission, 10-25-30-40. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. My patrons seemed to enjoy it better than "Grandma's Boy"; it's truly a knockout of a picture. Buy it right and run it by all means. I did not make much on it on account of high rental. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, heralds lots of novelties, with very good attendance. Town of 2,150, draw all classes. Admission 10-20. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

Preferred Pictures

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (6,500 feet). Star cast. A classy Society picture. Nothing much new to story, but well produced, with great cast. Has Prizma titles. Attendance was fair. Town of 4,000, students and family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Selznick

CLAY DOLLARS. (5,000 feet). Star, Eugene O'Brien. Good comedy-drama. This one will satisfy most of them. Used photos, ones, slide; had fair attendance. Town of 2,000, draw town and country trade. Admission 10-25-35. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

United Artists

MAN WHO PLAYED GOD. (5,855 feet). Star, George Arliss. Pleased patrons here and did a fairly good business. Much will depend on how you "set" this picture musically. Properly played music and organ effects will lift this picture 'way up. Usual advertising brought pretty good attendance of health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TAILOR MADE MAN. (8,649 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Very good. Consider it his best. Audience well satisfied at increased admission. Used regular line of advertising to get fair attendance. Town of 3,000, draw oil field patronage. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. (4,600 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Our audiences liked this picture, especially the boxing scenes which have action, but some of the other scenes were too slow action for them. While nothing to rave about, this picture will go big with male patrons. Advertised with slides, posters, heralds, drew good attendance. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BEAR CAT. (4,550 feet). Hoot Gibson fails to come up to his standard in other pictures. Good for small town. Advertised with one three, four ones and cards. Attendance fair. W. E. Piland, Victory Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

"It is my earnest desire to be of some good to my fellow men."
That's the Straight From the Shoulder spirit. If you feel that way
USE THE BLANK BELOW.

CAUGHT BLUFFING. (5,000 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. This is a good Western picture; can be put over strong. Has a good plot and is well acted by Mayo. Used a three, two ones, teasers, had fair attendance. Town of 2,000, draw residential class. Admission, 10-25. W. F. Piland, Victory Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

THE FLIRT. (8,000 feet). Star, Eileen Percy. The picture enjoyed pleased capacity business for entire week. The picture has a remarkable cast and photography and execution was excellent. No kicks registered on this one. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GALLOPING KID. (4,783 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. For me, not up to the usual good Hoot standard. Title misleading, as there is not much "galloping" in this one. However, it will prove a good Western. Attendance good. Town of about 2,000, town and country draw. Admission, 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

GIRL WHO RAN WILD. (4,506 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. A dandy picture, which is guaranteed to please all who see it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUMAN HEARTS. (6,350 feet). Star, House Peters. Fine picture. Pleased about everyone. Used extra advertising. Fair attendance, as winter season up here is very slow always. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HUMAN HEARTS. (6,350 feet). Star, House Peters. Very nice rural drama of home, and went over good, considering the cold weather we had on the two nights and matinee. Used special printed one sheets and throwaways. Attendance good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

LOADED DOOR. (4,653 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A fair offering and the usual Gibson picture. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MARRIED FLAPPER. (5,000 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Better picture than "World's Champion," which I ran the day before. Cost less than half and pleased better, but got thirty cents for "Champion" and twenty cents for "Flapper," and the biggest crowd on "Champion." Why will the public do it? Somebody tell me quick!—how to get them to come to the Grand to be entertained, not to see some star! Attendance average. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

STORM. (7,400 feet). Star, House Peters. Eight reels of splendid entertainment that pleased the majority. You will make no mistake in showing it. Used heavy exploitation, elaborate stage setting. Attendance great. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission, 10-25-35-40. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

STORM. (7,400 feet). Star, House Peters. A fine picture. Pleased our audience. Many good comments. Our first Universal, and satisfied. Used posters, slides, banner on street cars. Draw better class. Attendance good. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SURE SHOT MORGAN. (8 reels). Star, Harry Carey. A fair picture, which enjoyed fair business. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WILD HONEY. (6,000 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Our first Jewel, and it is a peach. Plenty of action and suspense, together with a good story. The flood scene is wonderful. Used heralds, photos, newspaper. Poor crowd. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

Vitagraph

NINETY AND NINE. (6,800 feet). Star cast. This picture pleased. Give Vitagraph a chance and they will prove to you that other companies are not the only pebble on the beach. Pleased a hundred per cent. Used lobby, newspaper, billboard; attendance was good. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

NO DEFENSE. (5,700 feet). Star, William Duncan. As usual Duncan goes very good here. This is a good story. Well liked by all. Regular advertising pulled good attendance. Draw mining town, mixed class. Admission, 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

STEELHEART. (6,000 feet). Star, William Duncan. Good program picture. Usual advertising pulled fair attendance. Town of 1,700, mostly visitors to draw from. Admission, 15-25. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

STEELHEART. (6,000 feet). Star, Wil-

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. (6,100 feet). Fair program picture. Seven reels is too long; could be cut to five. Used heralds; business was slow. Town of 2500, draw average small town trade. Admission, 17-28. Stanley G. Allen, Allen Theatre, Chatham, New York.

WHERE MEN ARE MEN. (5,000 feet). Stars, William Duncan, Edith Johnson. Very good story; both stars popular here. Pleased well. Used lobby, newspapers to good attendance. Mixed patronage. Admission, 10-30. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

Comedies

BILLY BLAZES, ESQ. (Pathe-Harold Lloyd). Another reissued comedy knockout. Every one of these reissues are great. They are very old, but don't let this hold you back. Buy them. Used one sheets, stock slide. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HOME MADE MOVIES (First Natl.). Star, Ben Turpin. The best two-reel comedy Turpin has ever made. It kept them laughing. Should please any audience a hundred per cent. Used usual posters, attendance was good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

MARRIED LIFE (First Natl.). Star, Ben Turpin. This one surprised us as we had fought it off for a year or more. It drew extra good business and while about as crazy as it is possible to make a picture, it seemed to please. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

ON PATROL (Mack Sennett). Features Billy Bevan. One of the best comedies I ever ran. Lots of good stunts and funny situations. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

PARDON MY GLOVE (Educatl.). Star, Bobby Vernon. A comedy that is ninety-five per cent. Ring fight full of comedy gags. This comedy is away above the average. Ran it two days. Chas. H Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

STEP LIVELY, PLEASE (Fox). This comedy is away below standard. It's about as funny as a funeral. Used regular advertising, had good attendance. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

STING 'EM SWEET (Universal).. Star, Brownie (the wonder dog.) This is a crackerjack comedy: better than some of the Lloyds. You can boost this extra strong Brownie Dog does some fine work. He is great. Best of any picture I've ever seen him in. Go to it. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SUITOR (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. Good. Will get the laughs. My advertising was regular, the attendance very good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

TOUCH ALL THE BASES (Pathe). Star, Paul Parrott. These weekly one-reelers by Roach are a clever article and have good variety. Pollard has graduatd from them, but apparently Roach is working hard to see that Parrott fills "Snub's" vacancy as fast as is possible. We used one sheets on this. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

Serials

IN DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (Univ.). Am on sixth episode. Patrons thought first four episodes slow; getting better, though. Use photos, heralds, newspaper, B. B. hats, twenty-four sheet. Small town. Just fair attendance. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

SPEED (Pathe). Star, Chas. Hutchinson. For me I know it was no good, just movie stuff no one could enjoy. Attendance is good. Town of 1,000. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Star, Ruth Roland. A good serial. Not like the old serials. Star does good work in the picture. Going good for me on the tenth episode. Town of 800 white, 1,200 colored, draw from all classes. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

Lest You Forget

Once again let's get it straight that we want reports only from those in theatres qualified to give honest reports on pictures.

Exchanges, film salesmen, scenario writers—please lay off this stuff.

Short Subjects

CAT AND THE PELICAN (Pathe). Aesop's Fables series. This reel is one continuous laugh. Use one sheets. Attendance good. D. W Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

State Rights

BETTER MAN WINS (Sanford). Star, Pete Morrison. If we must have Westerns, let them be as good as this one. Provides entertainment for audiences desiring this style of picture. Thrills it has in abundance. Pleased everyone. See it—you will agree with me. Has good advertising angles. Good attendance. Royal Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana.

BUILDING COURAGE (Clinton) (4,900 feet). Star, George Larkin. A fair picture; the attendance also was fair. Advertised usual ways. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DOUBLE O. (Arrow). (4,700 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A good Western picture that pleased our patrons and brought satisfactory results. Advertised with newspapers, lobby. Attendance good. J. H. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

GIRL FROM— (Pinetree). Star, Faire Binney. A good picture, fine scenery. An Oliver Curwood story. Advertised with slides, posters, bills. Attendance very good. Town of 2,800, draw factory people. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TWO FISTED JEFFERSON .(Arrow) Star, Jack Hoxie. Good Western. Clean. Advertised with two ones, 11x14. Attendance good. City of 14,000, draw working people. Admission 10-25. G. M. Bertling, Fevorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

PARTED CURTAINS (Warner Bros.). (6,000 feet). Stars, Mary Alden, H. B. Walthall. This certainly is a fine picture. Liked by everyone. Everything in the picture is fine. Book it and make friends. Used slides and posters to get good attendance. Town of 2,800, draw all classes for this. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SERVANT IN THE HOUSE (Standard). (5,000 feet). Absolutely the biggest approach to "junk" that I have played. Was so awful that I went up in the booth and hid. Did not come down until I was sure that everybody was out and gone! Advertised with lobby, cards, newspaper. Attendance good. Town of 900, draw town and country class. H. R. Dixon, Unique Theatre, Walton, Kentucky.

STRANGER OF THE HILLS (Anchor). (5,000 feet). Star, Ed Coxen. A Western which is bound to please at least ninety per cent. Nuf sed! Used six, three, one, slide, lobby, had capacity attendance. Big city, draw all classes, getting 10 cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). (Approximately 6,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. A seven-reel comedy drama that is thin. Ran three days to just about expenses. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). (6,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. A comedy-drama that went over fine here, and it did a nice business and I'll play more of them and would advise any exhibitor to buy them for this story is good enough, the direction good and the cast excellent. You can't dissect it too much but it's audience "sure-fire" with a vengeance and altogether a good buy. Advertised regular way. Good attendance. Patronage health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THREE MUST-GET-THERE'S (Affil. Prod. & Distrib.). Star, Max Linder. A lot of delicious nonsense that pleased my patrons immensely and did fine business. Now there is just this to the presentation of this comedy; its got to be well played by your orchestra and a good live projection tempo kept up so that the laughs will be practically continuous; and select your program with care. The city houses of course can do this, but the small town house with a limited rental expense in view must be careful. I kept anything else of a comedy nature out of the program. Ran a playlet, "Man and Beast," the hunting-wild-animals picture, and a Pathe Review, and it gave the program fine balance and patrons said it was one of the best shows I ever exhibited. Advertised with mailing list, programs, etc., to health seekers and tourists, and had excellent attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TWO-FISTED JEFFERSON (Arrow). (4,565 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. The first Hoxie picture that had snap to it. Full of action. Took well here. Advertised with one and slide to draw good attendance in town of 1,700, a mining town. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

UNCONQUERED WOMAN (Lee-Bradford). (4,611 feet). Star, Rubye De Remer. If you have a chance to book it, don't pass up the opportunity. Ran this picture one week at my theatre and will say it is one of the best pictures I have seen for a long time. If producers would make a number of pictures like this—I could use them! Pleased everyone. Will make you stop and look. Attendance was splendid. American Theatre, Evansville, Indiana.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH WOMEN? (Equity). (6,000 feet). Featured cast. Very good. I had third run on this picture and patrons were well satisfied. Advertised regular, newspaper. Attendance good. Mixed type. J. F. Carey, Liberty Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

YOUR BEST FRIEND (Warner Bros.). (5,000 feet). Star, Vera Gordon. A very good picture that pleased our patrons: as added attraction a Hawaiian troupe that brought in a good sized audience. Advertising stunts we used were wheel of fortune, Hawaiian house and lobby display. Good attendance from mixed class resulted. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

"Gossip"

Universal Offers Another Gladys Walton Picture on Popular Theme

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Universal has another Gladys Walton success in "Gossip." The picture is similar in general effect to the star's recent vehicles and promises the usual enjoyment for her admirers.

The story should be popular because it generously honors the idea of a naive maiden in sophisticated surroundings, having a beneficial effect on all. This theme seems to have an unweakened appeal, particularly in smaller communities. In "Gossip" there is a variety of events to hold the interest and a few dramatic touches in connection with a strike. There is also a conventional amount of sentiment and suspense.

Gladys Walton wears the old-fashioned Southern dresses becomingly. There are many charming close-ups in which she is splendidly photographed. Ramsey Wallace is well cast as the business man of steel who eventually falls for the quaint charms of his guest, and Freeman Wood is a new and pleasing personality. There are a number of attractive interiors and a few outdoor views that bring the picture to a romantic ending.

Attractive Hawaiian Settings in Paramount Picture With Betty Compson

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Betty Compson and the Hawaiian settings give this Paramount picture an assured appeal. It is laden with a romantic atmosphere, that, particularly in the first half of the picture, is an irresistible attraction. It will furnish pleasing entertainment for the majority of patrons.

In its earlier scenes while the story is pursuing a light, picturesque trend, the picture is at its best. The dramatic element enters later. An old Hawaiian superstition that certain priests are endowed with power to pray anyone to death is the basis for the drama. The action becomes more theatric and it seems as if the original motive has been somewhat perverted for the sake of melodramatic effect. The Hawaiian girl orders that her American rival be prayed to death. She repents however and by swift maneuvers is able to prevent the fatal custom of scattering ashes on the ocean which is to signal the victim's death. This part has an extremely superstitious flavor and will probably seem far-fetched to some. It is not done in an entirely convincing style.

Betty Compson's beauty has not been overlooked. She contributes charmingly to the surf scenes and the various festivals one of which includes a dashing dance number for her. Her performance shows an abundance of the vitality and grace that have made her popular.

The scenes have been made more alluring by the lighting. This accounts for an effective opening and close which consist of views of a seething volcano. Other picturesque shots, too, are scattered through the picture. The cast with the exception of the star offers nothing remarkable, but shows good directing.

"Adam's Rib"

Effective Cave Man Scenes Introduced in Typical DeMille Production of Modern Social Drama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A typical Cecil DeMille production is "Adam's Rib," his newest Paramount production. Lavishly mounted, excellently cast, finely directed, superbly lighted, finely photographed, telling an interesting story, and introducing striking and novel situations it contains all the attributes usually associated with this director's work.

The usual DeMille cut back in this picture, and one on which much of the audience appeal will depend, is the introduction of a series depicting a similar domestic entanglement back in the days of the cavemen. The scenic effects and settings are magnificent and the action impressive. It is effective pantomime told with but few subtitles. The make-up of the players is unusually good.

In this production, Cecil DeMille has taken a theme which is not essentially new, the sacrifice of one woman to save another from ruin. In this instance, it is a daughter who, to save her mother, pits her youth and beauty against her mother's beauty and experience. There is a particularly striking and effective scene where the daughter disillusionized taunts her parents with ruining her life and ends by slapping her father. This brings about a reversal of feeling and a reconciliation all around.

An unusual feature of this production is the fact that much of the romance takes place between the girl and a professor in a section of a natural history museum which is filled with the skeletons of giant prehistoric animals.

Though lacking in the compelling dramatic force of "Manslaughter" with psychology that does not at all times seem to ring true and with the big climax built on an oft-used situation, the magnificent manner in which Mr. DeMille has handled the story has made of the picture an entertainment far above the average from every standpoint and one which should particularly appeal to DeMille fans. Despite its unusual length, the picture holds the interest intensely until near the end when it appears that less footage could have been used.

Milton Sills is excellently cast as the rich man with Theodore Kosloff giving a fine portrayal of the king. Pauline Garon is magnetic and appealing and unusually attractive as the daughter. Anna Q. Nilsson also gives a fine performance as the foolish wife though she appears rather youthful for a woman with a seventeen year old daughter. The remainder of the cast are effective in subordinate roles.

Story by Jeanie Macpherson

Length, 9,526 feet.

Story

Business so engrosses Michael Ramsay that he is inclined to neglect his romantic wife. The deposed King of Morania appears on the scene and makes love to Mrs. Ramsay. Ramsay seeks to preserve his domestic happiness by plotting to restore the king to his throne and succeeds. In the meantime, their seventeen year old daughter, Mathilda, in trying to save the family honor seeks to win the king away from her mother. Her suitor, Professor Reads misunderstands and she tries to draw a parallel of a similar situation in the days of the cave men. Her plan finally brings her into a compromising situation with the king whereby she saves her mother but ruins her own reputation. Her suitor marries her but does not trust her. He leaves for the tropics and soon afterward when matters are adjusted between her father and mother, she follows her husband with a confession from her mother. Her husband, however, decides to believe her and destroys the confession unread.

F. B. O. Release Presents Ethel Clayton in Drama With Appeal For Many

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Invested with an after-war sentiment and a fair amount of suspense, this F. B. O. release should be favorably received by a large class of patrons. Particularly will it be apt to appeal to those who have suffered any loss through the war. The scenes of actual fighting are few and insignificant, but the effects of the war largely supplies the heart interest and the atmosphere.

Ethel Clayton gives one of her typically capable and reserved performances. This particular role might require a little more drama than she gives it, as there is considerable mental action and intrigue. A girl who has been widowed by the war is desperate for shelter for her child and herself, so she pretends to be the wife of another war hero whose father takes them into his home.

The story is therefore based on an original idea. Most of the action is entertaining, and the human interest is handled with sincerity. Some of the situations do not seem psychologically correct. Natural emotional reactions have been overlooked in view of prolonging the suspense. For instance the father's meeting with the son for whom he has mourned as a lost hero of the battlefield—this scene shows him so overpowered by the girl's deception, that he refuses to recognize his son. Such an attitude might be possible but will not be plausible to the majority. This fault seems indicative of a slightly amateurish quality in the production, which does not however, lessen the sentimental appeal. The cast is well chosen and the settings are attractively rural.

F. B. O. Attraction Featuring Milford W. Howard Has Religious Trend

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Those who like their screen entertainment idealized by a deeply religious motive will probably regard this F. B. O. picture as a superior attraction. It is the type of production which will be most apt to please those who appreciate a reformatory message in addition to amusement.

It is not the propaganda of a particular cult. But it presents in fairly dramatic style a story of a regenerated life, its effects upon others and the ultimate triumph of good over evil spirits. Mysticism has been resorted to in several instances. There is a spiritualistic seance, a persistent strain of mental telepathy and a definite instance in which the occult powers of evil are demonstrated.

A picture like this is naturally subject to a more than usual variety of opinion. It may stand in exceptional favor with those who have delved into these subjects. But to others it will be apt to seem extremely far-fetched. It is not sufficiently startling to occasion great comment. It is a modest production of a simple story, acted by a cast of average ability. Milford W. Howard gives an austere performance as the Bishop and Derelys Perdue will be especially remembered for being pretty and showing considerable promise.

Story

Sullivan, an escaped convict changes clothes with Roger Chapman who is afterwards killed. Sullivan takes up his work as pastor in the Ozark Hills. His foster daughter Margery is sought by two young doctors, one who really loves her and the other who holds an evil fascination over her. Her choice and final escape as well as the revelation of Sullivan's real identity are shown in the climax.

"Babies Welcome"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is a picture that illustrates the fact that material not especially new or original can, if cleverly handled, be made into excellent entertainment. An engaged girl loses the money her fiance has given her for the ring and in desperation she "kidnaps" the janitor's baby, wins a prize in a baby show with it, and finally after a series of adventures, recovers her own money, gives the prize money to the delighted parents, and adjusts everything satisfactorily. It is a bright and snappy comedy, clean, with an abundance of good rapid-fire comedy that should please anyone. Dorothy Devore is just as pleasing and peppy as the picture and shows besides being attractive that she is good, both with comedy and with stunts.—C. S. S.

"Oh Sister"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Rapidity of action is the outstanding feature of this comedy, which from the standpoint of amusement, ranks well up in the series of single reel comedies which Educational has released. There are several clever comedy situations, a number of laughs, quite a few of which are caused by a trained rooster. The plot, which is a mere thread, revolves around a gang in a boarding house, and a situation in which the "villain" seeks to make way with the homely sister's money. The hero, Jimmie Adams, chases and captures him, wins the beautiful sister and also gets the money as a wedding present.—C. S. S.

"Shoot Straight"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

This single-reel Pathe comedy featuring Paul Parrott is a satire on amateur hunters, who hunt by the book. Considerable ingenuity has been shown in working out the situations and Paul certainly meets with unusual mishaps many of which will produce laughs. It is one of the best of the recent Paul Parrott series. As usual, he is assisted by Jobyna Ralston and the Hal Roach staff of fun-makers.—C. S. S.

"A Howling Success"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Not only is this one of the cleverest of the series of Century comedies distributed by Universal starring the wonderful dog "Brownie" but in this one, Brownie more than ever carries the story and is the dominating character depending less on his human associates. There are several humorous situations and this comedy should please nearly everyone. Brownie's work is excellent and the manner in which he trails the professor who has a formula to kill dogs, how he evades the porter, and locates and outwits the professor, is exceedingly well done. This is the best of the entire series.—C. S. S.

"High Fliers"

(C. B. C.—Comedy—Two Reels)

The Hall Room Boys confine most of their activities to gymnastics on the edge of a high building in this number. Rescuing an infant is their purpose. But the anti-climax comes when they discover that the supposed baby is only a china doll which had been substituted for the child, before the balloon carried it to the top of the building. It is all amusing and at times thrilling. The dizzy effects are not all new, but they make for good entertainment generally.—M. K.

"Screen Snapshots"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

In this screen magazine of popular screen players, Baby Peggy occupies a place of honor, where she is seen being "mobbed" by her admirers including Gaston Glass, William Desmond and Harold Lloyd. Another interesting section shows the three sisters, Edna Flugrath, Shirley Mason and Viola Dana. Other screen notables pictured are Marion Davies, Milton Sills with his daughter, Betty Compson, and Messrs. Lasky, Zukor and Loew.—C. S. S.

"The Traveling Salesman"

(Pathe—Cartoon—2-3 Reel)

Up to the usual standard of cleverness and audience interest is the issue of Paul Terry's Aesop Fables depicting how a wide-awake traveling salesman creates his own market for a wonderful remedy he is handling. Farmer Al Falfa is his victim and of course the farmer meets with all sorts of adventures. This reel contains a number of laughs and should thoroughly satisfy Aesop's Fable fans.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 10"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

An interesting section of this screen magazine shows the water hyacinth of Florida which clogs the streams and menaces navigation. The fact is brought out that this "weed" is valuable as a source of pulp, ether, oil, tannin, fertilizer and cattle feed. Strikingly beautiful photographic shots of harbors and waterfronts is included in the section "Sea Anchorage." Another section shows beautiful and unique vanity boxes of 150 years ago. This is one of the best of the recent Pathe Reviews.—C. S. S.

"Sweet and Pretty"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is another Century Comedy starring Brownie, and in which he pulls quite a number of clever stunts, a new one, and one of the cleverest things he has done is when he takes a rope and unaided ties it to the rear of an auto. The story of this comedy involves a superstitious suitor who is outwitted by his rival with the assistance of Brownie who is up to all sorts of tricks. It is an entertaining number and will please the majority.—C. S. S.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

GLADYS WALTON

Whose first big success was "Pink Tights," again reverts to elongated stockings in "The Town Scandal," her latest Universal release.

"Alice Adams" Is Heavily Booked

Associated Exhibitors announces that already there has been an exceptionally heavy booking demand for its seven part feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," though the picture is not to be released until April 8. The National Committee for Better Films accorded this attraction a star rating, its designation for "particularly good," in the latest number of its Photoplay Guide, while the National Board of Review recommends it highly in its selected list in "Exceptional Photoplays."

"Alice Adams," it will be recalled, won for its author, Booth Tarkington, the Pulitzer Prize for the best American novel published in 1922. The book has had a big sale.

Miss Vidor is supported by a strong cast, with Claude Gillingwater, Margaret McWade, Harold Goodwin, Vernon Steel, and Thomas Ricketts.

Gives Cast for Big Belasco Picture

Edwin Carewe, who is making his second independent production for First National release, has just announced his completed cast for "The Girl of the Golden West" which he is adapting from the famous play by David Belasco. The cast consists of J. Warren Kerrigan, Sylvia Breamer, Russell Simpson, Rosemary Theby, Wilfred Lucas, Cecil Holland, Hector Sarno, Nelson McDowell, Joseph Hazelton and Minnie Prevost, an Indian.

Fox Film Company's Releases for March

Productions starring Tom Mix, William Russell and Al St. John, two Sunshine Comedies and a number of Educational short subjects conclude the March release schedule for Fox Film Corporation just announced.

"3 Jumps Ahead," the Tom Mix vehicle, a Western, has, it is said, an unusually brilliant supporting cast, which includes such actors as Alma Bennett, Edward Piel, Joe Girard, Virginia True Boardman, Margaret Joslin, Frank Forde and Harry Tood. The story, written by the Director, Jack Ford, deals with the outwitting of a gang of rustlers by a young and adventurous ranchman.

The William Russell picture entitled "Good-By, Girls," which will be released March 11, shows Carmel Myers in the role of the feminine lead. The story by George Foxall has been adapted to the screen by Joseph Franklin Poland and directed by Jerome Storm. It reveals the many absorbing incidents in the life of a bachelor who finds a wife the best cure for his ills.

Sunshine Comedies on the March program are: "Clothes and Oil," to be ready for distribution March 4, and "The Foreflusher," March 18. This pair of two reel fun provokers is up to the standards set by the Fox Sunshine Comedies, it is stated.

Had Big Success with "Nanook" Film

Ever since the release of "Nanook of the North" the widespread popular vogue of that screen epic of the frozen region and its courageous natives, says Pathe, has been taken for granted. The splendid entertainment qualities of the picture were justifiably relied on to sustain its vitality with the picture-loving public over an exceptionally long period of time. This, in fact, was the view taken by Curator Sherwood in placing the Flaherty film among the permanent records of the New York Museum of Natural History, for periodical showings to the teachers and pupils of New York public schools.

Although "Nanook of the North" was released early last summer, Pathe reports that many of the big theatres of the country are still playing it on original and repeat bookings. It is a picture which moves exhibitors to make voluntary testimony to its many excellences. The following, by way of example, is quoted from Manager George Fisher of the New Milwaukee Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.:

"No doubt you will be interested to know what success we have had with your production, 'Nanook of the North,' I was one of the few who had the privilege of previewing this picture when it came into your Chicago office last Spring. Therefore, all I did was just sign the dotted line. In other words, we got together, I believe, in less than two minutes.

"To say that we were very well satisfied with the business done is putting it mildly. I might say 'We knocked 'em dead.' The production will satisfy any audience, and no exhibitor, whether large or small, can afford to pass this up. I want you to use this letter for what it is worth."

Five First National Producers Busy At United Studios

Since Joseph M. Schenck took over the controlling interest in the United Studios in Los Angeles all of the independent producers who are making pictures for Associated First National are making their headquarters there.

At the present time five directors are at work on First National releases and at least three more will be "shooting" in a short time. Edwin Carewe is making "The Girl of the Golden West," Frank Borzage is making "Sands of Time," based on a magazine story called "Terwilliger"; Maurice Tourneur is finishing "The Isle of Lost Ships"; James Young has begun "Wandering Daughters."

Richard Walton Tully is preparing to begin the making of "Trilby," and Norma Talmadge will soon start "Ashes of Vengeance," while Constance Talmadge has decided in getting ready for "Dulcy."

ANDREE LAFAYETTE

The nineteen-year-old French girl who has been brought here by Richard Walton Tully to play the title role in "Trilby," to be made for First National release.

Doris Pawn Plays in Fox Film

In "The Buster," a new William Patterson White story, which is being made by Fox Film Corporation, with Dustin Farnum in the star role, a New York society girl, acted by Doris Dawn, goes to live on a ranch in order that she may learn how they do things in the great West. Charlotte Rowland is the name of the young woman.

Miss Charlotte is as untrammeled by anvient convention as she is by the riding boots and breeches of her up-to-date riding suit. The expression, "unprotected female," belongs to a foreign language as far as she is concerned. The method that Bill Corryell, the foreman of the ranch, employs to tame his willful guests works a wonderful transformation in her character.

Tut - Ankh - Amen to Be in Paramount Film

Good old Tut-Ankh-Amen, dead these thousands of years, will live again in motion pictures, thanks to Cecil B. DeMille who will use the ancient Egyptian king as a character in his forthcoming Paramount picture, "The Ten Commandments."

Mrs. Florence Meehan, expert antiquarian on the DeMille staff, is now on the Mediterranean on her way to the tomb at Luxor, where she will assemble data for the reproduction of the various royal relics which ornament the resting place of the only Pharaoh who ever made the front pages regularly.

"Adam's Rib" Breaks Records

Paramount officials' expectations that Cecil B. DeMille's latest production, "Adam's Rib," would prove to be his greatest box-office success were strengthened yesterday on receipt of wires from Los Angeles that "Adam's Rib," playing its first week at the Rialto Theatre, broke the records set by "Manslaughter" at the same theatre last fall.

Although the Rialto Theatre has only 700 seats, the gross receipts on the first week of "Adam's Rib's" engagement were $1,100 more than the first week's takings by "Manslaughter."

"Adam's Rib's" second week likewise broke the record established by the second week of "Manslaughter" and the crowds besieging the Rialto made it necessary to hold a Saturday morning matinee.

"Hottentot" Praised by New York Critics

New York newspaper critics added their praise of Thomas Ince's big racing picture, "The Hottentot," to that already heard from Chicago, Baltimore and other big first run cities.

This picture has brought extraordinary fine applause wherever it has been shown and exhibitors are proving by their box offices that the public is agreeing with the critics.

Guy Wonders of the Rivoli in Baltimore ran the picture for two weeks and declared he was sorry to see it go, because, for one reason, he liked to watch the audiences get excited. Another exhibitor in a telegram to Tom Ince stated that he had to have his carpenters remain after each show to repair the seats because the audiences insisted on standing on the seats during the big horse race and cheering.

The New York Times gave "The Hottentot" probably the most unstinted praise it has ever given to any film, admitting that it was "darned good fun." The Times critic wrote in part after seeing the picture at the Strand in New York.

"For they have made a merry screen farce of 'The Hottentot.' In some respects it outdoes the stage production. * * * Del Andrew and James W. Horne who directed the picture, have done a good job. They have maintained a sitmulating, break-neck tempo; they have staged a number of exceedingly clever scenes, and they have kept the continuity of the piece."

The Morning Telegraph critic writes: "Nothing funnier, more exciting has been shown in some time. This film can be heartily recommended. Two kinds of people will enjoy, 'The Hottentot.' Those who like horse racing and those who do not."

Here is what Quinn Martin of the N. Y. World thinks of "The Hottentot":

"Finest race horse picturing which we have ever seen. Horses go ploughing over the very top of the camera, their hoofs almost seeming to crash into the lens as they fly past. The work of Douglas MacLean is especially fine. It is a photoplay which most every one will like. It is as full of laughs as a Chaplin or a Lloyd. Deserves to be called a good picture."

"The best race we ever saw on the screen. Douglas MacLean is an extremely clever comedian."—N. Y. Tribune.

Genuinely humorous and kept the spectators in laughter throughout. Douglas MacLean has proved himself one of the best light comedians in the movies. A ripping comedy."—N. Y. Eve. Mail.

History Reel Charms Audiences at Strand

New York's Strand Theatre patrons found entertainment, as well as educational value last week in Pathe's animated history reel illustrating the first settlement of English-speaking people in the Western hemisphere—the Jamestown Colony of Virginia founded in 1607. The picture, which is in one reel, is entitled "The Land of Our Forefathers."

One of its most striking and acceptable features is the use of animated maps showing the approach of the first shipload of English adventurers to Chesapeake Bay and their determination of the present site of Jamestown as their destination. The picture presents the first map of Virginia, made by Captain John Smith. Other historic items pictured are:

Ruins of Old Church at Jamestown, built over three hundred years ago. View of the spot where stood the first 'Capitol' in America, where Patrick Henry spoke the immortal words, "Give me Liberty or Give me Death." Old Bruton Church where worshipped Harrison, Marshall, Monroe, Randolph, Tyler, and George Washington.

Four of Universal's for March Release

Universal announces what is said to be an unusually promising schedule of feature releases for the month of March. In addition to the country-wide release of "Driven," the Charles Brabin Universal Jewel now packing the Criterion Theatre, New York City, four five reel features will be placed at the disposal of the exhibitors of the country, one each week, beginning March 5.

These four features include three pictures made by popular Universal stars, and one all-star production. The former were made with Frank Mayo, Gladys Walton and Hoot Gibson, respectively, and the latter with Grace Darmond, Mahlon Hamilton, Clyde Fillmore and Matilde Brundage. The series of four pictures was made by four of Universal's leading directors, William Worthington, King Baggot, George Archainbaud and Edward Sedgwick.

The first to be released is "The Bolted Door," starring Frank Mayo. This picture is a screen adaptation of a popular story by the noted author, George Gibbs. The story was put into scenario form by George Randolph Chester. It concerns the business and domestic struggles of a man who marries through necessity and whose wife exists behind bolted doors. Phyllis Haver, formerly of Mack Sennett fame, plays opposite Mayo.

The second March release, scheduled for March 12, is "Gossip," said to be a whimsical yet intensely dramatic story which has been screened from Edith P. Delano's novelette "When Caryo Came to Town." Gladys Walton is the star, playing the role of Miss Carey Weathersbee, a charming, ante-bellum type of Southern girl who is thrust by fate into the modern environment of a successful business man's home. How she changes the course of the business and the dramatic events which attend this change, are said to form an intensely interesting screen narrative.

King Baggot, maker of a long series of popular Gladys Walton pictures, also directed this one.

The third Universal release for March will be "The Midnight Guest," a special cast picture made by George Archainbaud. It is from an original story by Rupert Julian, one of Universal's leading directors, and who now is just completing "Merry Go Round." Grace Darmond is the featured player in "The Midnight Guest."

The last March release on the Universal Attraction schedule is "Single Handed," said to be a new type of Hoot Gibson. It is a comedy and will take its place along side of the five reel comedy features of any comedian in the industry, Universal executives assert.

A strong cast supports Hoot in this feature. Elinor Fields has the leading feminine role. She is best known for her recent work opposite Reginald Denny in "The New Leather Pushers" series. Edward Sedgwick, who has made most of the recent Hoot Gibson successes, directed this production. He also was the author of the story, which was written especially for Hoot.

S-L Film Arrives for Metro Distribution

Prints of "Your Friend and Mine," the special produced by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin to follow "Quincy Adams Sawyer" have been received by Metro Pictures Corporation from the coast and the release date has been set for March 5. Metro officials are enthusiastic over the possibilities of "Your Friend and Mine," which it is said, possesses several unusual angles and presents a cast of well known names.

The story, by Willard Mack, and adapted by Winifred Dunn, brings in in its entirety the vaudeville sketch performed by Mack on the big circuits and the picture really offers a story within a story. The cast is headed by Mack, Enid Bennett, Rosemary Theby, Allene Ray, and includes J. Herbert Frank and Otto Lederer. It was directed by Clarence Badger, responsible for "Quincy Adams Sawyer," under the supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer, and contains some of the most elaborate scenes ever attempted, it is reported.

"Your Friend and Mine" is totally different from the average type of screen story, says Associated Pictures.

Nagel Plays Lead in "Lawful Larceny"

Announcement has been made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that Conrad Nagel, who arrived in New York recently from Los Angeles, would play one of the leading roles in "Lawful Larceny," the picture of Samuel Shipman's play which Allan Dwan is to produce for Paramount with Hope Hampton in the feminine leading role.

Mr. Lasky also announced that Lew Cody is on his way from California to take a leading part in the picture.

Young Making Film For First National

Director James Young who is making his initial independent production for First National release has gathered together the following for the cast in "Wandering Daughters," which is based on the magazine story by Dana Burnett.

Marguerite de la Motte will play the feminine lead; William V. Mong, Noah Beery, Pat O'Malley, Allen Forrest, Mabel Van Buren, Alice Howell. The picture is being made at the United Studios in Hollywood.

Fleet of Airplanes in Use in Film

Out in Hollywood, where production work on "Going Up," Douglas MacLean's first feature for Associated Exhibitors, has been in progress several weeks, a large tract of land adjacent to the star's studio has taken on the appearance of an aviation field in war times. The flying scenes in the picturized version of the well known musical comedy, and the mechanical equipment necessary for their "shooting" have compelled the purchase of a whole fleet of aeroplanes.

Most prized of the fliers is a high-powered Italian Ballila, which Captain "Eddie" Rickenbacker, celebrated ace, used in many of his most daring exploits during the World War.

Pyramid Is Filming Well Known Novel

At the studios of the Pyramid Pictures, Inc., in Astoria, L. I., under the direction of George Terwilliger, and with a cast of noted screen luminaries including Mary Thurman, Edmund Lowe, Florence Dixon, William H. Tooker, Arthur Hausman, Edna Hay Spooner and others, Adeline Leitzbach's dramatization of Bertha M. Clay's novel "Wife in Name Only" is being made into a photoplay which the producers expect will be one of the outstanding cinema successes of 1923.

Also Miss Leitzbach's newest play, "Old Man Smith" is now in rehearsal at the Frazee Theatre, and will shortly be presented on Broadway featuring Tom Wise.

Film Decided on

It has been definitely decided by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of S-L Pictures, that their special production for Fall release will be "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." Due to the time which will be given the making of this picture and the desire of Arthur H. Sawyer to gather a superlative cast for the various principal roles, the production will not be started in March, as originally scheduled.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew" will present among other stellar players, Willard Mack. Lon Chaney and Barbara La Marr.

Schulberg Announces Coming Productions

The next series of pictures scheduled for production by Preferred Pictures for distribution through the Al Lichtman Corporation has been announced by B. P. Schulberg. As soon as Gasnier completes "Mothers-in-Law," which is now under way at the Schulberg Studios, he will direct "The Parasite," from the novel by Helen Martin.

Upon completion of "April Showers," Tom Forman will begin on "The Broken Wing," the stage success by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard. He will take his company to Mexico where the picture will be made in the exact locale described in the original play.

Mr. Schulberg feels confident that "The Broken Wing" offers material for an exceptionally spectacular as well as novel picture. It is expected that the leading masculine role will be given to Kenneth Harlan.

"The Cheat" Being Made by Paramount

Production work on "The Cheat," Pola Negri's second American-made picture, is now well under way at Paramount's West Coast studio.

This lavish rendition of what is one of the most famous original screen stories ever written was started recently by Director George Fitzmaurice with a cast of players that reads like a page from screendom's "Who's Who."

Playing opposite the famous Polish star in this Paramount picture is Jack Holt whose recent starring successes have earned him fame as one of the most versatile of the masculine stars.

In the role of the yellow man of the story—in this version an East Indian instead of the Japanese of the early productions—the public will see Charles de Roche who, like Pola Negri, is appearing in his second American picture.

"The Cheat" was written for the screen originally nearly a decade ago by Hector Turnbull. It was produced at that time by Cecil B. DeMille with Fannie Ward in the role which Miss Negri plays in the present-day production.

It not only won tremendous box office approval at that time but it was promptly seized upon by artists in other lines of artistic endeavor and adapted to their needs. Camille Erlanger, the French composer, made an opera of the story. William A. Brady chose Willard Mack to adapt the story for the stage and Andre De Lourde transformed the story into a popular novel. Ouida Bergere wrote the scenario of the Fitzmaurice version.

Lubin Pays Visit to New York

Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures, paid a flying visit to New York recently in connection with the latest release of Associated Pictures Corporation, "Your Friend and Mine." This production follows "Quincy Adams Sawyer" on the Metro releasing schedule and Mr. Lubin will confer with William Atkinson, general manager of Metro, regarding advertising plans for this film.

W. H. Crane to Play in "Three Wise Fools"

The veteran stage actor, William H. Crane, has been engaged by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to act the role of the Judge in the picturization of "Three Wise Fools," by Austin Strong, author of that other big stage success, "Seventh Heaven."

King Vidor is directing this production with a cast which embraces, aside from Mr. Crane, Claude Gillingwater in his original role in the stage production, that of Theodore Finley; Alec Francis as Dr. Gaunt, Brinsley Shaw as Benny, the Duck, Eleanor Boardman in the leading feminine role, and SaZu Pitts.

Fred J. Butler, father of David Butler, has just been engaged for the detective in "Three Wise Fools." Seventeen army scout planes will be used in the jail break scenes.

Famous Sculptor Gets Goldwyn Contract

Martin J. Doner, famous model maker of the movies, has been placed under contract by the Goldwyn Studios. He will head the sculpture department under the direction of Cedric Gibbons, art director. Mr. Doner will go to work immediately on models for the massive settings contemplated for "Ben-Hur."

The sculptor is also designing four large Egyptian sphinxes and a plaque in bas-relief to be used in Marshall Neilan's prologue to his latest story, "The Eternal Three."

Negotiations Closed

Negotiations were closed recently between the Thomas H. Ince Corporation and the Caribbean Film, whereby the latter will distribute five Ince pictures in Cuba and Porto Rico. The pictures are "Homespun Folks," Hail the Woman," "The Cup of Life," "Mother O' Mine" and "Lying Lips."

Bergere To Do Continuity

Ouida Bergere, one of the best known scenario writers in motion pictures, has been engaged by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to write the continuity for the Elinor Glyn story, "Six Days," which is soon to go into production.

Bigger Business Second Week

"The Christian," Goldwyn's Maurice Tourneur production of Sir Hall Caine's novel, established a Capitol Theatre, New York, record for itself last week. During its second week it showed to bigger receipts than during the first week.

Only four or five pictures have been held over at the world's largest theatre. "The Christian" run is considered among the Capitol's biggest successes in two-week engagements.

Lasky Studio Production Again Approaches Capacity Activity

After a period between productions when activities were somewhat less pronounced than usual the Lasky studio in Hollywood is now the scene of exceptional activity with several new and big pictures started in addition to those already under way.

"The Cheat," a George Fitzmaurice production starring Pola Negri is certain to be productive of great interest, it is stated. For years this story by Hector Turnbull has been hailed by public and critics as an ideal screen drama. Originally produced with great excellence by Cecil B. DeMille it has been adapted by Ouida Berger and will be reproduced with a wealth of color and intensity of situation. Paramount promises. Jack Holt will have the featured role of the husband while Charles de Roche is to play the heavy part.

Sam Wood's production "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," has been started, with Gloria Swanson in the stellar role. Charlton Andrews adapted for the American stage Alfred Savoir's play and it met with great success in New York. Sada Cowan has adapted this play to the screen. Seven of the loveliest girls in the screen world have been chosen to play the wives of the modern Bluebeard, while Miss Swanson is the eighth bride. The cast includes some big names.

James Cruze is at work on his production, "Hollywood," by Thomas J. Geraghty, adapted from Frank Condon's story, and with a galaxy of stars scheduled to appear. Walter Woods is production editor.

Betty Compson is in the midst of "The Rustle of Silk," in which she and Conway Tearle are featured. This is Herbert Brennon's first Paramount production and is an adaptation by Sada Cowan and Ouida Bergere, from the Cosmo Hamilton novel.

High grade comedy with romance intermingled, it is said, will be found in "Sixty Cents an Hour," which is Walter Hiers' second Paramount stellar vehicle. Joseph Henabery is directing this and Jacqueline Logan is featured in support of the star. Grant Carpenter adapted the Frank Condon original. Ralph Block is production editor.

George Melford is to complete "You Can't Fool Your Wife" with Leatrice Joy. Nita Naldi and Lewis Stone, at the West Coast studio. This is Hector Turnbull's story, adapted by Waldemar Young and was started in the New York studio.

The magnitude of all these pictures will tax the capacity of the big Vine Street plant in spite of its extent and all concerned are actively engaged in preparation for these and other pictures to come.

Thousands See First National Stars and Directors Working on Future Releases

More than sixty thousand persons, mostly visitors to Southern California, are interested in the current productions of Associated First National for that many were entertained one day during First National week at the United Studios where all the independent producers are at [illegible] Associated First National releases.

John McCormick, western representative of Associated First National conceived the idea of giving the public a view of picture making and Joseph M. Schenck, who recently bought controlling interest in the United Studios and Mike Leve, set the date.

The huge crowd that gathered had a glimpse of Norma and Constance Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald, Coleen Moore, Jackie Coogan, Dorothy Phillips, Noah Beery, Jack Mulhall, Barbara Tennant, William V. Mong, Marguerite de la Motte, Virginia Brown Faire, Harold Goodwin, Walt Whitman and many other players. They also had an opportunity of watching Frank Borzage making tests of players for his initial First National production, "Sands of Time," adapted from the story of "Terwilliger;" Allen Holubar who was finishing "Slander the Woman," with Dorothy Dalton.

Noah Berry, screen villian, staged a fight with Barbara Tennant on a special stage for this vast crowd which watched Jack Mulhall come to Barbar's assistance.

They saw also the big sets that remained from Oliver Twist and heard Jackie explaining some of them. They walked through the beautiful garden sets of "Within the Law," and saw the streets of "China" used in Constance Talmadge's "East is West."

James Young gave a talk on picture making.

Mr. Schenck, Maurice Tourneur, Sol Lesser, Sam E. Rork and M. C. Levee helped make the visit enjoyable.

Little Dinky Dean who is the "Kid" in Charlie Chaplin's latest First National release "The Pilgrim" was invited to help too but he wrote to John McCormick that he was sorry he could not attend because he had the whooping cough.

Maurice Tourneur's sets for the "Isle of Lost Ships," which is to be released soon was an especial point of interest to the visitors.

Dorothy Dalton brought 20,000 autographed photographs and in half and hour they were "grabbed" by the visitors.

Hundreds of feet of film was "shot" of the visitors and it is said this will be distributed to the theatres throughout the country.

Shirley Mason, star of Fox Film Corporation, has a new picture in the making titled "Inside the Door."

Preferred Pictures Taken in Series

Theatres which have played the first Preferred Pictures released by Al Lichtman are in many cases contracting for his output in series, it is stated. The Broad-Strand in Detroit after putting over successful runs with "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows," has signed for the next six Preferred Pictures from "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" through "April Showers." A similar booking has been closed by Wilmer and Vincent for three of their houses—the Victoria in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, the Hippodrome in Reading, and the Rialto in Allentown. The Schade Theatre in Sandusky, Ohio, has also taken the next six as well as the Pack in Asheville, N. C.

The Empire, one of Milwaukee's large first-run houses, will exhibit five Preferred Pictures including "The Hero," "Poor Men's Wives," "Are You a Failure?" "The Girl Who Came Back" and "April Showers."

Detroit Papers Laud "Suzanna"

"Mabel Normand never has been so successful, so captivating nor so merry as in Mack Sennett's newest comedy drama 'Suzanna'" said the reviewer for the Detroit Free Press when this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release was shown recently at the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit. "The story is alive with action."

Said the critic for the Detroit News: "'Suzanna' distinctly belongs on the credit side of the ledger."

"The combination of Mabel Normand and 'Suzanna' supplies an attraction that has had few equals and no superiors at the Broadway-Strand," said the review in the Detroit Evening Times.

Fox Film Title Changed

William Russell's latest Fox release, which was first called "McPhee's Sensational Rest," then changed to "Wanted—a Wife," will be given to the public under the title "Good-By, Girls." It is a melodramatic comedy and was written by George Foxall. Jerome Storm directed it. Carmel Myers is Mr. Russell's leading support.

Nita Naldi to Be in "Lawful Larceny"

Nita Naldi is going to be a modern Cleopatra in "Lawful Larceny," a Paramount picture which Alan Dwan is preparing for production at the company's eastern studio. She is to be a modern with a pure Egyptian flavor and according to plans, says Paramount, will wear gowns that will cause Tut-ankh-Amen to turn over in his sarcophagus and breathe the name of his fair Queen Ankh-nes-Amen.

Six Months to Make "Famous Mrs. Fair"

The Fred Niblo production "The Famous Mrs. Fair," which has just been released by Metro Pictures Corporation after six months of intensive studio work, has, it is reported, already proved to the industry that the careful attention given to its production has been warranted. Indorsements, fully as enthusiastic as those given to the story in the stage version by James Forbes, have, it is stated, already been received for the photoplay, and Metro officials regard it as one of the best of their season's output.

First National Film Praised by Women

The Congressional Club women of Washington selected the First National picture "Omar the Tentmaker," as the attraction at their annual breakfast held early this month. Mrs. H. Mondell, chairman of the entertainment committee, in a letter to the Washington branch of First National Declared:

"It is a most entertaining and artistic picture and your generous cooperation made possible the most successful annual breakfast we have had in many years."

Film Guide Praises Fairbanks Picture

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," a United Artists release, has won high commendation from the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau of Miss Anne Morgan's American Committee for Devastated France. This bureau, of which Mrs. Gordon Knox Bell is chairman, publishes the "Film Guide," which has a wide circulation among circles not reached by motion picture journals.

"'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' is unquestionably among the very few pictures of the first rank," says the Film Guide. "It combines perfection of setting and costumes with uniformly good acting to an unusual degree.

"The sheer beauty of some of the less spectacular scenes is almost lost sight of in the breath-taking magnificence of the picture as a whole. One almost wishes there were less of the 'show' and a little more of Robin. Douglas Fairbanks is always Douglas Fairbanks—but he has skillfully subordinated himself to the picture while still satisfying the most exacting thrill hunter in the audience."

Big Hodkinson Films Get First Run Dates

Owing to the increased popularity of Glenn Hunter it has been announced that his first production for the Film Guild entitled "Second Fiddle," released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been booked over the Loew Circuit, comprising many of the most important theatres in the Eastern States. It it also stated that "Second Fiddle" has been signed for first run at the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio.

"The Kingdom Within," a Victor Schertzinger production with Russell Simpson, Pauline Starke, and Gaston Glass, has also been booked first run at the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio.

It is also reported that an unusual seven day first run contract has been made on "Hearts Haven" at the Waldorf Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

It is felt by the Hodkinson Corporation that the increased number of first run presentations is conclusive proof of the widespread popularity of Hodkinson productions.

Novels Written for Adaptation by Ince

Thomas H. Ince has reversed the usual process of adapting novels for the screen. Two of the three special autumn releases are from novels that are being specially written in collaboration with a screen expert to insure screen material and camera situations ideal to the motion picture standpoint.

Vaughn Kesters "The Just and the Unjust," will be the first adaption made. Kester is the author of many novels and adaptions, among them "The Prodigal Judge," "The Hand of the Mighty" and "The Fortunes of the Landrays." Bradley King of the Ince writing staff is at work on the screen adaptation.

While this story is in production, Talbot Mundy, the British novelist, is completing his new story, "The Devil's Own," to be published this summer. The adaption of the novel will be made by Bradley King, who also is collaborating with the author in working out the story. A second Mundy novel, now in synoptic form, has been puchased by Ince and will also be written in collaboration with Miss King.

Bobbs Morrill Publishing Company, who has put out all the Kester books, announces that a special motion picture edition of "The Just and the Unjust" will be put on the market when the picture is released.

Criterion Crowded to See "Othello"

When Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howells decided to test the drawing power of Shakespeare by presenting "Othello," at the Criterion Theatre, they did not anticipate anything approaching the great demand for seats following the announcement of the public showing of the continental production, says the Export and Import Film Co.

In order to better gauge the interest of the public in the presentation of this Shakespearian drama it was deemed advisable to have an advance ticket sale. A private showing of the film before a distinguished gathering of stage and screen notables brought a few laudatory paragraphs into the daily papers and was the means of attracting immediate interest in the advance sale of seats. By Thursday evening, a day after the box-office had opened on the advance sale, there was not a seat to be had for the opening day, Sunday, February 25.

The advance sale of seats has already reached such proportions that the first week's business at the Criterion is certain to reach a record figure, it is said.

Preferred Pictures Film Based on Song

The first of the series of special productions to be made by Victor L. Schertzinger for Preferred Pictures, according to an announcement made by B. P. Schulberg, is "A Mansion of Aching Hearts." This is based on the famous song by Harry Von Tilzer and Arthur J. Lamb, which sold over a million copies in one year.

An Ideal Flapper

James Young is said to have looked 'em all over and has finally picked Marguarite de la Mott as the ideal flapper to assume one of the leading roles in his first Independent production "Wandering Daughters," which he will make at the United Studios for First National release. Miss de la Mott has had leading roles in several big pictures during the past year.

To Have Early Show

"Does It Pay," the Fox special featuring Hope Hampton, will be given to the public early in March. This screen drama, which handles a familiar and vital phase of modern life, is given an added interest on account of presenting Miss Hampton in the role of a 1923 vamp. The character calls for all the allurement of youth and beauty and a correct taste in the matter of expensive and beautiful gowns. Miss Hampton is said to fill all three conditions with complete success.

James Cruze Making "Hollywood"

The first day's shooting on "Hollywood," a new James Cruze production for Paramount, included scenes at three studios—the Lasky, Christie and Universal.

Lloyd's Seven Reel Comedy Full of Thrills

When Harold Lloyd's latest Pathe comedy, "Safety Last," is released nationally, it will be broadcasted as the first seven-reel comedy ever made.

This statement, Pathe says, is amply warranted by facts based on the testimonials of the big circuit owners who have seen the picture, by the unqualified approval of executives and branch managers, and by checking records.

By the statement that it is the first seven-reel comedy ever made Pathe implies that while satire, wit and story are in it, with a goodly dash of romantic love interest, the comedy situations, the "gags," the business and the exciting thrills are the dominant motifs. It is straight out and out comedy produced for laughing purposes only.

In "Safety Last," Lloyd comes back to his earlier love in making a thrill picture, for in "Safety Last" he climbs the side of a twelve-story building, not through any wish of his own, and at each story a sudden and unexpected adventure befalls him. While it is tragedy to Harold, it is comedy and thrills for the audience.

After seeing "Safety Last," it may be conceded that Harold Lloyd will not make another thrill picture for a long time. He says himself: "I have put every new frill, thrill and chill into it and I don't believe I will be able to think up new spine-tinglers and sensational business not included in 'Safety Last.'"

Goldwyn Working on Half a Dozen Films

Activity continues unabated at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Calif., where work is under way on half a dozen productions.

Marshall Neilan will probably take the company appearing in his own picture, "The Eternal Three" to Mexico City within a few days. He has made rapid progress on this film and photography on it will doubtless be completed in two or three weeks more.

The "Red Lights" company has just returned from Mojave where the desert scenes were filmed.

Jesse D. Hampton continues to add well-known names to his cast for "The Spoilers," a new version of which he is making at the Goldwyn studios for distribution by that firm. The most recent additions to the all-star cast are George Walsh, just signed by Goldwyn on a long-term contract; Robert McKim, Rockliffe Fellowes, and Gordon Russell.

Victor Seastrom, Swedish director, now under a long-term contract to produce photoplays for Goldwyn, has arrived at the studios and will soon start work. Erich von Stroheim is testing six well-known actresses for the role of Trina Gibson in his picturization of Frank Norris' novel "McTeague," to be re-christened "Greed" for the films.

Rupert Hughes expects to burn the big circus tent, for the picturesque climax to his "Souls for Sale," late this week.

Lunt Starts on His Next Distinctive Film

Alfred Lunt, the handsome new star from the legitimate stage, evidently is in earnest about pictures. Having just completed work on "Backbone," which had its first private showing at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, on February 20, he is now dashing off to tropical climes for the filming of "The Ragged Edge," in which he also has the lead. Both of these pictures are for Distinctive Pictures Corporation and will head a list of twelve features for the year.

"Backbone" is Lunt's first appearance on the screen, he having broken into the movies at precisely the same time as Glenn Hunter, with whom he appeared in the broadway success, "Clarence." Lunt likes the work so well that he started on "The Ragged Edge" at the Distinctive Studios with only a few days rest after the completion of "Backbone." Harmon Weight is directing the new picture.

The interiors for "The Ragged Edge," which is based on Harold MacGrath's novel of the same name, have been filmed at the studios in the Bronx, New York, and the exteriors will be shot off Miami, Fla. Howard Estabrook, assistant production manager for Distinctive, has made two trips to that city to make arrangements for locations.

With the departure of "The Ragged Edge" company, J. N. Nault, studio manager for Distinctive, will have the sets ready for the third of the big Distinctive Features.

Cody in New York

Lew Cody has arrived in New York from the Coast to play one of the principal roles in "Lawful Larceny," which Allan Dwan is now preparing for production at the Paramount Long Island studio.

To one of the greatest crowds ever assembled for the opening of a new picture Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships" made it's premiere bow at the Century Theatre, Baltimore, Md., on Monday, February 19.

The Century Theatre has a capacity of 3,800 and an allowance of 300 for standing room giving a total capacity of 4,100. The opening night found the theatre packed to the doors. Crowds were kept waiting and many were turned away. For two days following it is reported that business was just the same.

The exciting capture of the 90-ton sperm whale which is the outstanding feature of this production, is said to have thrilled the audience like a horse race does.

"Vengeance of Deep" Is Now Completed

American Releasing Corporation announces the receipt of its submarine production just completed in Honolulu by A. B. Barringer and relivery of this picture is now being made to its exchanges. "Vengeance of the Deep" is a romantic melodrama with a big submarine episode of a type and character never before attempted on the screen, it is stated. The undersea scenes were taken at great depth in the waters around Honolulu where the producing company has been at work for the past three months.

The cast was assembled last September and these players, with the producer and the technical staff, sailed for Hawaii in the latter part of that month. In the cast are Ralph Lewis, Virginia Brown Faire, Van Mattimore, Harmon McGregor, Maida Vale, and Smoke Turner.

Record Day-and-Date Runs by Fox Films

The popular demand for exhibition of the current list of Fox special productions is exemplified by unprecedented day-and-date engagements which have been played and which are scheduled for the near future in many cities, according to announcements from Fox Film Corporation.

Forty-seven Chicago theatres with a total seating capacity of approximately 37,000 ran 'Silver Wings," with Mary Carr, to record attendances during the week of Washington's Birthday. This special, which was released late in 1922, has been greeted with a waxing enthusiasm in houses throughout the United States and all the foreign exchanges where Fox is represented, it is reported.

The week of April 1 will see "The Town That Forgot God," another special released February 11, in 23 Cleveland theatres. The arrangement consummated by Fox Film Corporation is on a larger scale than has ever been attempted by other film producers in that city, Fox says, and thus established a new high-water mark for simultaneous bookings in the Lake Erie metropolis.

Both productions mentioned above have had successful Broadway, New York, runs, "Silver Wings" having played all summer at the Apollo Theatre and "The Town That Forgot God" having had three months at the Astor.

Big Throngs Flock to Hodkinson Film

Owing to the public demand to see the Elmer Clifton Production "Down to the Sea in Ships" now playing to capacity crowds at the Cameo Theatre, New York it is stated that beginning with Washington's Birthday and continuing for the remainder of the run the doors of the Cameo Theatre will open at 10 A. M., eight shows being given daily.

This radical change in policy of the theatre was made in order to accommodate the crowds attending. According to reports, since the opening performance capacity attendance has been the rule, and every house record at the popular 42nd Street Theatre has gone by the board. Thousands of people have been turned away it is said, and standees have been so frequent as to warrant the prediction that this latest Hodkinson feature might remain at the Cameo indefinitely.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" was sponsored by the citizenry of New Bedford, Mass., the home of the whaling industry on the Atlantic Coast. It was personally directed by Elmer Clifton in the quaint Massachusetts town, and on the high seas, and was made with the co-operation of the Old Dartmouth Historical Society.

"Covered Wagon" Opens at Criterion, March 16

James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," will formally open in New York at the Criterion Theatre Friday, March 16. John C. Flinn, who went to Hollywood some weeks ago to complete his plans for the exploitation of the picture, arrived in New York with the finished print, which will first be given a special showing at the Plaza Hotel, March 11, under the auspices of the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau.

After the final revisions, polishing and expert work on every detail of the epic drama of the early West, filmed from Emerson Hough's novel, and after every possible test had been applied at the Lasky studio, Director Cruze finally pronounced his work complete and ready to be shown to the public. A theatre showing was held in a Southern California town and there, Mr. Flinn said, the picture justified every claim of the hold it would have upon the public. It was received with every mark of enthusiasm to indicate a master production of popular appeal, he said.

Mr. Flinn started several months ago his campaign of exploitation of "The Covered Wagon" through the Paramount publicity department and in various other directions, with the result that the whole country is talking about the picture. In New York a great electric sign with letters twenty feet high, containing simply the name of the picture, has blazed across the night sky of the Great White Way for several weeks, while teaser snipes and twenty-four sheets have arrested the attention of the passer-by on every highway and in every byway.

Before leaving the Coast, Mr. Flinn completed arrangements for the presentation of "The Covered Wagon" in Southern California, which will be under the direction of Sid Grauman. The theatre for the California premiere has not been definitely decided upon, although it may be Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian.

"Othello" Is Given Praiseful Reviews

Seldom, it is said, has a motion picture production been given such uniformly enthusiastic reviews as have been accorded Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howells' presentation of the immortal Shakespearian drama "Othello" which opened at the Criterion Theatre last Sunday and will continue there for a second week.

"'Othello' is a full-blooded motion picture," said the New York Times critic. "It has vitality, it is direct and true, it is a thing of action. It rises by many degrees of excellence above the usual offerings of the screen."

P. W. Gallico of the Daily News credited "Othello" with superlative screen acting. "So well has this interpretation of Shakespeare been filmed, although the lines have been stripped away, the psychological foundation is there, and in the hands of consummate actors the result is true and gripping photodramatic entertainment. We recommend that you do not miss this new film."

"'Othello' magnificent," stated the Evening Globe, The Evening Sun commented, "Emil Jannings is impressive as 'Othello'—a motion picture one should not miss."

"'Othello' excels in film form," according to Louella Parsons of the Morning Telegraph. "A powerful, efficient work. Emil Jannings as the Moor and Krauss as Iago shine in a brilliantly balanced cast."

Harriette Underhill of the N. Y. Tribune summed up her opinion in one sentence, "A wonderful production." Trade paper critics also praised "Othello" highly.

Universal Has Faith in "Merry-Go-Round"

Word has been received in New York from Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, who is at Universal City, Cal., that "Merry-Go-Round," the Universal Jewel production now nearing completion under the direction of Rupert Julian, is the biggest super-production that Universal ever made. The film executive expects it to be the outstanding picture of 1923 and asserts it will make a record in filmdom because of the bigness of its theme and the excellence of its direction and entertainment value.

Julian now is in the last stages of editing the picture. Its 200,000 feet of negative are down to about twenty reels. This will be halved before it is ready for the screen. It is probable that a finished print will be on the way to New York in several weeks. According to present arrangements the picture will be Universal's first big fall release. Its early completion assures ample time for the Universal exploitation department to get behind it in a big way and to make it a nationally known picture before it is ready for release. Universal is projecting a national campaign for this feature.

One High Class Film Monthly from Universal

As the result of experiments made during the last six months at Universal City in the improvement of Universal's five reel features, that company announces that it is in a position to assure exhibitors one high class picture every week for the rest of the 1923 season at "live and let live" prices.

This is a distinct development in the production and release policy of Universal attractions. They heretofore have been released in groups or series of nine or other small numbers. This group method was used during the last six months for the purpose of concentrating on production and building up the show value of the individual pictures in each group, and to aid in balancing the pictures in each group so as to provide for all classes of patrons.

It is of special note that these forthcoming pictures, many of which already are in production, are to be put in the hands of the exhibitor, Universal asserts, at a price that will assure a profit to him. The pictures which make up the Universal Attraction list of releases are not sold at "super" prices, despite the fact they are produced with practically the same care as is given to "super" productions, Universal officials contend.

The reason for this state of affairs is said to hinge on Mr. Laemmle's general picture policy. It is his opinion that what the exhibitor wants most of the time is a high-grade, first class picture, one which will please his patrons and build up his box office business. Also, he must get this picture at a price which will permit him to make a profit.

Universal's five reel features are produced with this policy in mind—a 100% picture at a reasonable price, it is stated. The past six or eight months have proven to Universal executives that high grade pictures can be made so that they can be sold at "live and let live" prices. It is this type of picture which Universal is prepared to assure to exhibitors for the remainder of 1923 season, or until the middle of August and up to the beginning of the 1923-1924 Fall season, the company says.

The forthcoming weekly releases are being made from carefully selected stories of especial strength, and will be made with stars and players of proven popularity, according to reports. A group of Universal's best directors have been assigned to make them.

Releases Film on Sawyer Anniversary

The release of "Your Friend and Mine," by Metro Pictures Corporation on March 5th, the latest special bearing the brand of Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, marks the second year of service on the part of Arthur H. Sawyer in the capacity of supervising director of S-L specials.

Two years ago on the same date as the release of his latest picture, Mr. Sawyer assumed his duties in supervising the series of Gareth Hughes special productions made for Metro distribution.

Speaking of his second anniversary as supervisor of S-L pictures, he said, among other things, "I am particularly pleased that the release of "Your Friend and Mine" should be coincident with my entrance into the producing field in a supervisory capacity, as this picture again carries out the idea I have long cherished regarding the use of all star casts, which I was able to demonstrate in the making of "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Ingram to Film "World's Illusion"

Metro announces the purchase of "The World's Illusion," by Jacob Wasserman, one of the most remarkable creative works of our time. It will be made into a photoplay by Rex Ingram.

Since the publication in 1919 of "The World's Illusion," Wasserman has been recognized as one of the literary giants of the generation.

Not only is "The World's Illusion" wonderful picture material, but it redounds to the credit of the screen that a work of highest literary excellence and universally acclaimed power—in short, a world masterpiece—should have presentation via this medium.

Print of Big Maurice Tourneur Picture Arrives

The first print of Maurice Tourneur's big picture, "The Isle of Lost Ships," based on Marriott's famous story, has arrived in New York from Los Angeles, and those who have seen it declare that Tourneur has reached greater artistic heights in this picture than ever before.

His scenes of the island of lost ships and its inhabitants are said to strike a new and thrilling note in the matter of "location."

For these scenes he has gathered together probably fifty old and new hulks of the sea, from barges and sailing ships to submarines and liners. Practically the entire story is told on this island of lost ships as it floats about on the unchartered sea. His cross section scenes of a submarine under water, caught in kelp and with death waiting all around, is said to make one of the most thrilling and most interesting scenes of this story of the sea.

The cast consists of Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson, Frank Campeau, Walter Long, Hershell Mayall and others. The picture is a First National March release.

Fox Lists Russell Film for March 11

Fox Film Corporation will release "Good-By, Girls," starring William Russell, on March 11. Its plot is one of the most unique seen on the screen.

It is the story of a girl inventor, whose invention is sought by the agents of various foreign countries who resort to desperate measures in an attempt to steal the plans. A prominent author, seeking rest and quiet, is entangled in the intrigues planned against the girl. He is a writer of "popular thrillers," but never had his life or his novels provided the thrills that he underwent while protecting the young girl whom he later married. When he left the city he thought himself beset with many ills. A doctor said —"What you need is a wife." The doctor was right, but the author, at the time, couldn't see it.

Supporting William Russell is a splendid cast. Carmel Myers plays interestingly the part of the girl. The story is by George Foxall and scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland. Jerome Storm directed, and Joe August, who has done much fine photography for the Fox Film Corporation, was in charge of the cameramen.

Big Advertising for Hodkinson Pictures

What Hodkinson says one of the largest exploitation campaigns launched in behalf of short subjects has been made for "The Mystery Box," the first of the Bray Romances produced by J. R. Bray, which played The Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., last week.

According to the report just made by C. D. Hill, St. Louis branch manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who has been responsible for much of the success of the campaign, this production has been given a feature place on the bill at the Missouri. Last Monday the St. Louis Post-Dispatch broadcasted the message through station KSD to the effect that this reel, explaining the mystery of radio, would be shown at the Missouri Theatre.

Realizing the value of short subjects the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is, and has been exerting a great amount of energy in their exploitation, it is said. J. G. Rohlfs, short subject sales manager for the Hodkinson Products, has recently made many successful tie-ups.

Goldwyn Buys Rights to "Master of Man"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased the motion picture rights to Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man."

There was keen competion to obtain the screen rights to this novel, it is reported.

"The Master of Man" has created a big stir in literary circles ever since it began serial publication in a magazine of wide circulation. The published volume has had bigger sales than anything else Sir Hall has written, it is stated.

Goldwyn recently renewed negotiations for the screen rights to Sir Hall's story and the fact that it had just made such an elaborate and fine a production of this author's early big success, "The Christian," is said to have had much to do with the successful result of the renewed negotiations.

Praise for Chaplin in "The Pilgrim"

Its a rare thing when critics agree but the New York critics are of one opinion, says First National, as to the entertainment value of Charlie Chaplin's, "The Pilgrim," which began a two weeks' run at the New York Strand on Feb. 25. One writer, Joseph Mulvaney in the New York American admitted that he tried to view the picture from a critical angle but was compelled to forget that he was a critic and joined with the big crowd in the Strand in uproarious enjoyment of the fun.

Here in brief is what the New York critics wrote: "If Chaplin had never made another comedy, if he had never been heard of before, 'The Pilgrim' would be a hit." The Times.

"You'll feel ashamed of yourself for laughing at the incredibly grotesque adventures of Chaplin in this new picture, and yet you can't help it." The American. "It is incredibly funny. It contains elements of humor as vitally laughable as anything that has ever been written or said." The Herald.

"Is it funny? It is. It is screamingly funny, measured from the standard of things that make us laugh. We howled, we roared, we slapped our sides. It made us forget ourselves and laugh." Daily News. "He was hailed with the rousing reception he deserved." Evening Telegram. "Our advice is go to the Strand right away and have one of the heartiest laughs of your life." The Sun.

"In the opinion of this reviewer he (Chaplin), has attained perfection in his peculiar art and it will be a long time before he begins to abondon the standards he has set for himself." Evening Mail. "As engaging an example of his pantomimic art as anything he has ever done." The Journal.

Film Stories Used for Books and Plays

Pointing to the changing order of things and the gradual ascendancy of the screen in the public mind is the new regard in which screen attractions are being held by publishers and play producers. Formerly the screen rights were always determined by the success of the play or book which always preceded the making of a picture. Recently numerous bits of evidence point to a changing attitude in that the picture precedes its contemporary and that the question of whether the play shall be produced or the book published is determined entirely by the popularity of the screen version.

The last two months have seen the production of the stage play, "Humoresque," following the sensational success of the film two years ago.

Other bits of evidence to show how the wind is blowing are furnished in the increasing number of books published based upon successful original screen stories. Such a one was "Suzanna." Another example is found in Edmund Goulding's "Fury," the picture version of which starred Richard Barthelmess through First National release.

The most remarkable feature about the publication of "Fury," the book, lies in the fact that it was undertaken by Dodd, Meade and Co., one of the country's oldest and most conservative publishing houses and that their advertising referred to its author as "Edmund Goulding, the famous screen writer."

American Releasing to Distribute Bushman-Bayne Picture

The interest which has been aroused in the picture that Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are producing as a combination screen and stage attraction in which they are to appear in person, comes to a head with the announcement that American Releasing has obtained distribution of the attraction. Simultaneously, first announcement is made of the title of the picture now being produced by F. X. B. Pictures, Inc., under the supervision of Whitman Bennett at his studios in Yonkers.

The story selected for the personal appearance of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, acting a twenty-minute episode in the larger theatres, is "Modern Marriage," adapted by Dorothy Farnum from the novel "Lady Varley," by Derek Vane.

The picture is practically completed under the direction of Lawrence Windom and its first presentation as a combination attraction will be made in a large Eastern city the first week in April, after which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are to be booked for a twelve-week tour in as many cities.

"Modern Marriage" will be nationally released the first week in April except in those twelve cities where Bushman and Bayne are being booked to appear in person.

Still More Editors Join in Praise for Short Subjects

From the host of replies received by General Manager Elmer Pearson of Pathe in response to his questionnaire addressed to prominent newspapers throughout the country as to whether the value of short subjects is increasing, several were selected and published in our latest issue.

We are herewith printing replies from the editors of several more representative dailies, which tell the same story, giving a definite and unmistakably affirmative reply to the above question and indicating in no uncertain terms that in the opinion of these gentlemen who are very close to public opinion in their localities that the short subject is constantly increasing in value. These replies were selected at random from various sections and are clearly representative of the sentiment throughout the United States. Space will not permit of the publication of all the replies, but Pathe officials point out the significant fact that out of 231 replies received 226 replied "yes" to the above query.

The expressions from prominent editors follows:

Daily Herald, "Yoakum, Tex—"In my opinion, the value of short subjects is increasing."

Charles Spencer, The Daily News, Arkansas City, Kans.—"A complete bill of 'shorts' in this section would be entirely new, but it sounds good and there is a chance that it might gather a lot of new recruits for regular admissions."

E. M. Landale, Omaha Daily News, Omaha, Nebr.—"In my opinion, the value of short subjects is increasing."

J. M. Beck, Daily Iowegian and Citizen, Centreville, Ia.—"Don't know about a program made up of short features, but inclined to believe it would take well once a week anyway. A newspaper made up of numerous features appeals more than the one with a long treatment of a few subjects, likewise magazines, so why not movies?"

I. Frank Newmann, The Daily Mirror, Clinton, Ia.—In our opinion, serials are increasing. I, myself, attend them regularly. A good comedy of one or two reels is always in demand."

A. W. Peterson, Evening Courier, Waterloo, Ia.—"One high-class short comedy, one series of specialties along educational lines and one regular performance of a straight play seems to me to be about the right thing."

Gerald E. Sullivan, Englewood Times, Englewood, Ill.—"Your excellent organization deserves credit for making the movies what they are, and advancing them from a novel stunt to the greatest educational medium of the age."

Genevieve Harris, Chicago Evening Post, Chicago, Ill.—"The short features seem to me to bear the same relation to the program that dessert bears to a meal. And some of us eat our meals for the sake of the dessert. I know 'fans' who go to he theatre because they enjoy the news weeklies, travel films and other short subjects. . . . Yes, the value of short subjects is increasing. I believe that theatres might profitably give more space in their advertising to this part of their program."

K. Hamerman, Milwaukee Leader, Milwaukee, Wis.—"The feeling in this neck of the woods appears to be in favor of short subjects. The long drawn out film has lost its novelty, and unless it is exceptionally good fails to register. The average movie fan, if there is such an animal, prefers a program consisting of a four or five reeler, a snappy comedy and an educational or news picture."

Willard E. Carpenter, Lincoln Evening Courier, Lincoln, Ill.—"Lincoln audiences want to go and see a picture, a good comedy and the news feature."

Clayton A. Leiter, Hamilton Evening Journal, Hamilton, Ohio—"The people are demanding a greater variety of entertainment, such as is offered in news reels, one and two reel comedies, colored pictures and the like."

Elmer H. Dressman, Cincinnati Post, Cincinnati, Ohio—"It seems to me there is a great field for the program of short subjects. Personally, I would much rather see an interesting program of short subjects than a long, padded seven or eight reel feature. There are on the market at the present time so many good short subjects that an exhibitor would have no trouble picking a good combination."

Pearl White Heads Pathe List

Pathe's eight releases for March 11 are headed by the seventh episode of "Plunder," the Pearl White serial. The Hal Roach one-reel comedy offering presents Paul Parrott and Jobyna Ralston in "Shoot Straight"—a satire on amateur hunters who rely on books of instructions.

Screen Snapshots shows "Baby Peggy," Viola Dana, Shirley Mason and Edna Flugrath, Marion Davies, Ora Carew, Louise Lovely, Milton Sills and his daughter Dorothy, Betty Compson, Lasky, Zukor and Marcus Loew and others.

The Aesop's Film Fable is called "The Traveling Salesman." Farmer Al Falfa has more than his usual share of trouble, Pathe Review presents "The Million Dollar Weed," the Wather Hyacinth, of Florida, Beauty as it appeals to sailors is shown in the Photographic Gems Series, pictures of vanity cases of the French Court of 1750-92. "As Others See Us" presents queen conceits of philosophy modeled in clay.

Pathe Writes Greater Business on "Plunder" Than on Its Other Serials

The new Pearl White serial, "Plunder," on the quoted authority of Pathe booking records for ten years past, has done more business at release date than any other serial on its list.

This statement, Pathe says, will seem surprising to many people long connected with the industry who recall the tremendous popular furor for the earlier Pearl White productions. Notwithstanding, it is declared that neither "The Perils of Pauline" nor "The Exploits of Elaine" with its two sequels—"The New Exploits of Elaine" and "The Romance of Elaine"—closely approached, on release date, the volume of "Plunder" contracts.

The same statement holds good with respect to "The House of Hate," starring Pearl White, and with "Daredevil Jack," with Jack Dempsey. Exhibitors all over the country wrote letters to Pathe about the former that it represented their serial ideal in every way, and in their experience established a serial standard that never had and never could be improved upon, while the extraordinary record made by the Dempsey picture, released three years ago, is still fresh in the memory of everyone interested in the careers of outstanding motion picture productions.

The impetus so early achieved by "Plunder" Pathe attributes to the fortunate combination of Pearl White and a story of exceptional mystery and dramatic appeal heightened by masterly control of the invaluable element of suspense. This, in fact is the analysis with which exhibitors and capable reviewers are in agreement.

To this statement Pathe adds another significant indication in the general exhibitor field just reported by Serial Sales Manager E. O. Brooks, who is on a tour of Pacific Coast key cities holding conferences with showmen big and little on questions of importance to all branches of the industry. Writing from Portland, Oregon, in the fifth week of his personal investigations, Mr. Brooks says:

"There is not now the slightest difficulty in convincing the average exhibitor of the fundamental reasons why serials—particularly Pathe serials—hold their high record for box office value. The evidence is before their eyes in nearly every newspaper and magazine—always more and better continued stories to meet the demand of the same class of people who habitually attend motion picture theatres. I have yet to meet the exhibitor who is inclined to offer any argument in opposition to the following proposition:

"When Pathe serials contain stories of the same type as those which are read in popular magazines each month by between thirty and forty millions of American people, can you conceive of any reason why those same people should not wish to see that type of serial story on the screen?"

Serials Hold Interest by Eagerness to Know What Will Happen "Next Week"

By EDGAR O. BROOKS

Serial Sales Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

No form of motion picture can outclass the fifteen episode serial in essentials which dig deepest into human life. Eagerness for knowledge about what will happen tomorrow or next week is a desire that never relaxes its efforts toward satisfaction. Journalism is solidly builded on that rock.

Exhibitors are becoming impressed with this fact, which is demonstrated conclusively in the case of Pathe serials. Eagerness for the forthcoming installment, enhanced by the calculated force of suspense, is a tremendous asset to the exhibitor of serials. He is simply falling in line with the publishers of widely circulated magazines which have used serial fiction as the most certain agency in building up a big circulation. Every argument brought against serial pictures is refuted by the daily newspaper. Not only do most of them print fiction and cartoon serials but all of the big news is necessarily of a serial nature.

No other form of motion picture has the influence of the well-produced serial in stimulating regular attendance and this stabilizing of the exhibitor's business is of the utmost importance to him. It is the experience of the distributors of Pathe serials that when exhibitors once provide their patrons with this form of picture they very rarely discontinue the practice.

The opening performance of a Patheserial presenting a favorite star is always an important amusement event. Advance announcements insure the presence of a capacity audience. The successful reception means capacity audiences for fifteen successive weeks on the announced "serial day." This is the record of each of the Pathe serials released during the last three years and to that record is added a steady increase in bookings by houses that have heretofore not shown serials.

Sixth "All-Star"

The sixth of the series of All Star Comedies to be released by Hodkinson will be a burlesque on Shakespeare's, "Hamlet" under the title "So This Is Hamlet." The cast includes Charles Murray, Felix Adler, Charlie Hines, Billy Neil, Dan Duffy, Dorothy Walters, Dorothy Allen and little Russell Griffin. This series is being produced by C. C. Burr.

Books "High Flyers"

"High Flyers," one of the popular Hallroom Boys comedies, has been booked for New York's Rialto Theatre for the week of February 24.

"High Flyers" is one of the comedy-thrillers—a type of comedy originated in the Hallroom Comedy series — featuring Sid Smith in his dare-devil stunts.

"Shorts" Only

The Rex Theatre, Jackson, Mich., is building a program consisting entirely of Short Subjects around the Special, "The Message of Emile Coue," playing in all eight reels of Educational product. This program will run for five days without a change.

Einstein Theory Film Will Be Offered on State Rights

Edwin Miles Fadman, president of Premier Productions which is handling the film version of the Einstein Theory which is just concluding a successful three weeks engagement at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York, announce this picture will be marketed on a state right basis and that already the metropolitan district of New York has been taken over by Harold Rodner.

The interest aroused by this film, the enthusiastic manner in which it has been received and the space allotted to it in the newspapers is highly gratifying to the sponsors of the picture, who believe that it marks a milestone in the development of the screen and should prove encouraging to all interested in the advancement of the silent art.

Not only was this film given the place of honor on the program of the two Broadway houses but it was presented in two versions, a two-reel one with the regular performance and a four-reel version which was shown at special morning performances which were remarkably well attended.

The huge task of selecting from 18,000 feet of film produced by European scientists confronted Mr. Fadman, and this was accomplished through the assistance of Professor Garrett P. Serviss who handled the scientific end and Max Fleisher, the cartoonists who made the necessary animated drawings. So well did they accomplish the task that they have made the principal and more popular points of this abstruse scientific theory not only acceptable to the average mind, but interesting as well.

Chinese Actress in "Babies Welcome"

Anna May Wong, the most celebrated Chinese actress in America, is seen in support of Dorothy Devore in the Educational-Christie comedy, "Babies Welcome."

Miss Wong has received flattering mention lately on her starring feature, "The Toll of the Sea," which attracted marked attention as the outstanding color film of recent years. She has never appeared in comedies before.

Newsy Notes

Pathe reports that the success of Harold Lloyd in feature length comedies has given such an impetus to his two-reelers that it has been necessary to furnish exchanges with additional prints.

High class bookings continue to pour in on the series of Baby Peggy Century Comedies distributed by Universal. The Kinema in Los Angeles has booked the first three.

The following Educational releases are included in the National Motion Picture League's list recommended for adults and young people: "Jenkins and the Mutt," "Dog Sense," "Pest of the Storm Country," "In Dutch," "Treasure Bound," "Chicken Dressing," "By Lantern Light," and "Moonblind."

Pathe's series of "Our Gang" comedies continues to evoke unusual praise from exhibitors in all parts of the country. E. M. Carey, of Rialto Amusement Co., Deming, N. M., says of "The Fire Fighters": "It is a scream. We hope the rest of the series will be as good or nearly so: they can't be better."

Lloyd Hamilton is working on a new comedy for Educational release which has been titled "Uneasy Feet."

In a recent issue of the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer editorial praise was given to Pathe Review for the picturesque views of a North Carolina landmark, "Chimney Rock," which were presented in colors.

Century Comedy Company announces that "Brownie" will appear in a role quite different from his former ones in "Try and Get it," in which he is vamped by a dog of the other sex. Herman Raymaker is directing.

An interesting section of a current Pathe Review presents little known facts about the human breath.

In an article in the Arkansas Gazette, Rev. H. G. Knowles, of Little Rock, pays high tribute to Pathe Review, stating: "There is no so-called 'magazine film' of higher class in any show anywhere any time."

Under the auspices of the New York Daily News Sally Joy Brown recently gave a Baby Peggy Party to one hundred poor kiddies during the showing of "Peg o' the Movies," at the Criterion Theatre.

"The Four Orphans"

(Hodkinson—Comedy—Two Reels)

Some comical "business" is put across in this two-reeler released by Hodkinson. The plot hinges on the coming of a prosperous uncle from the gold-fields of the West to visit a nephew whom he has never seen. Because the uncle wires that he likes "kids" the young couple he is coming to visit makes haste to adopt four from an orphan asylum for the occasion.

At the railroad station the young married pair mistake another man for their uncle, take him home, and a number of laugh-provoking episodes transpire until the mistake is discovered when the real uncle shows up.—T. S. daP.

'Fishing for Tarpons'

Educational-Comedy—Two Reels

The thrills of landing a big fish make this number popular with many. Most of the reel which is a Lyman H. Howe, "Hodge Podge" consists of picturing the details of a labor which lasted two hours—the catching of a huge tarpon by a woman. The number ends with an animated cartoon depicting a tragedy in Dogville.—M. K.

"Colonel Heeza Liar, Detective"

(Hodkinson—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this film the "Colonel" plays the part of a detective and goes in search of a $10,000 prize rooster which has been stolen. He regains what he believes to be the rooster.

But upon his arrival the supposed rooster lays an egg, with which the enraged owner of the fowl "nails" the "Colonel," splashing him into oblivion. This is a one reel Bray Comedy released by Hodkinson, it contains a number of humorous touches and is generally entertaining.—T. S. daP.

"Do Your Stuff"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Burlesquing the dangers of Chinatown is the motive of this Hal Roach comedy with Paul Parrott and Jobyna Ralston. All the various treacheries of the Chinese den are hilariously shown. Mysterious trap doors and panels, collapsible stairways and trick sword play enter into the action. It is not entirely slapstick as there is a slight suspense and a good climax.—M. K.

"A Jungle Romeo"

Educational—Special—One Reel

A remarkable demonstration of the talents of Snooky, the Humanzee, is found in this. He plays every role in the cast which means about ten different parts. The direction shows the greatest of care in training him for this versatile performance, and the result is a success distinctly out of the ordinary. Almost anyone will marvel at Snooky's ability, and the children will be sure to be enthusiastic over it. The different characterizations are most amusing and the startling contrasts in make-up are unusually clever. Jungle settings are used throughout, and the story is the romance of a monkey ingeniously told, with touches of melodrama and amusing subtitles.—M. K.

"The Spider and the Fly"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Paul Terry has achieved something snappy and original in this. He has succeeded in arousing a rare interest in the house fly, in a comic interpretation of the tale of the artful spider and the innocent fly.—M. K.

"Pathe Review No. 9"

(Magazine—One Reel)

One of the interesting features in this group is devoted to pictures of vanity cases and trinkets of long ago. The chemical demonstration consists of the action of an odd metal, metallic sodium, which shows almost human characteristics. Color views of the Moroccan City of Fez are also included.—M. K.

"Wolves of the Waterfront"

(Universal—Feature—Two Reels)

Considerable action and suspense is found in this number of the Jack London series, "Tales of the Fish Patrol." The mystery of finding thousands of dead fish washed up on the shore puzzles the coast patrol. Charley Le Grant, played by Jack Mulhall is detailed to solve it. His experiences involve getting mixed up with a Chinese gang, an explosion at sea, entanglement in the fishing net and a final reunion with a sea-going girl. It is good entertainment.—M. K.

Movie Chats No. 54

(Hodkinson—Magazine—One Reel)

For Movie Chats No. 54 made by Charles Urban for Hodkinson some particularly interesting scenes of the Samoans and their island home have been filmed. The cameraman has "shot" views of them at work and at play—gathering the cocoa-nuts from the graceful trees, which seems one of their principal industries, and riding the breakers coming in from the ocean, which is one of their particular amusements.

There are also interesting views of the people of Nova Scotia at work at various industries.—T. S. daP.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Mazda Efficiency

Harry Denton, projectionist Regent Theatre, Saginaw, Michigan, writes:

It has been quite some time since I have written to our department, but sooner or later we all come to it again, so here goes: For two months I have been trying to secure information concerning the Mazda projection lamp. During that time I have written all the manufacturers of that kind of equipment, but to date have not even had as much as a price list in reply.

I understand the installation and operation of Mazda equipment, but want to know the efficiency of a 900-watt, 30-ampere, 30-volt lamp, used on a 110-volt supply. In other words, I want to know exactly how much current is taken from the line by this lamp, including its controlling device.

What I am after is to make an intelligent comparison as between the operating cost of the motor generator set I now have, and the Mazda. Have a 75-75 single phase, 220-volt set, using 55 amperes at the arc. K. W. consumption each day varies between 45 and 68. Why is this? Have been told it is caused by voltage fluctuation in supply lines.

How Come?

Voltage fluctuation is the most likely cause, but if that IS the cause, how come that you don't see it on the screen, as such a fluctuation would cause a decided variation in the light. I don't think that can possibly be the cause, since when the voltage raised or lowered you would see the effect on your ammeter and move your field rheostat. The effect of raise in voltage would be to cause your motor generator to speed up and to increase your amperage at the arc. Are you sure it is not partly chargeable to more incandescents (auditorium or sign) being burned some days, or to their being burned a longer time?

As to the efficiency of a 900-watt, 30-ampere, 30-volt lamp, why it consumes just 900 watts when at candle power. It is a 900-watt lamp because it does use 30 amperes at 30 volts; 30 x 30 is 900, you know. The efficiency of the controller, which is a transformer, I could not give you. It will or may vary with different makes. The loss should not, however, exceed ten per cent if the device be well designed.

As to your motor generator, you can get the wattage on the generator end by multiplying the ammeter and voltmeter readings. Then you must know the loss in the motor and generator, which may vary very widely, according to the care it is given. A good machine should show as high as 70 per cent efficiency, but that is ONLY when in A-1 first class condition and adjustment. After it is in use awhile it may (or may not) show something very different.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies by mail on matter which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through our department remit one dollar.

THE LENS CHART

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave. New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

I have known lack of intelligent care to lower a 70 per cent efficiency reading down to as low as 45 in sixty days. You can find out precisely what energy is consumed by having the power company measure the input, either in watts or in volts and amperes.

Excellent Hanger

Everette Gardner, projectionist Lyric Theatre, Mounds, Illinois, has a most excellent, cheap shutter hanger arrangement. It is illustrated below.

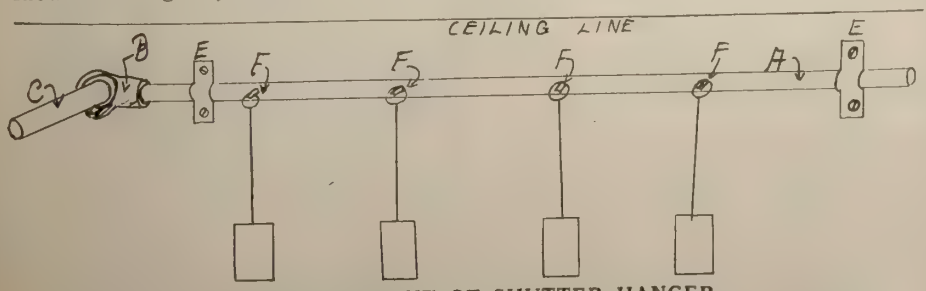
It is cheap in that any man can make one. It is efficient in that it makes the distribution of fuses through a master cord very simple and convenient.

A is a piece of ordinary gas pipe of any convenient diameter from one-quarter to three-quarters inch. B is an elbow and C a piece of pipe a foot or two long. EE are metal clamps, which may be such as are used by electricians to fasten conduit to the wall.

FFFF are holes drilled through the pipe, into which pins are driven so that they stick out, say, half an inch. Rings or hooks are attached to the end of each shutter cord.

A master cord is stretched, through suitable supporting staples, to all the various points where it is desired that fuses be installed and handle C is held in horizontal position by this cord in such way that when a fuse "goes," or the master cord is for any reason slacked, arm C drops, rotating pipe A so that pins in holes F are in "hanging down" position, whereupon, of course, the rings slip off and the shutters are dropped.

The particular advantage is that each shutter may be unhooked and dropped independently of all the others. Such an arrangement is described and illustrated on page 315 of the Bluebook, but Gardner has found an effective way of making the thing, which has the virtue of being just as good as a costly apparatus made of solid iron.



ARRANGEMENT OF SHUTTER HANGER

As developed by Everette Gardner, projectionist, Lyric Theatre, Mounds, Ill.

A Constant Reader

E. K. Shirley, projectionist, Homer, Louisiana, says:

I am forever reading our department in the World. Must admit it has been a wonderful help to me in my work, which I try to improve as best I may.

I have a question I would like to have answered, as I am stuck and unable to solve the matter myself. The trouble is as follows:

Have two Powers Six B projectors. One gives perfect projection, or at least "perfect," in the sense that there is no fault to be found with the performance of the projector.

The picture is clear, sharp and as steady as a rock. The picture projected by the other projector is continually in and out of focus. Have tried every way I can think of to remedy the fault, but it is still on the job, and very much so at that.

Have put on new aperture plate tension springs and shoes, but without result. The projection lens is NOT loose. The intermittent seems to be O. K. and the picture is steady. Have eliminated the same trouble on other projectors a number of times, in days gone by, but this one has me licked.

The trouble is surely in the projector mechanism, as I get a perfect picture on the other projector, under identical operating conditions. What is the answer?

Get Busy

I shall refer your question, together with a carbon copy of this, to the Powers Company. I also suggest that any one who has a solution get busy and send it in.

My own view is that the trouble certainly must lie in the aperture plate, which for some unknown reason is not level. First I would suggest that you remove the aperture plate and, using a magnifying glass, carefully examine the surface it rests upon and see if there is not something, possibly a bit of metal adhering to it at some point, which causes the plate to buckle when clamped down into place by its holding shoes.

If you fail to find anything, then replace the aperture, remove the head and have a competent machinist test its tracks for trueness, though if it is bad enough to produce a constant in and out of focus effect I would suppose you could test it yourself, using a short piece of steel with a perfectly straight edge.

So far as I know there is nothing else could cause such an effect, except a loose element in your projection lens, and it would have to be pretty loose at that. I shall ask the Nicholas Power Company to send me a copy of their letter to you, and will be much interested in seeing what other causes they can find which might produce such an effect.

In the old days when it was quite possible to get the upper and lower sprockets badly out of line with each other, and to get the intermittent sprocket much higher on one end than the other, it was possible such an effect could and would be produced, provided the conditions be bad enough. With a Six B, however, I don't think it could be done.

An Old Timer

John W. Brice, projectionist, Brooklyn, New York, comes across with the following:

Dear brother Richardson: I was a motion picture projectionist in Lake Charles, Louisiana, from 1912 to 1916. There were three theatres, all owned by Joshua Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans.

The equipment consisted of two Edison Exhibition Model projectors to each theatre, using the Armstrong motors. The juice was a. c. I suppose they don't even make the Edison projectors now, and if they did they would be a bad back number.

We had good projectionists then, or at least I think they were—good for that time, I mean; all industrious men and interested in their work. We had the first edition of your handbook and received the Moving Picture World every Saturday.

We were told we produced a better picture in those theatres than anything New Orleans, or Houston, Texas, could show. The praise certainly made us feel good. Yes, we had a union, too—I. A. T. S. E., No. 260, if I rightly remember.

I often see pictures here in New York which make me wonder how, with modern equipment, projectionists can produce such results without blushing for shame.

I used to read the department of those days faithfully, and often tried out the various things suggested. Well do I remember soaking carbons in salt water to try to improve the light. But I have forgotten much of my former knowledge of projection, having been "out of the game" for a long while. I want to get back now, and write to ask you how best to go about it. Would like to attend school, with yourself as instructor, if it were possible.

Cannot Recommend School

I cannot recommend a school course, because I know of none which has, in my judgment, much value. As to myself acting as instructor—well, for heaven's sake don't wish any more work on poor me. Nothing doing.

The only method I can conscientiously recommend is to serve an apprenticeship, at the same time studying the Blue Book of Projection—the handbook—and such other works as you can find which have value. Hawkins Electrical Guides are among them. You will find them named on page 904 of the Blue Book. It, the Blue Book, may be had of the Chalmers Publishing Company, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It has 934 pages and 375 illustrations. Price, $6.00.

But you are in wrong two or three ways. In the first place, New York City prohibits the serving of a projectionist apprenticeship. They apparently want you to "go to school," learn the answers to a lot of questions by heart and thus be able to pass an examination—for that is just about what it really amounts to. Also there are right now one hundred licensed, union projectionists out of work in Greater New York; also New York City is pretty thoroughly organized and the union would not let you work there.

The only thing I can suggest is that you get a job in some unorganized small town or city outside of Greater New York and serve an apprenticeship. You might even get a job as projectionist, or assistant. God knows you would even then be a safer and better man than the chap who "graduates" from a school and butts his way into the projection field without any previous practical experience whatsoever. I am sorry, brother, but I cannot help you in this matter.

Your reminiscences of other days were of interest to me, as they will many others who "pedaled" the Edison Exhibition Model by "Armstrong motor" in those days. No, the Edison has not been made for several years.

Flicker Trouble

Will C. Nowell, proprietor Star Theatre, Wendell, N. C., writes:

Guess I must be an "operator," because though I have been handling various makes of projectors since the days when we cranked the film down into a sack, and then rewound the Selig or Pathe Freres 2-reel special out of said sack while friend audience waited, more or less patiently, I nevertheless seem to be up against it.

My trouble is flicker, of course, especially in the lighter scenes. Have Powers Six B, Type E lamphouse. A. C. at arc. Take 110 volt current through Fort Wayne A. C. to A. C. Compensarc. Get about 35 amperes at arc. Use three-quarters White A. C. Special carbons.

I know this is larger than the charts show, but smaller ones have tendency to pencil. Screen is Minusa Gold Fibre. Projection distance 69 feet. Have your handbooks, all editions; also lens charts. Have tried my darnedest to dope out the trouble, which is that I cannot run the prints I usually get at less than fifteen minutes to the 1,000 feet with any sort of result. Even at that speed there is decided flicker.

Tried a 3-blade shutter, but it raised the dickens with screen brilliancy, due to frequent synchronizing of shutter blades with alterations of current, though it did stop flicker. Then I tried all the modifications of shutter I could dope out, but haven't been able to invent a better one than the Powers Company supplies.

Tried cutting down amperage, which killed the flicker, but my patrons kicked more at lack of light than at the flicker.

Can't Afford It

Of course, you will say get a motor generator, with D. C. and use a 3-blade shutter. This I cannot afford to do though I recognize that D. C. is the thing for projection, just : I recognize the fact that one cannot invest too much money in a town of this size and hope for anything like an adequate return on the investment. If you cannot help me, just pitch this into the waste paper. The chances are that I am expecting too much with my limitations. However, there may be some little cause for flicker not dealt with in the handbook, and I am willing to take a chance in getting help. Anyhow, I have been a reader of the department for a number of years and this is the first time I have bothered you.

Something Twisted

Three things strike me, friend Howell. One is that you certainly must be getting considerably more than 35 amperes at the arc, if 5/8 carbons show any tendency to pencil and if you get sufficient brilliancy to have flicker at 70 feet projection speed.

Another is that you have possibly overlooked a bet in the mercury arc rectifier, which, while not the equal of a good motor generator, still is an excellent and efficient device with which to change A. C. to D. C. See pages 515 to 543 of Bluebook.

The third is that there is something twisted with your 3-wing experiment. I say this because you could not possibly get any synchronization unless either your projection speed drop far below 70 or your current be very much more than 60 cycle. Synchronization does not cause a constant decrease in light, but a "waving" effect. The light will drop away down and then flash up to full brilliancy, as the shutter gets into and out of synchronization. Possibly you have tried a 3-winger, but without trimming it down. See page 620 of Bluebook.

As regards the picture itself, two things must be considered. Flicker tendency increases with size of picture, illumination remaining the same. Flicker tendency increases with increases in picture brilliancy. You probably have not a large picture, but it is possible that you have a very small one and that the concentration of the light on the small screen area has set up a rather high brilliancy, which increases flicker tendency.

There is little more can be said. I would make a very careful tryout of a trimmed-down 3-winger or else investigate the mercury arc rectifier.

His Heart Relieved

True Edward Anderson, Community Theatre, Russellville, Ark., says:

My heart was relieved this morning when I finally filled out an order blank for the Fourth Edition of the Handbook—the Bluebook of Projection. I am chief projectionist of the Community Theatre. Have been here four years and have had five years experience. Have two Powers Six B projectors, with which I get very good results. Project a seventeen-foot picture at ninety feet. This is my first letter to our department, but there will be more later. Don't forget the bluebook.

The book is on its way. You will doubtless have it before this is printed. Glad to hear from you any time.

Spring Meeting

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its spring meeting at the Hotel Traymore, Atlantic City, May 7, 8, 9 and 10. The arrangements committee is already busy and the papers committee, of which L. A. Jones is a most efficient chairman, promises a good program.

The society is doing a splendid work and should have the hearty, enthusiastic support of the entire industry.

Projectionist Honored

Morris J. BETTER EQUIPMENT

EDITED BY E. T. KEYSER

Planning a Model Small Theatre to Accommodate from 350 to 750 Seats

DURING the past year, the Moving Picture World has received many requests for aid in the planning of small picture theatres.

There has certainly been cause for these requests, for the individual or corporation, contemplating the erection of a moderate sized picture house in a moderate sized town or village, is confronted with peculiar difficulties.

While desiring to make the new theatre attractively up-to-date both in arrangement, equipment and furnishings, the comparatively moderate cost of such a structure precludes it from being considered a desirable subject for the average architect with experience in successful picture theatre planning.

And the fact that only an architect thoroughly understanding the requirements of a picture theatre could produce the best results usually bars local architects, lacking such experience, from giving the theatre builder a house combining the maximum number of good seats, good projection, economical lay-out and an attractive appearance.

Designed by a Specialist

Planning a picture theatre that will be attractive, comfortable and capacious is a fairly easy problem, but combining the above with a house in which the projection is close to perfection, the seats all good from a screen viewpoint and with a minimum of waste space is something that only an architect who has enjoyed much experience with picture theatres can be trusted to produce.

With the assistance of Eugene DeRosa, a New York architect, the Moving Picture World has solved the problem of the prospective builder of the small picture house.

That Mr. DeRosa plans with knowledge and experience is vouched for by the fact that he has to his credit the following well arranged picture theatres and legitimate houses:

Marc Klaw's, Klaw Theatre, Forty-fifth street near Broadway, New York City. Selwyn's, Times Square Theatre, Forty-second street near Broadway, New York City. Selwyn's, Apollo Theatre, Forty-second street near Broadway, New York City. Famous Players, Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., 3,600 seats. Blumenthal's, Central Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., 2,200 seats. Keith-Moss, Coliseum Theatre, 3,200 seats. Keith-Moss, Franklin Theatre, 3,000 seats. B. S. Moss, Cameo Theatre, New York City. Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., for William Small, 2,800 seats. Forum Theatre, One Hundred Thirty-eighth street and Brown place, Bronx, for Lawrence Bolognino, 2,000 seats. Meserole Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., for Sol. Brill, 2,000 seats. Theatre, Scranton, Pa., for Charles H. Miles, of Detroit, Michigan. State Theatre, Middletown, N. Y., for the Middletown Theatre Co., 1,400 seats. Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., for H. Calvin Ford, 1,500 seats. Belmont Theatre at Belmont and Tremont Aves., Bronx, for Messrs. Haring and Blumenthal, 1,500 seats. Ogden Theatre, One Hundred Seventy-first street and Ogden avenue, Bronx., for the Ogden Amusement Corp., 1,400 seats. Belmont Theatre, Forty-eighth street between Sixth and Seventh avenues, New York City. Vanderbilt Theatre, Forty-eighth street between Sixth and Seventh avenues, New York City.

BEHIND THIS FRONT

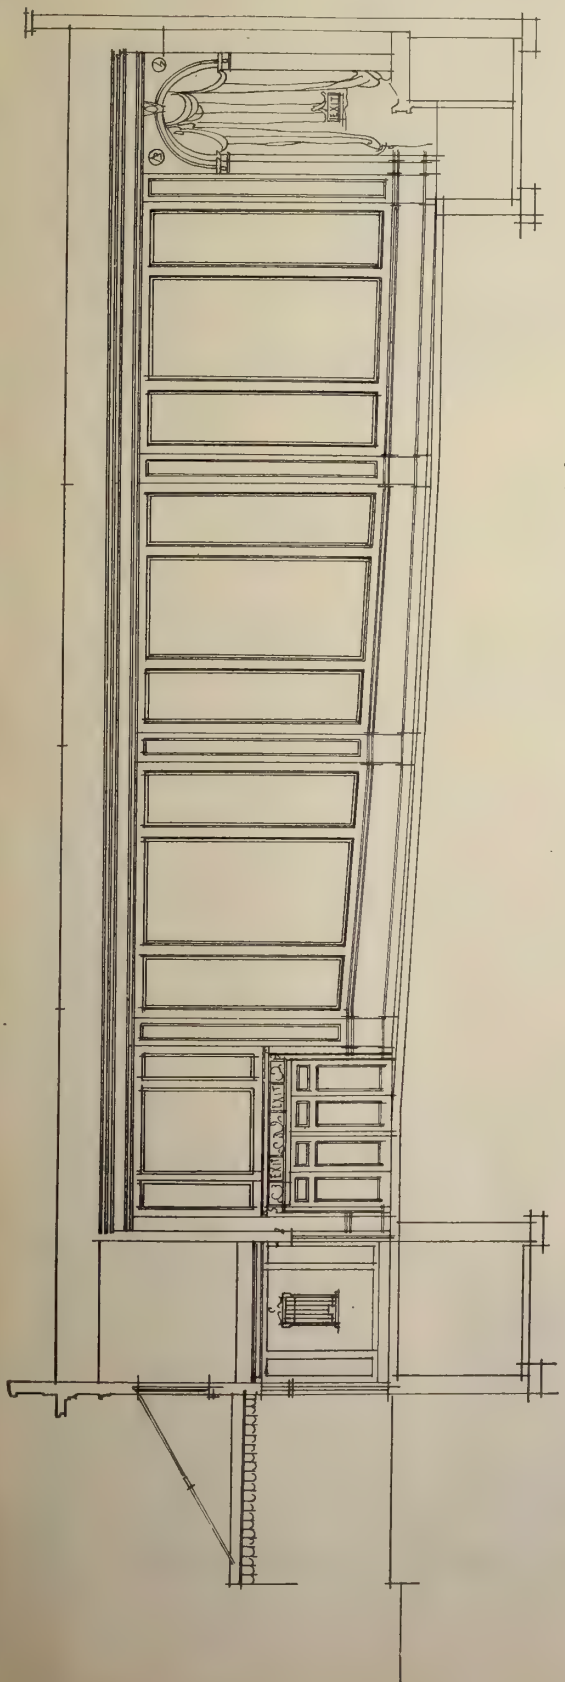
Are from 350 to 750 seats, according to the size of your plot. See plans on a following page.

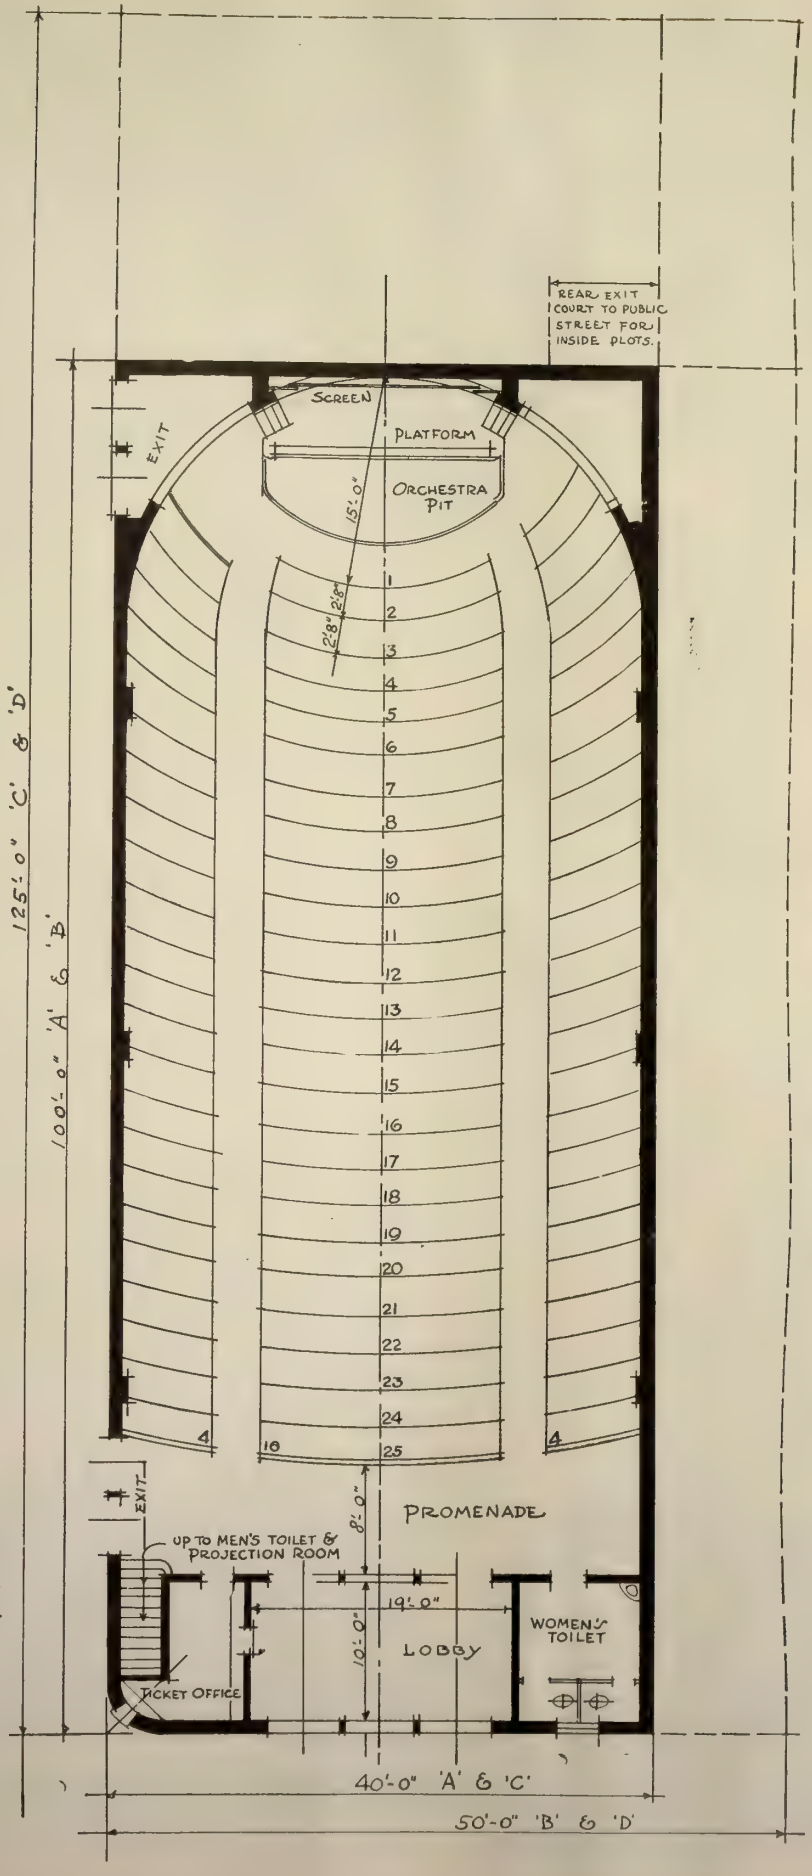
Choice in Frontage

It will be noted that the accompanying plans call for frontages of forty or fifty feet and depths of one hundred or one hundred twenty-five feet for either front, as may be desired. These areas conform with these prevailing in the average town or village in which lots have a frontage of twenty, twenty-five, forty or fifty feet with depths of one hundred or one hundred twenty-five feet.

As, when purchasing a site for a picture house, one of the first considerations, aside from location, is the amount of seating space available, we give below a table, showing the seating capacities of theatres built from these plans in each of four different dimensions for plots with three different degrees of accessibility.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD MODEL PLANS for Picture Theatre of 350 to 750 Seating Capacity. Eugene DeRosa, Architect.





LAYOUT OF PICTURE THEATRE OF 40 OR 50 FEET FRONTAGE AND 100 TO 125 FEET DEPTH

It will be noted that, whatever dimensions of the plot in which the house is built are, there are three possible types of lot based upon the plot's accessibility; that is, whether it be a corner plot, an inside plot with an available rear exit to a public street, or whether it is necessary to make provision for a fireproof passageway along one side of the auditorium leading to the entrance street.

Seating Capacities

With the above explanation in mind, the following table of respective seating capacities will be appreciated and understood.

For a corner plot:

40′ x 100′—440 seats
50′ x 100′—600 seats
40′ x 125′—600 seats
50′ x 125′—750 seats

For inside plot with available rear exit to a public street:

40′ x 100′—425 seats
50′ x 100′—575 seats
40′ x 125′—575 seats
50′ x 125′—725 seats

For an inside plot requiring side fireproof passageway:

40′ x 100′—350 seats
50′ x 100′—500 seats
40′ x 125′—500 seats
50′ x 125′—650 seats

Seating on One Floor

As will be noted by the plans, the house, upon which the above seating capacities are based, has its seating all on one floor and spaced thirty-two inches from back to back, with aisles three feet six inches wide throughout and with the first row of seating placed fifteen feet from the screen.

While many communities permit thirty inches in spacing of seating, this is not advisable because of loss in comfort and results in a gain of but one row in every fifteen.

The seating is laid out in three sections which permits of the audience being served by two aisles. In the theatre of forty foot frontage, rows in the side sections consist of four seats each and each row in the centre section contains ten seats.

In the house of fifty front footage, there would be six seats in each of the side rows and thirteen in each center row.

In addition to the entrance doors, two rear exits, for inside plots, are provided.

There is an eight-foot promenade extending entirely across the house between the backs of the rear rows of seating and the inner lobby doors.

Well Arranged Lobby

The lobby is ten feet in depth, and nineteen feet wide, in the house which has a forty foot frontage, with the ticket office to the left as one enters the house.

To the right of the lobby, and reached from the promenade, is the women's rest room, while stairs, leading from the left-hand side of the promenade, lead up to the men's toilet and projection room.

The projection room is located on the floor above the lobby and on the center line of the auditorium, which constitutes the ideal location for good projection. Even in the forty foot house, the space available for the projection room proper and the rest of the projection suite is ten feet in depth and twenty-nine feet six inches in width.

With this arrangement of the projection room and seating, every seat in the house is a good seat. The floor of the auditorium has a drop of three feet six inches from the last to the front row of seats.

Working blue prints, specifications and bill of material for this type of house may be obtained, upon payment of a moderate fee, from Eugene De Rosa, 110 West 40th street, New York City, and the possession of these will enable our readers to turn over the work to a local architect or builder.

The specifications will call for construction that will meet with the most rigid fire department regulations, and these may be modified in many sections of the country to meet less severe requirements.

It will be noted that the house has a pleasing front, protected by a marque. The lobby is commodious and while every requirement for comfort and convenience has been provided, there is no waste space.

Getting Most Out of the Projection Room by Putting the Best Into It

DO not for an instant lose sight of the importance of the projection room. Upon the ability with which you select a program that will please your patrons and the excellence with which that program is projected upon the screen depend the profits of your house.

In order that the projection may be at its best, the projectionist must have comfortable and convenient quarters and the best of apparatus at his disposal.

No matter how small the house, the projection room should be well situated, well ventilated and sufficiently commodious to allow the projection staff instant and easy access to every portion of the equipment.

The smaller the theatre, the greater the difficulty in laying out the projection suite to advantage and, in order that the small theatres built from these plans may equal in screening effects the larger and more expensive houses, we publish herewith projection room lay outs specially planned by us and also specifications by J. E. Robin, one of the most skilled projection engineers of today and who planned and laid out the projection arrangements for Loew's State, the Strand, Rialto, Rivoli, Criterion, Capitol, Sheridan, Hippodrome, Colliseum, Cameo, Franklin, Broadway, Keith's Fordham and Eighty-first Street theatres, Riverside, Palace and Fragansy, all of New York, besides the Eastman of Rochester, the Rialto of Allentown, Pa., the Strand, Syracuse, Strand of Paterson, the Strand of Newark, the B. S. Moss of Flatbush, Arcadia and Stanley of Philadelphia, Fenway of Boston, Stillman of Cleveland, Piccadilly of Rochester and the James of Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Robin's cinematographic engineering in connection with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition of 1915 won recognition in the form of both a diploma and medal.

What Mr. Robin Says

One of the most important points to consider in the construction of a motion picture theatre, regardless of size, is the paramount fact that images projected upon a screen are what patrons pay admission to view. Therefore it is patent that to give screen results the entire projection system must be carefully planned and executed, and in the choice of equipment, quality and service must be considered before cost.

An exhibitor should not expect to buy good equipment or obtain first class workmanship at less than consistent worth. In many of installations where exhibitors have attempted to save a few dollars at a sacrifice of this nature the resultant reconstruction, the purchase of new equipment, or alterations to meet requirements cost more than would have been expended on an initially correct layout.

Plan Number One

Plan number 1 is a section through the center of the theatre and shows the sight lines, projection, and visual angles, also the position and elevation of the screen and machines above the datumn line. The axis referred to in this drawing is an imaginary line drawn through the center of screen at this elevation. The film line, shown as eighteen inches from the inside front wall of operating room, represents the aperture of the projector and is the distance that the machines shall be placed back from the inside front wall of the operating room, which is sufficient to allow ready access to the projection machine magazines, shutter and lenses.

The screen is fourteen feet 0 inches wide by ten feet six inches high and s to be placed with the picture surface twelve inches from the rear wall of theatre. The bottom two feet six inches above the stage or datum line. The projector center line, or throw, as this dimension is more commonly called, is eighty-eight feet two inches and at an angle of five degrees twenty-two minutes with the perpendicular of the screen. To obtain a picture fourteen feet in width at this distance with any make of standard projection machine will require a motion picture objective of 5.72 inches equivalent focus. The stero lenses required to match the size of the motion picture height should be 22.89 inches equivalent focus. Both of the motion picture and stereo lenses should be ordered in matched pairs of the above focal length. If these sizes are not readily obtainable, use 5.75-inch motion picture and 23-inch stereopticon objectives. The dimension shown in the drawing as 4 feet 0 inches above the operating room floor represents a horizontal line taken as a standard, and should not be confused with the distance from the finished floor level to the center of the projection machine port openings, which is 42.75 inches. The latter may vary with some of the different makes of machines and cannot be definitely determined upon until owner makes selection of the projection equipment.

Visual Angles

The first row of seats, center, is 14 feet plus from the screen and at an angle of 26 degrees 50 minutes below the latter. The last row of seats, cen-

DISTINCTION and CLASS

TERRA COTTA is the medium par excellence for the small theatre front. Elaborate or plain and obtainable in any color it presents the most economical possibilities for distinctive effect in a permanent fireproof material.

In the central portion of the theatre shown above the architect has achieved a type of design in Terra Cotta not only dignifying the character of house within but admirably adapted to his wonderfully efficient plan for small theatres presented in this issue.

Further information upon the merits of Terra Cotta and its unrivaled resources for color treatment will be sent on request. Address National Terra Cotta Society, 19 West 44th Street, New York City.

ter, is 78 feet plus from the screen and at an angle of 2 degrees and 45 minutes.

The datum or zero lines, shown in this drawing, represents the level of the stage or platform and the rear of orchestra floor, the line from which all specified dimensions are taken.

The sight lines from all seats are calculated for a distance of 48 inches above orchestra floor level, as the average height to the eyes of a seated adult.

Plan Number Two

This illustration is a floor plan disclosing the projection and visual angles, and sight lines. On a 40-foot wide theatre, we have assumed the inside dimensions to be 38 feet at the rear and 31 feet tangent to the front side seats. The front side seat is on a radius of 16 feet 8 inches and at an angle of 42 degrees and 55 minutes with the center line of screen. The deferential between the first row center, which is 14 feet, and the front side seat is on account of the seating arrangement specifying spacing between rows of 32 inches.

The rear side seats are on a radius of 78 feet and at an angle of 13 degrees 20 minutes with the center line of screen. The width of the theatre at this point is taken at 36 feet, which is taking into consideration the thickness of walls and pears.

This drawing also illustrates the position of the projection machines in horizontal relation to the center line of screen. The machines are placed on 4-foot centers, or each 2 feet off screen center line. The side angle, not illustrated, is 2 degrees 8 minutes. This plan clearly illustrates the inadvisability of using anything except a flat surface screen; if it is desired to utilize all seats. The total included angle between the sight lines of the front seats to the right and left of screen center is 85 degrees and 50 minutes, which in

There is always a good crowd where there is "always a good show"

TO what class of people do you cater? Do you set the standard of quality in pictures in your town? Are you the first to install the latest equipment to display those pictures?

If you are the leader you probably do not worry much about filling your house at every performance. There is always a good crowd where there is "always a good show."

Nothing contributes more to the showing of good motion pictures than proper projection. Everyone remembers the original arc light which often died out at the most interesting part of the picture. It is different now. It is possible to use the powerful light—which only the arc can give—without any of its former drawbacks. Only the advantages have been retained.

If you wish to give your patrons the benefit of an improvement that will be reflected in their enjoyment, we suggest that you become acquainted with the Wagner White-Light Converter.

It is built exclusively for use in motion picture projection, converting the usual alternating current into direct. The light is white, steady, easily controlled and dissolves perfectly at change over.

Wagner White-Light Converter, Type S. C. includes converter, transformer element and starting switch. Ballast resistance, polarity switch and ammeter are included as part of the equipment and furnished in separate units.

You undoubtedly know enough about the filming of the pictures. Are you equally well informed on the light used in projection? If not, we should like to send you a copy of LIGHT FOR MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION, a book which will give you a working knowledge of the several kinds of light available for projecting pictures, their relative values, and the place of the Wagner White-Light Converter. It is an interesting, easily read description of an important subject to you. Filling in the coupon is all that you have to do to get a copy.

itself is conducive to distortion regardless of the projection surface, however, the decrease in light intensity would be more pronounced with some projection surfaces than with others. The distance from the front center row of seats in relation to the total area of the screen is a fairly good proportion.

Plan Number Three

This illustration is a floor plan of the rewind, operating and generator room. In a theatre of only 40-foot width, the rewind room would only be 3 feet 6 inches in width, whereas in a 50-foot house this would increase by 10 feet, giving a total of 13 feet 6 inches. This great length, however, is not necessary in the rewinding room instead of increasing the latter by this additional length, it would be preferable to widen the projection room by 8 feet.

Where the rewind room is built, the partition may be constructed of four-inch terra cotta and cemented and plastered on both sides.

Between the rewind room and operating room there must be an underwriters' fire door, except in localities where inspection bureau will permit a kalamain door with self-closing door check.

Private wash room and lavatory for the convenience of the operators has not been specified as entrance to the booth is adjacent to men's room on the same level.

Plan Number Four

Is a front wall elevation of the projection and generating room, looking from the inside toward the stage and, with the following exception, is self-explanatory: All dimensions of openings given on this drawing are inside measurements of the finished ports.

Detailed Plan Number Five

This cut gives the dimensions and details for the construction of the kalamain frames, the fire shutters and indicates a cross section with the frame, shutter and slides installed through projector opening P1, and also a sectional elevation through the same opening P1. The fire shutters of asbestos transite board slide in steel channels, which are attached to kalamain frames, set in the wall to finish bush with the interior surface of operating room.

A fire shutter system of this kind is thoroughly practical, neat in appearance and inexpensive to install, contingent upon attention being given to each construction detail. The majority of theatres which I have planned have been equipped by me with a system of this kind.

For this model theatre we have planned a projection system which requires direct current for the operation of the arcs of the projectors. Alternating current may be used with transformers, or Mazda lamp outfits could be employed.

If Mazda lamp projectors are to be used, the screen should be a rough metallic surface. The feeders to operating room should be about the same size to allow for any future developments. The wire sizes from Mazda lamp transformers should be No. 6 or, if permitted locally, may be No. 12, one circuit to each projector, motor circuits the same as specified.

With arcs operating on direct current, would recommend a flat white surface screen (picture surface 14 feet by 10 feet 6 inches); the outside dimensions of frame should be minimum, 15 feet 6 inches by 12 feet.

Any good make of series or parallel arc motor generator set, or rotary converter, preferably three phase 220 volt, with a capacity for momentary operation of two arcs, may be used for the conversion of alternating to direct current.

Plan 6 shows a wiring diagram for a series arc type motor generator set with emergency breakdown alternating current transformer service.

Wiring for Mazda

The plan number 7 shows circuit diagram of Mazda lamp projection, but it does not include connections for spot lights. If it is desired to use a spot

What is a theatre worth?

Mind you, the question is not "What does it cost," but—

"What is it worth?"

If it brings in $6,000 NET every year, it is worth $60,000. It makes no difference whether it cost $40,000 or $100,000, the house is worth ten times its yearly earnings—no more, no less.

Now, suppose you invest $4,000 more in an improvement that boosts yearly net earnings from $6,000 to $10,000.00. That makes the house worth $100,000.00, doesn't it?—both in market value and as an income-producer.

That extra income you can get easily with the Typhoon Cooling & Ventilating System. It makes your theatre delightfully cool and comfortable in the hottest summer weather—and pays back its entire cost the first summer.

It's a real money-maker—and there are 2,000 theatres to prove it.

We have full information waiting for you. Just ask for booklet W-12.

light, the minimum size of feed wires should be number 6 B & S guage. In addition, a two pole 60 ampere cutout should be connected to one of the outside wires and the neutral. From this cutout a circuit consisting of two number 6 B & S gauge wires should be run to a two pole switch on the spot light. From the latter to the primary side of an inductor number 6 B & S gauge asbestos; from the secondary of the inductor to the arc, number 6 B & S gauge asbestos.

The motor circuits, each consisting of two number 14 B & S guage wires, should be run to each projector, the same as indicated in plan 6.

Let it be explained here that specifying two separate lines from the machines to switchboard is preferable to connecting arcs in series through conduit system between machines. The method recommended permits installation of either a parallel arc motor generator, rotary converter, series type motor generator set, or transformers, and this feature will be found to be greatly beneficial, especially should future developments require individual projector operation or new developments in the art require certain changes.

Projection Room General Specifications

The projection room is the most important part of the theatre and in order to permit efficient operation of the apparatus and to thoroughly safeguard patrons, the building, and secure the lowest insurance rates, it should be borne in mind the necessity of adhering strictly to the code of the local Fire, Building, Underwriters Inspection Bureau, and the Building Code of the respective States governing theatre construction.

General Construction: Front and side walls of operating room shall be of reinforced concrete, or terra cotta 4-inch block construction, finished on both sides with cement and finish coat plaster.

Rewind Room Partition: Generally may be 4-inch terra cotta, with an underwriters' fire door separating same from operating room. Latter to be held normally open with a chain and fusible link (160 degree) and arranged with a counter weight to close upon parting of link. Where permitted, a self-closing kalamain or metal door of the swinging type may be used. In some localities the departments require a partition of terra cotta block 6 inches in thickness between rewind and operating room.

This room in the theatre of forty feet width is necessarily small, being only four feet between walls.

Generator Room Partition: To be of 4-inch terra cotta block finished as above.

Doors: Between generator room and to operating room entrance to be 2 feet 6 inches by 7 feet, kalamain covered, hung in a kalamain casing at least 4 inches in width.

Windows: All window sash and casings to be metal or kalamain covered on the inside of operating room, contractor to furnish and install metal or kalamain light shields or louvers. These are to permit access of air to the projection room without allowing light in the daytime from reaching the interior of the theatre or screen. Painting the windows is not at all satisfactory as the operator generally opens them for ventilation.

Rewind and Work Benches: Contractor to furnish and install, as indicated in the drawing, two benches; each shall be of 1-inch kalamain securely fastened to wall with angles, and to the floor with 1-inch iron pipe and pipe flanges. Both rewind and work bench to have shelf fastened across entire length 15 inches above floor.

Locker: Contractor shall furnish and install one standard fireproof clothing locker in generator room. Same to be standard single or double locker at the choice of owner.

Vent Flues: General contractor shall furnish and install, as indicated in the drawing, two vent flues. One 18 inches in diameter in operating room, and one 12 inches in the generator room. Vent flues to extend to the roof and be capped with a variable vent duct. The inside to be flush with finished surface of ceiling and securely attached to a wooden flange to permit hanging of electric exhaust fans.

Motor Generator Base: Contractor shall construct in the generator room a reinforced platform as shown in the drawing. Same to have a carrying capacity of 225 pounds per square foot of floor surface. The construction shall consist of 6 inches of concrete, 6 inches of sand, two inches of heavy cork, a 2-inch plank platform and a galvanized iron tray securely attached to the same for mounting the motor generator thereon. The tray must be made watertight to prevent oil draining through platform and ruining cork.

Fire Shutter System: Contractor shall provide for each opening a 1-inch kalamain frame as shown on general operating room drawing and details. Each frame to be set

Encouraging Patrons to Bring Friends

Although privately owned, the community theatre belongs to its patrons. They take pride in its splendor and beauty, even in detail refinements like a drinking fountain in a smart setting or a rest room attractively furnished. Crane drinking fountains, like all other Crane sanitation fixtures, in types to harmonize in every setting, are sturdily made to stand up under any but the most careless usage. There are Crane valves and fittings of dependable character to meet every requirement of heating and sanitation systems.

to finish perfectly flush with interior wall of operating room to allow fastening slides for the shutters thereto. Each frame shall be installed with bevel of 5 degrees 22 minutes as indicated. The sizes specified on openings are the finished inside measurements.

Shutter Slides: Contractor shall furnish and install a channel iron frame on each of the kalamain frames around port openings. Channel to be 1-32 inch in thickness by 1 inch wide, 9-16 inch inside and sufficiently wide and long to permit the shutters to extend fully 1 inch on all sides of port openings, and to clear same to specified dimensions shown on drawing as finished sizes. Channels to be securely fastened to kalamain frames with wood screws.

Fire Shutters: Contractor shall furnish and install asbestos transite board shutters not less than ½ inch in thickness by 2 inches plus in width and length to the finished dimensions of openings. Each shutter to have centered in top a ¼-inch bolt or metal pin for fastening retaining string. All shutters must operate freely by gravity in finished channels.

Shutter System Trip: Contractor shall furnish and install in position across front wall of operating room a 1-inch iron pipe. Same to be held in position by five 4-inch by 1½-inch by 3-32-inch iron straps, which must be secured to the wall with toggles. In the center of each opening shall be provided ¼-inch studs, 1 inch long, to allow hanging fire shutter retaining cords or chains. At the left-hand side an eye bolt 5-16 inch by 6 inches shall be fastened to the same and a six or eight pound window weight attached thereto. On left wall of operating room contractor shall furnish and install a pulley. A chain or heavy cord is to be attached to eye bolt and run to opposite side of room. At positions indicated over machines a 160-degree fusible link to be inserted.

In operation, should a link part from excessive heat on account of fire within or near a machine, the weight is released, causing the pipe to turn, which results in permitting all shutters covering openings to drop by gravity.

Projection Room Fire Prevention Equipment: Contractor shall furnish and hang in rewind, operating and generator rooms one approved fire extinguisher. In the operating room contractor shall furnish and hang one fire pail and one sand pail.

Projection Room Floor: Shall be of reinforced concrete not less than 6 inches in thickness. Top to be covered with composition flooring of green or red (option of owner) not less than 2 inches in thickness. Should owner prefer, the projection, rewind and generator room floors may be cement finish and covered with ¼-inch green linoleum.

Floor Level: Projection room level as indicated plus 12 feet to be carefully maintained. All measurements specified above floor level of openings are to be taken from finished floor level. This is of paramount importance. Should elevation above datum be altered, contractor shall with due diligence observe alteration above floor level of openings. Failure to do so shall make it obligatory on part of contractor to make whatever changes necessary and at his own expense.

Finish of Room: Ceiling in all rooms to be finished white, side walls a flat dark olive green, with trim corresponding thereto.

Conclusion: Contractor shall co-operate

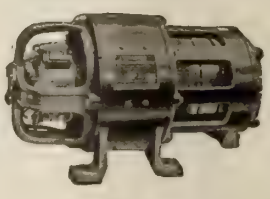
FOR FIVE
HALLBERG MOTOR-GENERATORS



Reading, Pa., Feb. 22, 1921.

Dear Sir:—

For the past four years we have used in our Colonial Theatre that Hallberg Motor-Generator which you recommended to us, and we cannot praise too much the performance and results we get from same; it gives a beautiful light and the pictures are brilliant. We have made no repairs beyond the ordinary replacement of brushes.

We now have FIVE of your Hallberg Generators in our various houses and feel that a theatre is incomplete without one.

Main Feeders: Main feeders for the power service shall consist of one No. 2 B & S wire and two No. 4 B & S wires from a source on the distributing panel independent of other circuits to the main switchboard placed in the generator room as indicated on the drawing.

If Mazda lamp projectors are to be used, the power service feeders and the main switchboard, hereinafter described, may be eliminated. Substitute for the power service a three-wire 110-220 volt 60 cycle single phase power and lighting service. If two Mazda lamp projectors only are to be used, the feeders may consist of three number 8 B & S gauge wires. If a spot light operating with an arc is also to be installed, then the feeders should consist of number 6 B & S gauge wires. Number 8 wires for feeders are not recommended and prior to installation local underwriters inspection bureau must be consulted.

In the generator room two flush type receptacles 8 inches over the work bench.

You Can't Buy Better Pictures But You Can Make Pictures Better

EVERY theatre owner has an opportunity to buy the "big pictures." You can't beat your competitors by buying better pictures, but you can beat them by making pictures better.

The new Mov-Ezy, the chair that means "Ease at the Movies," makes this possible. It eliminates the interruptions occasioned by people passing along the rows while the picture is being shown. No longer is the story spoiled at its climax by spectators rising to cramped positions to permit others to pass. A quarter turn of the Mov-Ezy affords ample passage space, thus enabling every one to remain seated.

MOV-EZY

Means Ease at the Movies

Movie patrons appreciate the advantages of the Mov-Ezy. Actual tests show that people prefer them to any other theatre chair. They are noiseless in operation, keep perfect alignment with other chairs in the row, except when intentionally turned to one side, and offer a wide range of finishes designed to harmonize with any theatre interior.

Guardene Fire Extinguisher

The standard 2½ gallon type for general protection. Insurance regulations recommend at least three extinguishers of this type for every tier of the auditorium and one for every property or store room, on each side of the stage, in fly galleries, etc. Approved and labelled by the Underwriters' Laboratories prehends the removal of foul air and the supply of fresh air in sufficient volume to maintain a pure, wholesome atmosphere, free from odors. Experience has simmered this down to a more or less arithmetical proposition. The usual rule is from 20 to 30 feet per person per minute—or from eight to ten complete air changes per hour. This is a safe rule for the eight months of the year when hot weather is not a factor. At such times the problem is a different one.

In the table below is given the amount of fresh air needed for winter ventilation for each of the various size houses considered for the type of theatre taken in this Model Theatre Section:

Size, feet	Seats	Cubic feet per minute
40 x 100	440	11,000
50 x 100	600	15,000
40 x 125	600	15,000
50 x 125	750	19,000
40 x 100	425	10,600
50 x 100	575	14,500
40 x 125	575	14,500
50 x 125	725	18,000
40 x 100	350	9,000
50 x 100	500	12,500
40 x 125	500	12,500
50 x 125	650	16,000

There is but one dependable method of supplying or exhausting air in the exact quantities required and that is by mechanical means—by the use of a fan system of the correct capacity.

With the air volume determined, the matter then resolves itself into a problem of how best to introduce it without causing drafts or other discomfort. Obviously, it would never do in winter to supply this air at outdoor temperature.

By far the most logical method is to warm the fresh air before passing it into the auditorium; allowing it to pass out through the entrance doors under its own pressure, or partly so and assisted by an exhaust fan of a slightly lower capacity than the supply fan. The air-tempering unit can be located at the ceiling level, blowing in through grilles in the ceiling with the exhaust at the floor line, or it can go in the basement blowing in through ducts running to openings under the seats or in the side walls with the exhaust in the ceiling or, for that matter, at any level. The point from which the exhaust air is taken must, however, be properly placed with relation to the air supply point in order to get a thorough circulation and distribution of heat.

Compensating for Heat Losses

The warm air supply can be used only for ventilation or it can be so designed as to supply all the heat necessary to compensate for heat losses through walls and maintain a proper temperature. If used only for ventilation, supplying air at room temperature, it will be necessary to place direct radiators at varous points to compensate for losses. This method is preferable, because the few direct radiators necessary provide just enough heat to maintain a moderate temperature in the house during the over night period, when it would be a nuisance to keep the fan system running.

An important feature of any system for tempered air supply is the arrangement of some means of re-circulating or repassing some of the air from the theatre back through the heater, mixed with the fresh outside air. This arrangement serves two very important purposes. It permits the supply unit to handle a larger amount of air than is actually needed for ventilation and in this way insures a more rapid movement of air in the house and a more thorough circulation and it also provides a means of heating the house rapidly by passing only air from the theatres through the heater with the fresh air intake closed. The same procedure can be followed to save coal during extreme cold weather. Of course, this reducs the ventilating standard, but at times when the theatre is not filled to capacity it is useful to have a means of cutting down the fresh air supply.

Summer Ventilation

In warm weather the audience gives off no more impurities in the process of respiration or breathing than in winter and if this were the only problem to be met no more air would be needed for ventilation. There is, however, another point to be considered and it is a very serious one. During the summer a great quantity of moisture is imparted to the air by the evaporation of perspiration on the surface of the skin. This goes on at such a rapid rate that unless there is a corresponding rapid movement of air around the body to carry off the excess moisture the air soon reaches the saturation point and the audience suffers that suffocating sensation of being "stewed" in their own perspiration.

It has been found by experience that from ten to fifteen times as much air as is necessary for good winter ventilation is required during the hot months unless there is some other provision made for artificially reducing the temperature by mans of refrigeration or ice cooling plants.

Placing Exhaust Points

The enormous cost of an efficient plant of this kind is prohibitive in most cases and it is usually much better and simpler to get the cooling exect, not by lowering the temperature, but by providing the proper circulation of a large air volume.

The same fan, or fans that are used for fresh air supply in winter can be used for summer ventilation, but they will usually need to be augmented by auxiliary units, as they will either be too small by themselves for summer work or so large as to be impractical for winter.

BIG ROMANTIC APPEAL-

The Supreme Passion

"The Supreme Passion" tells a story as poignantly beautiful as the poem that inspired it.

It revolves around a beautiful young girl who finds that love is too frequently inspired by mere physical beauty. As she wishes to be loved with a deeper affection, one that will never fade, she puts her lovers to a severe test to prove their sincerity.

Besides romance the picture has stirring moments of action and speed.

MONTE BLUE AND MARY ALDEN

in

THE TENTS OF ALLAH

Presented by
EDWARD A. MAC MANUS

The artistry of "The Tents of Allah" is comparable to the pictorial perfection of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

Massive walls and towers, graceful mosques and minarets; exotic Morocco with all its lure and bizarre beauty. The extravagent luxury of the Sultan's palace; the slinking squalor of low-arched, water front cafes. Cloud-banked skies and wind-swept wastes. Life with the wandering tribes of desert bandits, plunderers of caravans.

A tale of wild adventure and intrigue. Ferocious fighting, passionate romance, powerful drama, glorious entertainment.

Beautiful, stirring and distinctly different.

ONE OF THE NATIONALLY ADVERTISED

Encore Pictures

"The Tents of Allah" boasts of Monte Blue in a characterization which rivals his marvellous Danton in D. W Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm"; Mary Alden in her greatest mother role, different and romantic.

It presents a supporting cast of tremendous dramatic talent: — Mary Thurman, Macey Harlam, Sally Crute, Frank Currier, Charles Lane, Martin Faust and others.

It reveals the adventures and romance of an American girl who brought seven years' bad luck to Morocco and of a daring young desert bandit who plundered caravans for riches but who had never stolen a woman.

MINNESOTA STATE FOREST SERVICE
OFFICE OF THE FORESTER
ST. PAUL

ADDRESS
THE FORESTER, OLD STATE CAPITOL

February 16, 1923

TO ALL EDITORS, of MINNESOTA NEWSPAPERS:

Gentlemen:

We need your assistance to clinch an opportunity, to put across our campaign to PREVENT FOREST FIRES.

A super motion picture has been produced by VITAGRAPH, entitled "THE NINETY AND NINE". It is tense, vivid drama with a splendid cast of players headed by Colleen Moore and Warner Baxter. The action takes place in a small town in the tall timber. A mammoth forest fire and the rescue of the town's populace from the scourging flames is the big thrill. It's all exceptionally well done. It is the greatest forest fire ever filmed. This production flays the carelessness that causes such great loss of human life and property damage, of which we are so well aware in this State. Upon viewing "THE NINETY AND NINE" it so impressed us with its greatness, its compelling argument, and especially its adaptability to the prevention work of this office, that we immediately arranged a tie-up with VITAGRAPH. We have prepared an interesting short reel on Fire Danger and FOREST FIRE PREVENTION. This reel will be furnished every theatre in Minnesota gratis, during their showing of "THE NINETY AND NINE".

We need publicity to create an interest in this picture in your community, to faciliate an early showing, and to aid in conveying this flaming message of FOREST FIRE PREVENTION to all Minnesota. Can you give us a story at once, from the data, furnished herewith? You cannot praise the picture too highly. It will delight young and old, and the great good it will do our cause, will be limited only by the extent of its showing. With your help, we can make it ONE-HUNDRED percent. Give it as much publicity as possible, starting now. During the showing in your city, any assistance you can extend the exhibitor will be greatly appreciated. We thank you for your cooperation in the great cause of PRESERVATION OF MINNESOTA'S FORESTS.

Yours sincerely,

W. T. Cox

State Forester

From first to last "Poor Men's Wives" has been made with both eyes on the box office. All the best known means for inspiring laughter, extracting tears and making the general pulse beat a bit faster have been cleverly called into play.

—The New York Globe.

"Poor Men's Wives" has received expert treatment from its director, Gasnier, and from the members of the cast, and it is therefore a good picture. Its mission as a photoplay is the reflection of a certain phase of human life, and this mission it fulfills in an interesting and intelligent manner.

—Robert E. Sherwood in Life.

Life is a good deal like this motion picture play. We enjoyed it—every bit of it.

—Quinn Martin in the New York World.

Even Than "Humoresque"

A BETTER PICTURE THAN "HUMORESQUE"

"A picture which will bring a throb to the heartstrings of any audience. It should prove a strong attraction for any theatre. A film epic that should be a second 'Humoresque' in so far as a box-office attraction. As an entertainment feature it will appeal to many as more desirable. There is never a moment where it fails of rapid action."—Exhibitors Herald.

WILL ECHO HEAVILY AT YOUR BOX OFFICE

"When a director can produce a picture that will play upon your sympathy and love of the better things of life and tug at your heartstrings at times almost to the point of tears, and at the same time introduce such fine comedy touches as to bring forth a smile or a laugh without causing a discordant note, he has achieved a result that will find a mighty echo in the hearts of motion picture fans. This is just what Edwin Carewe has accomplished in 'Mighty Lak a Rose.' Here is a production, Mr. Exhibitor, that you need have no fear of showing to your patrons and boosting heavily, for it will echo heavily in your box office." —Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir:-

It is the fundamental and most important part of the program of the Federation of Women's Clubs in the work for better films to endorse and encourage patronage of the best pictures.

In line with this work, I want to congratulate you on "The Dangerous Age". A representative group of women from the various organizations previewed the picture, and they were unanimous in their enthusiastic approval.

We believe great credit is due the director, John M. Stahl, that the picture was not cheapened by touches of the risque. It must have been his ability as well as his artistry that gave the splendid acting an opportunity to carry a very beautiful and really clever picture through to a logical conclusion.

Very sincerely,

The Editor's Views

Those Soaring Production Costs—The Public Hearing Season Is On—Admission Prices

THERE is cause for real concern in the reports that drift Eastward from Los Angeles these days.

One producer's remarks may be taken as a summary of the gossip that travels cross country with consistent regularity. He declared.

"We don't know where production costs are going to before another year rolls around. The figures have me dizzy.

"Players, directors, stories, every item of cost in production is climbing steadily. No one will attempt to set the limit. And it is all doubly shocking because we have been subconsciously telling ourselves for over a year that the inevitable trend was the other way.

"Personally, I don't believe this is a crazy spurt of wild extravagance. It seems inevitable. So I think the trade papers should let exhibitors know what is happening."

"Going UP!" would make a good film motto—applied to production costs, rentals, everything but admissions.

WE asked another producer for his explanation of the sudden reversal that is said to be taking the producing colony from the days of slump to days of glory.

"Your friend who told you that it was inevitable was right," he replied.

"A year ago when the quantity of production was at a low figure you could get really desirable players, directors and studio workers of all sorts at almost your own figure—because the market was glutted. But the man who considered this phase something on which to base permanent production ideas was not looking far enough ahead.

"Now that production is booming we are discovering that the players who are WANTED, the directors who are considered SURE-FIRE, are limited. Supply and demand again. Bringing back the old bidding against one another. And sending salaries soaring.

"It had to come. I don't know of any picture organization that is intelligently and with foresight developing new people. So when production booms we have to go into a limited market for our people."

They couldn't put Humpty Dumpty together after his fall—but picture costs stumble and then start climbing again.

PRODUCTION costs soar, rentals forge upward—the end is not in sight and no one attempts to guess what it will be.

But one strange change of feeling is coming out of the situation.

We happen to know the names that William A. Johnston was called, the letters he received when he had the audacity to suggest that percentage booking was the solution of the ever-climbing rental for the majority of exhibitors.

And on Tuesday, in Albany, we sat beside William A. Johnston while an exhibitor told him—reluctantly, it seemed to us—"I guess percentage is the answer. I know I would welcome a clean percentage break now. It's the only relief I see for the exhibitor in a fair-sized city. They've had my back to the wall for a year now with their rental demands."

Miracles do happen. And, maybe, we will yet see real percentage booking universal in those cities and theatres to which it is adapted.

Don't forget—there is a difference between the ideal of percentage and the sort of trickery "heads I win, tails you lose" percentage to which we have been most accustomed.

The "heads I win, tails you lose" is sometimes pronounced by the exhibitor, sometimes by the producer.

Neither wins in the end.

Such conceptions of percentage—"percentage with many strings attached"—are far from the sort that is desirable.

Pennsylvania bans "The Pilgrim." Probably intended to hasten the repeal of New York's censorship law.

PUBLIC hearings are usually important looking affairs—that means little. Whether the subject was tariff, taxes, or censorship we must admit that we have attended them in the past always with some feeling of fear.

For, it must be said, that the picture industry has not always—in fact, has seldom—made the best of impressions.

The best of film men may make the worst of appearances when speaking before a public body. And outside volunteers, hurriedly recruited, always mean well but often their facts are twisted.

We can't say who did the planning, or to what extent there was planning, at Tuesday's hearing on the repeal of the New York censorship legislation. But we must say that for once we felt proud of the representation made by the motion picture industry.

There was an attitude of dignity, knowledge, common sense and confidence about the industry's representatives. There was none of the panic, the frantic wind-jamming, the lame apology that has too often been the case.

In fact, it may be said in all good taste, that in these essentials the industry contrasted more than favorably with the very eminent representatives of the reform element.

Some day reformers will learn not to bait Senator James Walker. "Jimmy" is T. N. T. at the repartee stuff.

THERE is an undercurrent of political murmuring about the possibility of the censorship law being repealed.

We remember that the week after Election Day this page ventured a warning to the industry that the celebrating should not be begun prematurely. There's many a slip twixt the cup and the lip in political battles.

New York's Senate is Democratic by a small margin and may therefore be considered safe for censor abolition as well as democracy. But the Senate is Republican.

And the repeal measure, it seems, is being defined as strictly a political measure.

And there are jobs at stake. In a year when Republican jobs are scarce.

Governor Smith will sign the measure if it reaches him. But don't forget that there is still an "if" in the calculation.

The measure failing, Governor Smith may attempt to reconstitute the board.

That is in the cards.

THERE is much to be said on both sides in the current agitation regarding admission prices. It would seem that there are spots where prices could well come down—and others where they might possibly be boosted.

Which seems reasonable.

There are many cities of medium size where admissions reached the half-dollar mark and traveled beyond that are not constituted to pay such prices for amusement.

Expensive prologues, expensive orchestras were fed to these communities—where they were often not appreciated nor desired. These patrons buy picture entertainment—and today they won't pay for the frills in order to get the picture.

Showmen marvelled during the war years at cities which they knew would never, in the old days, pay real prices even for the most widely heralded stage road attractions, apparently meeting the heavy demands of the picture houses.

Now the reaction has set in for communities of this sort. The frills must go first. Then let's see where we stand.

Crowds Applaud Arguments for Repeal of Censorship

Popular Opposition to the Law Is Fully Evidenced

HURLING statement after statement direct at Canon William S. Chase, of Brooklyn, and other reformers who partially encircled him, Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, appearing at the hearing at the State Capitol in Albany this afternoon on the Walker-O'Connor bills, calling for the repeal of the censorship law in this state, swept the crowd with him as he presented argument after argument in refuting assertions previously made by the reform group. While Will H. Hays was expected to attend the hearing, he was most ably represented by Mr. Pettijohn, whose speech easily became the feature of the afternoon.

It was generally conceded after the hearing that the motion picture industry had created the better impression. There is no question but that the bill will be reported out of committee, as a result of today's hearing, and go to a vote in both the Senate and the Assembly.

Today's hearing, like others which have taken place on the censorship matters, was plentifully besprinkled from time to time with personalities. There was a sharp tilt between Canon Chase and Senator Walker, and, later on, another in which the Senator figured with Dr. H. L. Bowlby, of the Lord's Day Alliance. At times, the crowd, which packed every inch of the Senate Chamber, became so boisterous that Senator Bernard Downing, of New York, in charge of the hearing, had extreme difficulty in maintaining order.

While the hearing was originally arranged to be held in one of the committee rooms, the crowd was so large at 2 o'clock that it was decided to hold it in the Senate Chamber. A delegation of fifty or more from New York, headed by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, and recently elected head of the New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, arrived shortly before noon, their number being augmented by other trains from the East and West.

Chairman Downing announced that the hearing would be limited to two hours, and that those opposed to the repeal of censorship would be heard first. These included Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein, of New York; Mrs. Ella Boole, president of the State W. C. T. U.; Canon Chase; Mrs. Clarence Waterman, head of the Motion Picture Alliance; Ella O'Grady, former Deputy Police Commissioner of New York City; Mrs. Frederick Pruyn, of Albany; Mrs. F. W. Coulson, of the State Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. John D. Whish, of the Mothers' Club of Albany; Mrs. Everett Hamilton, of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. L. D. S. Banker, of the Alliance of Women's Clubs of Brooklyn; Mrs. Chauncey Hamlin, representing Buffalo and Western New York; Dr. Frederick M. Gordon, general secretary of the Brooklyn Federation of Churches; Mrs. Henry Streeber, of the Women's Club of Albany; Frank Niles, of Syracuse, and Dr. Bowlby, of the Lord's Day Alliance.

The arguments presented by these differed but little. Rabbi Goldstein claimed that censorship was a safeguard of moral freedom, while Mrs. Boole asserted that the commission had accomplished all that was expected. Mrs. Waterman spoke of some of the deletions made by the commission, while Mrs. O'Grady declared that she could now go to the movies without a feeling of shame, and that the committee considering the bill should commune with its conscience before voting. The others simply stated the action which had been taken by the clubs to which they belonged, requesting that censorship continue.

There was a sharp tilt between Canon Chase and Senator Walker, which really dated back to just what Senator Walker had said a year ago. When Canon Chase closed his argument he was greeted by both hisses and applause.

The speakers for the industry were announced by former Senator Walter Herrick. The first of these, Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, of Brooklyn, presented a wonderful argument and one that was listened to with rapt attention. Dr. Hillis introduced himself by saying that he represented no one but himself, stood upon his own feet and was speaking as a citizen, but was opposed to censorship in any department of American life.

Alice Duer Miller, the well known writer of fiction, and whose stories have frequently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, was the only writer present at the hearing, in sharp contrast to previous years, when Rex Beach, Thomas Dixon and others equally as well known had been present and spoke.

In the course of her talk, Mrs. Miller said that perhaps censorship had been a bit better administered in New York State than in some of the other states. She furnished some splendid illustrations, however, of the nonsensical manner in which censorship is handled in so many instances. She said that one title, which originally appeared as "I shall kill Lester Croak," had been changed to "I shall destroy Lester Croak."

"What do you think the commission would have done," inquired Senator Downing, "if the title had read, 'I shall croak Croak'?"

The crowd laughed.

Edward P. Howard, editor-in-chief of the American Press Association, the next speaker, said that he represented 347 weekly newspapers in the state. Mr. Howard spoke mainly from the angle of the press, declaring that censorship was wrong foundamentally and dangerous to the liberty of the people. He stated that newspapers were opposed to censorship and that on the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech rested Americanism.

Frederick Howe, former director of the People's Institute, was the next speaker. He stated that the industry must be allowed to expand freely, and declared that he had frequently seen scenario writers shift this way and that way to meet the demands of 47 kinds of censorship. The speaker asserted that motion pictures had cleaned themselves, not through censorship, but by the demand of the people for wholesome product.

No sooner had Charles Pettijohn, the next speaker, launched into his arguments than he had the committee and the crowd generally with him.

"I'm proud of the industry and its achievements," said Mr. Pettijohn. A moment later he refuted assertions made by Canon Chase that the citizens of Massachusetts had been bought in the recent election when censorship was downed by a tremendous majority.

"I won't backstep or apologize for a single moment for this industry," said Mr. Pettijohn. He spoke of the President calling on the industry when the war started to prove to the nations of the world that America was preparing to help them. He referred to the thousands of films which were sent abroad at that time by saying that they were the first ammunition which America had sent across the waters.

"Why don't you tell the committee that?" thundered Mr. Pettijohn, as he pointed his finger directly at Canon Chase. "Why don't you tell the committee that at the present time in every hospital in this land where soldier boys are now being treated that motion pictures are being shown free of charge, and if some of the men are too torn by shock and shell to sit up and witness these, that they are thrown upon the ceiling? Why don't you tell the committee what the motion picture has done in teaching the people coal conservation and food conservation? Even you, Canon Chase, don't possess the courage to publicly say that there has ever been one inch of film or one exhibitor whose Americanism could be questioned for a moment. There are quack doctors and quack preachers. Censorship, to my mind, is the most un-American legislation that has ever been foisted upon the people."

At this point Assemblyman Clayton, anxious to stop the arguments which were being presented calling for the repeal of the law, and which were gaining friends every moment, called upon Chairman Downing that the allotted time had expired.

"Don't think for a minute," said Senator Downing, "that you are going to censor the chair."

The crowd howled its applause.

Peter J. Brady, prominent in the ranks of the New York State Federation of Labor, spoke briefly. Assemblyman Clayton requested fifteen minutes for rebuttal. Chairman Downing objected, but changed his mind at Senator Walker's request.

George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, was then introduced. He started off by saying that the members of the commission were human and made mistakes. He declared that it was a generally admitted fact in the industry that the commission was exceedingly liberal in its judgment of pictures, and always gave the benefit of the doubt. There was some squabbling between Mr. Cobb and Senator Sheridan, but Mr. Cobb continued as he narrated the work done by the commission, declaring that there had been but 54 appeals last year from eliminations made.

The last speaker of the day was Mr. O'Reilly. In the course of his short speech he cited several eliminations made by the commission as showing the utter nonsense of it all.

"There was one picture," said Mr. O'Reilly, "showing a man drowning in a whiskey barrel. The title was, 'Oh, Death, Where Is Thy Sting?' The commission eliminated this title on the ground that it was sacrilegious."

The hearing adjourned at 5 o'clock. It will probably be several days before the committee reports the bill out, and it may be two or three weeks yet before it goes to a vote in either house.

Woods, Harris and Buchanan Form New Producing Company

ANOTHER film producing company is active in Los Angeles, due to the fact that releasing contracts have just been signed at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios by Frank E. Woods, president of Associated Authors, and Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation and Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Associated Authors, made up of Frank E. Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan, is one of the newest concerns to be established in the picture industry, and promises to be one of the most active, judging by plans now under consideration.

"Formed for the purpose of promoting a closer association of authors with regard to the production of pictures," said Mr. Woods, "the Associated Authors will devote themselves to the developing of special features of the very highest type. Our first offering will be 'The Talisman,' and Wallace Beery, who played the role of Richard the Lionhearted in 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood,' will be featured in this same role in the Sir Walter Scott classic."

The pictures turned out by the Associated Authors will be released through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, a subsidiary of United Artists Corporation, owned and controlled by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith.

In the affiliation of this new organization with that owned by the four big stars and producers there is a great deal of sentiment. It is the story of dreams come true. For many years it has been the hope of Miss Pickford, Chaplin, Fairbanks and Griffith that some day an organization headed by Frank E. Woods would become associated with that owned by the four stars.

It has not yet been decided definitely at what studio the Associated Authors will operate. This is to be arranged shortly by Clarke Thomas, associated for years with Thomas H. Ince, and who has been appointed general manager of the new organization.

The production plan of the Associated Authors is unique in that they will produce instead of attempting simultaneous operations. The present plan is for Mr. Woods to do "The Talisman" as the first offering, and when photography is complete Elmer Harris will put a picture into work. As soon as all scenes for this have been taken, Thompson Buchanan will then start a production.

In addition to being producers, each of the three authors named is an officer in the new organization. Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan are both vice-presidents, while Frank Woods holds the portfolio of president, with Clarke Thomas acting as general manager.

"Now that our releasing agency has been established," said Mr. Woods, "I will start at once to gather a cast for 'The Talisman.' It is our hope to have this production ready as one of the picture offerings for the coming spring. Work will start as soon as the cast is chosen, by which time we will be definitely established in a studio.

Form Corporation to Develop Picture Industry in China

C. S. KWEI, a Chinese newspaperman, announced at the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, that a new corporation backed by Chinese and American capital has been formed to show motion pictures throughout China. The new organization is called the Peacock Corporation, which has, Mr. Kwei declared, already purchased eighty pictures for showing in the Far East.

Mr. Kwei pointed out that at the present time there were only about 100 picture theatres in all China and said that the Peacock Corporation, of which he is now a member, intended to build many more and hoped to have a big chain of houses.

"Of course, the trouble has been that motion pictures have been shown in China with American and English titles," he told his auditors. "We intend to translate your titles into Chinese, which will not only make them entertaining for our countrymen in general, but will have an educational force far greater than the newspapers. The Chinaman seldom reads the newspapers, but he will see pictures, he will get instruction in his language and he will learn how others live through the high class pictures now being issued. However, we must have action pictures to keep our audiences entertained.

"We intend to train a native corps of about 1,000 in the handling of projection machines and it is probable that before we have erected our theatres we will send out shows in wagons and in this manner pave the way for our theatres."

In this connection an interview with Mrs. Caroline Eager, writer, club woman and motion picture crusader of Los Angeles, sent out by Associated First National is interesting. Mrs. Eager has just returned from a tour of the world, and during her trip gave special attention to pictures.

Speaking of pictures in China, Mrs. Eager said: "There is no laughter at all in the Chinese theatres. The Chinese take their pictures very seriously. The American sense of humor is entirely lost. They like high class plays such as those starring the Talmadge sisters, Mary Pickford, Katherine MacDonald. A picture such as Norma Talmadge's 'Smilin' Through' has a big appeal to them. They seem more spiritual than the Japanese, who want to either gasp or laugh —laugh uproarously, in fact.

"The silent drama is anything but silent in Japan," continued Mrs. Eager. "The titles are shown in American words, but a native stands on the stage and translates them and the audiences roars in glee."

In explaining further the work to be done by the new Peacock Corporation, Mr. Kwei declared that the company hoped soon to undertake the making of big Chinese motion pictures for distribution in China.

"We want China to know America better and we want America to really know the Chinese. The Chinese like Americans and we have every reason to believe Americans like us. We hope to broaden that good feeling while we are making our venture successful."

First Arbitration Proceedings Under Uniform Contract Is Held in New York

THE first official co-operative meeting held under the new uniform contract, as announced several weeks ago, was held Wednesday afternoon, and resulted in the organization of the Joint Arbitration Board representative of the exhibitors in the New York territory and exchangemen. The meeting, which was held at 1540 Broadway, New York, was conducted under arbitration rules adopted recently and similar to those of the American Arbitration Society. The complete arbitration agreement will be published in Moving Picture World next week.

The arbitration board, which will handle all disputes between exhibitor and exchanges, includes six members, three representative exhibitors and three representative exchangemen. The exhibitors officially inducted to office Wednesday include William Landau, present head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce; Sol Raives and J. Jame. The exchangemen are represented by Louis Rosenbluh, manager of the New York Fox Exchange; Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, and Bill Raynor of the New York Pathe Exchange.

The Arbitration Board lost no time in organizing, and when its organization was perfected, it proceeded immediately to take action on a batch of complaints that demand adjustment. The Arbitration Board will meet at regular intervals when all aggrievances—those of distributors as well as exhibitors—will be acted upon.

Considerable interest is prevalent in exhibitor circles throughout the country regarding the outcome of these joint arbitrary proceedings which are provided for in the new uniform contract as announced recently by both the Will Hays and New York theatre owners' organizations.

The arbitration agreement, which embraces nineteen rules governing procedure, was adopted last week by a committee representative of the exhibitors and the F. I. L. M. Club of New York. The arbitration agreement was drawn up with the advice and suggestion of Judge Grossman of the Arbitration Society of America and harmonizes with provisions embodied in the uniform contract. The meeting on Wednesday of this week was the first held since the promulgation of the uniform contract.

The arbitration agreement was adopted by the following committee: Bernard Edelhurtz, Leo Brecker, William Brandt and S. A. Moross, representing the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, and Joe Unger of First National, Louis Rosenbluh of Fox, W. C. Herman of Universal, Arthur Abels of Metro and Sam Zierler of Commonwealth, representing the F. I. L. M. Club. Meetings of the arbirtation board will be held every Wednesday.

Sawyer Calls Good Stories Chief Requisite of Pictures

By T. S. da Ponte

THAT the story is now the real motivating power in pictures; that a good star is a worth-while addition, but is of secondary importance; that a well rounded supporting cast is, of course, also a great help to making a film a winner; that magnificent or artistic sets of a surety have their place in pictures whose stories call for them—but that star, cast and settings must all play second fiddle to the story, is the opinion of Arthur Sawyer, who, after a short visit to New York, left Sunday for the West Coast to make eight big pictures during this year.

These pictures will all be made in accordance with Mr. Sawyer's ideas as to what he believes the public wants, and what he thinks, therefore, will make most money for exhibitors.

"'Your Friend and Mine' will be finished in about two weeks and then we'll start on 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew,'" said Mr. Sawyer. "These two pictures will wind up our contract with Metro, after which S-L Pictures will make other distributing arrangements.

"We have all the money necessary to get worth-while stories and to make pictures that will be a credit to these stories, as S-L is owned by Associated Pictures Corporation, of which Marcus A. Jacobowsky is president. Mr. Jacobowsky also is one of the country's foremost financiers and a leading banker.

"Big pictures are now the thing in the industry. The public wants the big story strongly produced and that's what we're going to give them. We will have two directors working, one of whom will be Clarence Badger, and another whom we have not definitely settled on.

"Willard Mack, the noted playwright, from whose short play 'Your Friend and Mine' is being scenarioized, is at present writing a play for Willie Collier which will be shown first on Broadway and then put into screen form. Mr. Mack is also dramatizing the Jack Boyle story, 'No Questions Asked,' and after a stage run this also will be shown on the screen. Then there are a number of other of Mr. Mack's plays, all of which have the dramatic 'punch,' which we have the option of filming, as well as any others which he may turn out in the next few years."

Speaking of the two productions which will be S-L's last to go through Metro, Mr. Sawyer said they have all the requisites to make them winners. Not the least of these are the stars, he said. In "Your Friend and Mine" Enid Bennett has the principal role. She has been heard of a great deal recently because of her portrayal of the chief feminine character in "Robin Hood." In "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" Lon Chaney will have the chief part, and, said Mr. Sawyer, "we will pay him the biggest salary he has ever received."

"We pin great faith to Barbara La Mar, who will star in several of our pictures," Mr. Sawyer stated. "She has already amply demonstrated her ability, and her name in a cast is recognized as having great pulling power at the box office.

"We are putting up a four-unit stage studio in Hollywood," Mr. Sawyer said, "which is being hastened to be ready for occupancy within the next month. This will greatly facilitate us in the making of our pictures. At our Hollywood office Margaret Ettinger has been installed as director of Coast publicity for the various S-L productions."

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," one of the S-L productions, has only been out six weeks, but is "already on velvet," according to Mr. Sawyer. "That largely demonstrates the power of a good story," he said.

Vote Against Sunday Shows

At a special election held in Mechanicville, N. Y., the past week, a proposition for Sunday shows in that city was defeated by a vote of 614 to 1,697. Seldom has there been an election in Mechanicville which attracted as much interest and attention. The churches of the city were united in opposing the proposition, and just before the election a parade was staged in which hundreds of Sunday School children marched.

No sooner were the results of the election announced, than the bells in every church pealed forth the announcement. This is the second city in the Capital District, in which Sunday shows have been attempted to the extent of sounding out public opinion, within the last month. Rensselaer went solidly against it.

Roach Buys Film Ranch to Meet Demand for More Studio Space

PATHE'S new contracts with Hal Roach to meet exhibitor demands for more of the class of comedy and other product which has made the Roach Studios popular, have caused the producer again to add materially to his Culver City plant.

Mr. Roach announces his purchase of a $100,000 "film ranch," comprising ten acres adjacent to the "lot" which has been the scene of Harold Lloyd's advance into the front rank of screen stars, and has developed the popular Our Gang Comedies with their "Zoo" accessory.

The film ranch acquisition will house all of the exteriors for the seven producing units which Mr. Roach plans to have in operation by the end of March. It will become the permanent home of the Our Gang company, including the menagerie. One of the first buildings to go up on the new property will contain a school room where the youthful members of "Our Gang" will pursue their ordinary education.

The Pathe-Roach contract with Will Rogers to star in a series of thirteen two-reel comedies enters into the Roach Studio expansion plans. It is announced that the famous "Follies" comedian will arrive in Los Angeles to begin his screen activities some time during the month of March his contract with Ziegfeld compelling him to remain with the "Follies" show until the completion of its New York run.

A total of eight units will produce under the Roach banner this year, the entire output being for Pathe distribution. Mr. Roach's plans include many new production activities.

"In increasing my program this year," says Producer Roach, "I am trying to keep pace with the added demand for productions of the higher type. Exhibitors are willing to pay big prices for pictures if they are given the right kind."

Paramount Broadens Out

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has extended its exploitation activities to Mexico City, and E. E. Shauer, manager of the foreign department, announces the appointment of Leon J. Bamberger, assistant manager of the division of exploitation, as the representative.

Mr. Bamberger will be temporarily attached to the Mexico City exchange and his chief activities will concern the exhibition of Paramount Pictures at the Olympia Theatre.

Miss Dunn Metro Editor

Winifred Dunn, twenty-four years old, has assumed the duties of scenario editor at the Metro studios. The appointment was announced by Joseph W. Engel, first vice-president of Metro and general manager of that organization's West Coast studios.

The new Metro script chief, it is said, is probably the youngest scenario editor in the country.

Schwartzman Appointed

Samuel Schwartzman has been appointed general counsel of Preferred Pictures and the Al Lichtman Corporation, according to an announcement made by J. C. Bachmann. Mr. Schwartzman has been prominently identified with the film industry for the past five years.

Compensation Dead for Year

There will be no compulsory workmen's compensation and insurance law for the District of Columbia for at least another year, as the result of the failure of Congress to enact either the Underhill or Fitzgerald measures. Under the terms of both these bills, exhibitors, exchanges and other employers in Washington would have been compelled to carry insurance on the lives of their employees, payable in case of death as a result of injuries received in the course of their work, and to pay compensation for injuries received. The only difference between the bills was that the Underhill draft permitted the employer to carry insurance with commercial companies while the Fitzgerald bill required the creation of a government fund to handle the insurance.

Changes in Managers

G. C. Maxey has resigned as First National branch manager of the Seattle office to take effect March 17. C. H. Feldman, who has been branch manager of the Portland office, has ben transferred to Seattle. Charles W. Koerner, in charge of the Butte office, will take Feldman's place in Portland, and Harry Sigmond, who has been a salesman in the Seattle office of First National, has been promoted to branch manager of the Butte office.

Spearing With Universal

As another instance of Carl Laemmle's earnest endeavor to improve moving pictures, he has engaged James O. Spearing, motion picture editor of the New York Times, to put into practice in the scenario department at Universal City, the ideas and ideals which he has so often expressed in print as a critic. For almost five years Mr. Spearing has been, through the columns of the Times as its motion picture critic, reviewing the current pictures in New York City with a conscientious, unbiased, uncompromising but constructive pen.

Hugo With Levey

Francis M. Hugo, three times Secretary of State of New York, has become chairman of the board of directors and chairman of the executive committee of National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., the Harry Levey company. Mr. Levey plans soon to introduce Mr. Hugo to the trade at a luncheon.

Flynn Joins Goldwyn

Emmett J. Flynn is the latest prominent director to attach his signature to a long-term Goldwyn contract. He will head a production unit, in keeping with that new corporation's production policy, with a complete staff.

His first picture will be a screen version of a famous American novel which is now being adapted to continuity form.

Rowland Goes to Coast

Richard A. Rowland, general manager of Associated First National, left for the West Coast Thursday, March 8, to supervise production. Mr. Rowland will be absent from New York several weeks.

Want Better Machines

Exchange Managers Complain Against Poor Projection Apparatus

A campaign is to be waged by exchange managers of Washington, D. C., against the continued use of projection machines in the theatres when the machines are so badly in need of repairs or adjustments as to ruin films. The matter came up at a luncheon meeting of the Washington Film Board of Trade at which a general complaint was heard that there are a great many machines in this territory that are in bad shape.

One of the managers complained that a new print of a big production that was purchased for Baltimore City was "junked" after fifteen bookings, covering about fifty exhibition days. On many pictures it is impossible to get more than twenty bookings on a single print.

It was stated that only between fifty and sixty per cent. of the service formerly obtained from a print is now to be had and that exhibitors admit their machines are bad and that one of the reasons for not making necessary changes is the condition of business.

A committee, consisting of S. A. Galanty, of the American Releasing Corporation; Jake Flax, of the Liberty Film Corporation, and J. A. Bachman, of the Educational Film Corporation, was appointed to look into the matter with a view to improving this situation.

Going to France

Lois Wilson Is Selected for Miss Anne Morgan's Delegation

Lois Wilson, who plays the leading role in James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," has been nominated as the candidate of the motion picture industry for New York's Good Will Delegation to France. This delegation will be sent to France by Miss Anne Morgan's American Committee for Devastated France.

The nominations closed recently and Miss Wilson's nomination, which was made by lot under the auspices of the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau, was announced, along with those of representatives of almost every other important industry and business in the city, in the New York Globe, which is officially sponsoring the enterprise of Miss Morgan's committee.

Day New Sales Head

Edgar B. Hatrick, general manager of the International News Reel Corporation, announces the appointment of Harvey B. Day, veteran exchange manager, as sales manager for the corporation, to fill the vacancy left by R. V. Anderson, who recently resigned to become sales promotion manager for Universal.

Day already has assumed the office and now makes his headquarters in the Universal home office, where he has established liaison between the news reel organization and Universal, distributors of the product.

Opens Buffalo Exchange

A new Al Lictman exchange has been opened at 265 Franklin street, Buffalo, N. Y., for the distribution of Preferred Pictures beginning with "Poor Men's Wives." The first four Lichtman releases will continue to be handled by the Bond Photoplay Corporation, which has represented Lichtman in Buffalo up to now. These releases are "Rich Men's Wives," "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "The Hero."

To facilitate the operation of this new exchange Al Lichtman has arranged with United Artists for the physical handling of his pictures.

Calls Off Negotiations on Uniform Contract

Sydney Cohen Accuses Will Hays of Violating Agreements

ALLEGING that Will H. Hays has not kept faith with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Theatre Owners, has written to the head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors breaking off negotiations on the uniform contract.

Among other charges, Mr. Cohen says Mr. Hays has acquiesced in the acquiring of independent theatres by the producers despite the fact that Mr. Hays had promised that this practice would be discontinued. It is also charged that instead of unfair non-theatrical competition being reduced, it has been allowed to expand to an extent that makes it a grave menace to the independent theatre owners, and that the contract is not an instrument that would give protection to the deposits and advance payments of exhibitors.

Asked for a comment on the letter, Courtland Smith, assistant to Mr. Hays, said: "Of course we have nothing to say." It also was intimated that Mr. Cohen's letter was not so worded as to necessitate a reply, the exhibitor-president doubtless not wishing to enter into a controversy but merely to put himself on record. Mr. Smith declined to comment on a report current many weeks ago that Mr. Cohen had agreed to seventeen out of the twenty-one clauses in the contract.

COPY OF LETTER SENT TO WILL H. HAYS BY MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA:

February 27th, 1923.

Hon. Will H. Hays, President,
Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America,

532 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Dear Mr. Hays:

This will acknowledge the receipt of your letters of February 7th and 17th, in which you suggest a further conference on the contract form between the Producing and Distributing companies which you represent and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, as represented by our National Officers and Board of Directors.

It is the consensus of our opinion that a contract form already signed by yourself representing certain Producers and Distributors, and even a few theatre owners, widely heralded through the publicity department of your office as a finished proposition, colorfully presented as having been accepted by all parties interested, and to be used at once and made retroactive in the business relations of these Producing and Distributing companies and the theatre owners cannot, of course, be logically made the basis for any further conference at this time.

You delivered on Saturday, January 27th, a letter to this office containing twenty copies of the proposed contract and at the same time you asked for a meeting of the committee of our organiation on February 2nd at your office. On Monday, January 29th, I delivered a letter to your office requesting eighty additional copies of the contract form to be submitted to members of our Executive Committee, Presidents of the state organizations and leaders in different parts of the country. These copies were sent to this office on Wednesday, January 31st, and immediately sent out to our leaders as indicated. In the same letter I stated to you that "you will understand how impossible it will be for us to have a meeting with any practical results on Friday of this week as you mention."

But on Friday, February 2nd, two days after these drafts were received from you and mailed out, and before this office could possibly get replies and opinions from our organization leaders, you held your meeting with members of your organization and a few local exhibitors, none of whom had been present during our negotiations with you for several months previous, and at that meeting on February 2nd you adopted the contract form, of your own draft, and promulgated, advertised and attempted to apply to the theatre owners of the country this contract. After having done this you now ask us to join you in conference to consider the contract above referred to.

Your reasons for acceleration of action, and the sudden and unexpected burst of speed on your part in calling your meeting together two days after you gave us drafts of this contract to be sent out, may be known to you but still remains a mystery to the Theatre Owners and the public at large, unless it seemed advisable to you that this contract, right or wrong, should be adopted on this particular second day of February which was just prior to the breaking of the news to the Theatre Owners and to the public in general of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against one of the members of your organization, a producer and distributor who was present with you at previous conferences at your office on this proposed contract.

We have most patiently conducted negotiations with you since the 12th day of June, 1922, striving for a more equitable business contract and the elimination of certain abuses existing within the Industry.

While the members of your organization and the members of the producers' organizations whom you represent were all in New York City and could be assembled on short notice and without any great inconvenience or sacrifice of time and expense, the situation was quite different with us. The members of our National Board of Directors and Executive Committee came to New York from various parts of the United States at great cost to themselves in time and money, and because of the numerous delays and week-end vacations which members of your organization injected, it was necessary for our members either to stay over in New York and lie idle, or return to their several states and reassemble in New York again, as they were asked to do several times.

They did this in a spirit of cooperation and fairness that no stone might be left unturned toward the achievement of the purposes which you set up at the call of this meeting. We gave much time and effort to the matter and although we realized that you personally were the representative of your employers, we did not learn except through our negotiations, that you had no power other than to carry out their instructions. Still we were relying on your repeated assurances that you conceived it to be your duty to be as fair to the theatre owners as to the producers, and that you would do your best to prevent a continuance of the unfair business processes of the past. Apparently you were as helpless in this relation as in your other announced intentions.

As I advised you previously, the same course was pursued with your last draft of the proposed contract form as with your other communications in this matter, and this contract form as prepared by you was immediately sent to our Officers, National Board of Directors and Executive Committee for their consideration. We have received protests from these men against the adoption by our organization of the contract you submitted on the grounds that it is inequitable and unfair to the Theatre Owner, lacks mutuality and that no provisions for the remedying of the abuses complained of by the Theatre Owners of the Country for which the conferences were primarily held, have been provided for in the contract or otherwise.

The members of our Committee complain of the violation of your definite promise and agreement made with our Organization that no contract or other statement would be issued from your office until our conferences were entirely concluded and agreements reached on all subjects which would be made a part of the contract, after which a joint statement was to be issued and signed by both sides. The contract phases were still in a fluid state of negotiation and there were several outstanding objections. We advised you in person at our last conference on November 3rd and again by letter on November 13th that "to issue a contract with only a part of our differences adjusted would cause endless confusion, and this is particularly true when the most important matters affecting Theatre Owners have not been agreed upon as yet."

The impropiety of your move in promulgating contracts in this way may not indeed be even apparent to you and we hesitate to even believe that its projection was of your own initiative, but prefer to accept the situation as having been forced upon you by your principals.

Through articles in the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune, we were amazed to learn that this socalled "uniform" contract had been adopted and promulgated by you. In the New York Times of February 3rd is the statement "a contract which is expected to eliminate waste in the moving picture industry, result in better pictures and eventually bring about lower admission charges, was signed yesterday by representatives of thirty producers and the Theatre Owners at a meeting in Will H. Hays' office."

This article will do considerable damage and injury to the Theatre Owners because the impression was created that the price of film to the Theatre Owner has been reduced, when as a matter of fact since the commencement of our conferences with you, the cost of film to the Theatre Owner has materially increased and this despite the fact that the Theatre Owners have suffered the worst business depression in their history during the past year.

Reduced film prices mean less revenue to the Producers and Distributors you represent, and it is an obvious business proposition that they are not paying out the tremendous cost incident to the maintenance of your organization and yourself for the purpose of having you bring about a reduction in their revenue.

The abuses complained of by our National Officers and Executive Committee members, voicing the sentiments of the Theatre Owners of the United States, at our various conferences with you, have not been remedied but instead have become worse. Accessory costs have not been reduced. Despite your statement that unfair nontheatrical competition should be eliminated, the very members of your organization have established special departments to solicit the business of those who are operating nontheatrical centers in unfair and direct competition with Theatre Owners. In most instances, these

MichiganCensorMoveDenounced by Exhibitors in Annual Meet

FOUR hundred members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan met in their second annual get-together in Detroit, March 1, and this is what they heard from the chief speakers: Denunciation of the censorship move by the State of Michigan. Condemnation of certain groups within the industry which have cast aspersions on producers as being too commercial. Explanation of why half million dollar salaries are paid. Assurance that motion pictures are, in fact, not to be pitied or scorned.

The meeting brought a representative showing from all parts of the state and half a dozen guests of national importance. The general feeling is that this year's banquet and attendant expression of opinion have gone far in solidifying the Michigan owners' organization.

The banquet was held in the Hotel Statler and was presided over by W. S. McLaren, of Jackson. With him at the head of the speakers' table was Ray J. Branch, president of the F. I. L. M. Club of Detroit.

Former Judge Alfred J. Murphy was the man who came out flatly in denunciation of "the tyrrany of censorship," declaring that the legislation recently introduced in the Michigan legislature was un-American, uncalled for, unnecessary and impertinent. He expressed the belief that the Bible, Shakespeare and all paintings of the masters are just as censorable as the movies—but, of course, nobody would listen to proposals to tamper with such works.

Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures Corporation of New York, followed Judge Murphy, and he it was who took up the challenge thrown down by the Fairbanks-Pickford-Talmadge groups to the effect that motion pictures today were beset by commercialism.

"Commercialism in its best phases is never a thing to be ashamed of," declared Mr. Friend. "Our greatest industries owe their development to it. Motion pictures have taken their place high up in the rank of these dominant industries, and they will go higher through the intelligent application of principles of business—sound business."

Marcus Loew responded to a point brought out by Judge Murphy, who had declared that "paying half million dollar yearly salaries to eight-year-old boys is wasteful and extravagant." Inasmuch as Mr. Loew is the one most vitally concerned in a contract answering that description, his comeback was eagerly awaited. He declared that salaries paid to stars are not regulated by the producer or the exhibitor, but by the public.

The real optimist of the program was Clarence Budington Kelland, formerly a Detroit newspaper man and now a nationally known author of novels, whose "Backbone" is soon to be released by Distinctive Pictures. He attributed present agitation to too many people who are "under-brained and over-mouthed."

"These people do not think the matter through clearly," said Mr. Kelland. "They believe the motion picture in ten years should reach the goal of perfection which other arts have failed to reach in ten thousand years of striving. The producers are struggling, I believe, to give constantly better pictures, but in the meantime there are only two things for the exhibitor and producer to keep in mind—give as much pleasure as you can and make as much money as you can."

Others at the speakers' table were Earl W. Hammons, president of Educational Pictures; Sydney Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; H. N. Marin, of Distinctive Pictures Corporation of New York.

Chief among the entertainment features of the evening was a minstrel show entitled "A Trip to the Film Building," produced by Ralph Peckham and H. M. Richey, with a cast composed of Richard Lynch and Wallace Baker, end men, and Edward Higley, Jacob Sullivan, Edward Murphy, James Allen, Frank Stuart, Herbert Fawser, J. Oliver Brooks and Mr. Peckham as the minstrel men.

Officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan are W. S. McLaren, president; H. M. Richey, general manager; Phil Gleichman, Detroit, vice-president; H. T. Hall, Detroit, secretary, and F. R. Rumler, Detroit, treasurer.

The board of directors is composed of Claude E. Cady, Lansing; W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; A. J. Kleist, Pontiac; Herb L. Weil, Port Huron; James C. Ritter, Detroit; Charles Q. Carlisle, Saginaw; J. F. Wuerth, Ann Arbor; William W. Slocum, Detroit; J. R. Denniston, Monroe; Charles Garfield, Flint, and Fred de Lodder, Detroit.

Wants Klieg Eye Preventive

A reward of $5,000 for the discovery of a preventive for "Klieg Eyes" was announced by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The announcement followed discovery at the studio in Culver City, Cal., that during the past two weeks 113 actors and actresses had been on the hospital list from the affliction that not only incapacitates, but causes agony.

Branch Managers Meet

Hodkinson Officials Make Plans for "Down to the Sea in Ships"

W. F. Seymour, division sales manager for the eastern district of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, held a conference of all branch managers for the eastern district at the home office last week.

The purpose of this conference was the formulating of sales plans covering Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships," the whaling picture just finishing its third week at the Cameo Theatre, New York, where it has been playing to capacity audiences daily.

Back From Honeymoon

Advices to Pathe from Los Angeles report Harold Lloyd and Mildred Davis returned from their short honeymoon trip and the comedian's immediate start on the production of a new feature comedy in the series for Pathe release.

In Charge of Theatre

Announcement has been made by John Zanst, general manager of the William Fox circuit, of the appointment of S. Barret McCormick as managing director of the William Fox Oakland Theatre at Oakland, Cal.

Daylight Saving Fails

Exhibitors Jubilant Over Failure to Re-enact Measure

While the exhibitors and exchange managers of Washington, D. C., are pledging hearty co-operation to the exhibitors of Baltimore against the proposal there to put war-time daylight saving again into operation, they are rejoicing at the failure of Congress to enact such legislation for the District of Columbia.

Bills had been introduced in both the Senate and the House calling for the re-enactment of legislation providing for daylight saving in the District of Columbia.

"I never like to be selfish," said Harry M. Crandall, head of a string of motion picture theatres bearing his name, "and I never like to put up a cry against something that a great many people want and claim that it is beneficial to the health and well-being of the community, but I am awfully glad that the congressional daylight saving bill failed to pass.

"I don't think that the Congressmen want this legislation; at least not for their home states, and they might have put it into effect here in order to take advantage of the extra hour of daylight. It is different here to back home where they have to listen to the voters. When we did have the daylight saving law on the statute books it worked a great hardship on the film industry in all its branches. It certainly cut into the night business and knocked out a complete show. I am, therefore, in sympathy with the opposition that has arisen in Baltimore to the adoption of daylight saving there."

The home offices of the national exchanges represented in Washington have been appealed to for support in opposing "fiddling with the clocks." The moving picture men are not the only ones against it, and other organizations are fighting the proposal.

Club Dines Williams

Former General Manager of First National Is Given Traveling Set

In recognition of the high respect they have for their former "big boss," J. D. Williams, members of the First National Club, of which Steve McGrath is president, tendered a luncheon to Mr. and Mrs. Williams last Friday at Jim and Jack's restaurant and after the speech-making, surprised Mr. and Mrs. Williams by presenting each with a handsome fully equipped traveling bag.

Over one hundred members of the club were at the luncheon. E. Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department of First National, was the toastmaster.

Mr. Johnson spoke of the great loyalty of the First National employes for J. D. as general manager of the company and J. D. in answering declared that it was the loyalty of those around him that enabled him to make First National a dominant figure in the motion picture business.

Exempt Newspaper Ads

Although the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, through G. E. Armstrong, one of the members of the board, is regularly applying the official stamp of approval to all advertising posters and accessories passed for use in the Province of Ontario, it has been intimated that the regulation requiring the submission of all advertising material for moving pictures has not been made applicable to newspaper copy through "the grace" of the censor board in order to facilitate matters for exhibitors and newspapers in cities outside of Toronto, the headquarters of the censors. All exchanges at Toronto are having general advertising matter examined by Mr. Armstrong.

New Heads Appointed

Macloon Directs Publicity and Kearney Advertising at Cosmopolitan

Announcement is made by the Cosmopolitan Corporation of which William Randolph Hearst is president, of the appointment of Louis O. Macloon as director of publicity and Patrick Kearney as director of advertising.

Louis O. Macloon comes to Cosmopolitan from the Oliver Morosco Enterprises, where he directed the publicity and sales of both the stage and screen attractions and was formerly located in California in behalf of the Santa Fe Railroad and Union Pacific System.

Patrick Kearney comes direct from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, where for the past five years he has been assistant advertising manager of this important distributing organization and is one of the most popular executives in film circles.

Offices have been re-established in the Cosmopolitan Studio, 127th street and Second avenue, New York City, and work of rebuilding the burned stages is progressing night and day.

Three studios are now being employed to finish the next Marion Davies picture, "Little Old New York"—the Tilford Studio in 44th street, the Jackson in Westchester avenue, and the old Talmadge in East 48th street.

Decline to Change Dates

Washington, D. C., Exchange Heads Issue New Order on Bookings

Exchange managers in the Washington, D. C., territory announce that hereafter they will decline to change show dates on films unless at the time that the exhibitor gives notice of his desire to make such a change he gives a new play date and also a check to guarantee showing at that time.

There has been considerable complaint of the practice of some of the exhibitors in this territory of continually changing play dates and having contracts pile up on them to such an extent as to tie them up heavily and make it impossible for them to play out their contracts.

Some of the contracts carry a clause providing for the payment of films when a new play date is sought.

May Lease His Studio

D. W. Griffith, who is in the South making scenes for his forthcoming photoplay "The White Rose," may lease his Mamaroneck studios to Richard Barthelmess. During the interval between productions Mr. Barthelmess did not continue his contract with a downtown studio. When he appeared last Monday to start work, thinking everything had been all planned, he found the Cosmopolitan productions had tied up this entire studio over night following the fire that destroyed the Cosmopolitan plant.

Because of existing contracts Mr. Barthelmess either has to go to Fort Lee or California to continue work on his own forthcoming picture, unless he can get space from Mr. Griffith at Mamaroneck. Since the Robert Harron tragedy Mr. Griffith never has leased any space in his studios to another company.

Ill with "Flu" Attack

Agnes Ayres, Paramount star, who recently arrived from the Coast to play in "The Exciters" with Antonio Moreno, has been confined to her apartment in New York during the past week, with a slight attack of influenza. Production of the picture was suspended for several days on account of her illness.

Report Shows Drug Conditions in Hollywood Are Magnified

(Special to Moving Picture World)

HOLLYWOOD is as free from drug addiction as any other community of 75,000 people, according to reports filed with the Prohibition and Narcotic Bureaus of the Treasury Department by special agents detailed to make a thorough investigation of conditions on the Pacific Coast. The report confirms statements that conditions in Los Angeles and the movie colony have been magnified, and that few of the sensational reports circulated throughout the East were based on fact.

Twenty-five per cent of the addicts arrested in 1922 were "floaters" lured to Los Angeles by stories of plentiful jobs on the movie lots as extras, it is declared, and the reports further show that it is more difficult now to buy drugs in that city than it has ever been. A thorough combing of Hollywood resulted in the discovery of less than seven addicts in a week's time, and there were no peddlers of drugs to be found.

"Detective Sergeant T. J. Mailheau of the Los Angeles police department narcotic squad, says Hollywood is as clean as any other community of 75,000 people that he knows of, and that he could not make a buy there," the report declares. George K. Home, captain of police commanding the Hollywood district, says that the best indication that Hollywood is free from drug addicts is the big decrease in the average number of burglaries reported. Fourteen months ago, Mr. Home said, burglary reports in Hollywood averaged 14 a day, while today the average is 2½.

"Charles Eyton, general manager, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, says that to his knowledge there is not an addict among his employes, nor would he give employment to anyone to whom the slightest suspicion attaches. Mr. Eyton is willing and ready to co-operate with us in every possible manner and is interested in showing that conditions as reported do not exist there."

Weighing carefully the testimony of each of the persons interviewed, the report sums up, men that are in a position to know whereof they speak, there is a preponderance of evidence tending to show that Los Angeles and particularly the Hollywood district is as free from the narcotic evil as could be hoped for, with the limited number of officers and funds available.

Schenck Plans Big Improvement in United Studio to Speed Work

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK and his associates in the purchase of the United Studios at Hollywood are planning to spend a half million dollars on the improvement of the big thirty-three-acre lot. They intend to make of the United an ideal studio for the production of independent pictures. With these improvements will come a vast saving in revenue for the companies working there and a consequent increased income for the owners of the United.

The improvements planned will not only give producers a wider range for big outdoor sets, but will tend to speed up production. The United, it is claimed, will be the finest studio in the world.

All of the streets are to be paved, more stages built, a modern heating plant installed, so that even cold winter nights will not interfere with the progress of producers' work.

A corps of expert technical men will be kept on the payroll so that all work will progress without the least possible loss of time. In fact, every move is being made with the idea in mind of helping to keep down negative cost and making the plant so attractive that it will be running at capacity during the entire year.

Mr. Schenck will produce all future First National releases, with Norma and Constance Talmadge at the United. At the present time all the independent companies working on First National attractions are installed there. Edwin Carewe is making "The Girl of the Golden West"; Frank Borzage has begun "shooting" on his initial First National, "Terwilliger"; Allen Holubar has just finished and is cutting "Slander the Woman," with Dorothy Phillips as the star; Maurice Tourneur is getting ready for Anstey's story, "The Brass Bottle," having finished what is said to be his most artistic and thrilling production, "The Isle of Lost Ships"; James Young is making "Wandering Daughters."

Soon Richard Walton Tully will begin "Trilby" for First National release. Norma Talmadge's next is said to be "Ashes of Vengeance," while Constance will make "Dulcy."

Signs for Three Years More

Announcement is made from the Thomas H. Ince studios, Culver City, that Madge Bellamy has renewed her engagement for a period of three years. According to the terms of the agreement, Miss Bellamy is to be starred in a series of feature pictures, including at least one big special a year, to be personally directed by Thomas H. Ince.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Charles Toy to Visit China; May Exhibit Pictures There

"East is East and West is West, and ne'er the twain shall meet." So wrote Kipling. But in at least one case there appears to be a bit of fallacy in such reasoning.

Charles Toy, variously known as Milwaukee's Chinese movie magnate, real estate dealer, restaurateur and China's "Rockefeller," probably would write, "East is East and West is West, but t'were better if the twain should meet." His plans for the next few years illustrate his belief in such a doctrine.

As the first step in support of his theory, the owner of the Toy Theatre and the building bearing his name, which for years has housed numerous film exchanges, has announced plans for one of the quaintest expeditions ever leaving American shores. Late in April, with his eleven grandchildren and their mothers, Toy will set sail for his native land. It will be a party of sixteen in all—the black haired, grinning kiddies, their happy mothers and the even happier Mr. Toy.

And Charles Toy after three months in the land of his birth is coming back. And the kiddies, too, are coming back, but not until they have blossomed into youth. For they are being taken back primarily to obtain the education offered by China, which they will mix with their American education before returning to demonstrate the fallacy of those famous lines.

Of course, Mr. Toy explains, one of the big reasons for the trip is his desire to have members of his family still in the Orient become acquainted with the eleven Toy grandchildren, all of whom were born here.

Anticipating his visit, Mr. Toy already has taken up with a firm of Milwaukee architects the matter of building a typical American home in the vicinity of Canton in which to house the family of youngsters and their mothers. In this he is following the ideas he put into practice in Milwaukee where one mansion houses all of the Toy families —where sons and daughters and their sons and daughters sit down to meals with the elder Toy.

America has been kind to the chop suey king. Forty-three years ago he was born in China to humble parents. Today he is one of Milwaukee's wealthiest citizens, a self-made man.

Coming to this country years ago, he was for a time swallowed up in the great number of his fellow countrymen on the west coast. Finally he made his way to Oshkosh, Wis., a single member of his race in a strange place.

But Charlie Toy made friends easily. Gradually his quaint tea shop drew the highest citizens of the town. He prospered. It became necessary to make frequent trips to Milwaukee to make purchases. And then he outgrew the small town and came to Milwaukee to live, opening the Toy restaurant and becoming engaged in the importing business.

Several years ago he entered the motion picture business with the Toy Theatre. Now, although he refuses to comment, it is rumored that he intends to open a chain of American style movie houses in the Orient before his return.

His building on Second street and Grand avenue long has been the home of numerous film exchanges. Although many of them have announced plans to move into buildings of their own, Mr. Toy revealed on the eve of his departure that he will remodel the structure soon at a cost of $50,000.

His plans, as divulged to the building inspector's office, are to convert the third floor, now housing exchanges, into a cafe as an addition to his present restaurant on the second floor. He intends to furnish the place in costly style with silks and antique carvings which he will bring with him from his trip abroad. It will cater to bridge parties and those playing the Chinese game of fong tong.

Turn About Is Fair Play, So We Swipe from Sub Rosa

When this department recently had a few complimentary remarks to make about the Ascher house organ, Sub Rosa, Dr. Sam Atkinson, the editor, swiped 'em entire for an issue of that Chicago bulletin. Here's where we get even by burglarizing a few ideas from the latest Sub Rosa.

Particularly interesting, we think, is an editorial on "Good Will and the Theatre," which points out that, like electricity, good will is an intangible but mighty powerful thing, not "more or less an airy nothing."

"All business is built on service," says the writer, "and good will representing public opinion of that service comes near to being the foundation of business. This foundation is just as solid as ever it was. It is built upon the character of those who establish a business Monopoly has not been strong enough to overcome it. In fact, good will is eating up monopoly. That business is most successful which rests upon a strong and vigorous good will which has been built up by persistent and judicious advertising.

"The motion picture theatre is no different from any other business institution. Pictures, music and entertainment generally represent so much merchandise. We spend a great deal of money advertising these things. We should spend time, money and energy in building up the house and its service. The character of an usher will often determine patronage. The smile of a doorman may stamp a house as being different from any other in the neighborhood. * * * Let us build up the good will of our theatres. It will reward us many times over in dollars and cents."

DR. SAM ATKINSON

Editor of Sub Rosa, the Ascher house organ, and manager of the Calo Theatre, Chicago.

Next we come across, in Sub Rosa, a constructively worded complaint on poor service from distributors on accessories. "They often have very good exploitation accessories, but, nine times out of ten, they put them out long after we have run the pictures," about summarizes it. A good word is put in for trailers: "A good trailer on a good picture is a good money-getter." But if trailers are used indiscriminately, the article says, they "soon lose their value."

Then "Crawford" writes:

"An electric lighted box office, you know what I mean. Well, here goes: Every five inches will be an electric frosted globe around the entire box-office—some light! Come and visit me next week when it is completed. I believe the cashier will be able to see her tickets better, also the patrons can get their money out of their pocketbooks quicker. Last but not least—it will look pretty. Don't you think so?"

Sub Rosa has its quota of humor, as witness:

Little Girl (in theatre)—Mother, when do the Indians come in?

Mother—Why, there are no Indians in this show.

Little Girl—Well, then, who scalped all the men in the front row?

There's lots else of value in Sub Rosa, but space won't permit of its use here. However, as we have a touch of the "flu," are "broke" as the result of an argument in which three queens actually were silenced by three males, and fell out of the wrong side of the bed this morning, all contributing to a mean temper, we close with the quotation leading off this issue of Sub Rosa: "No amount of brilliance or personal charm will carry a man to the top and keep him there unless he can come up smiling day after day."

St. Louis Manager Risks Life to Prevent Robbery

Taking a chance of being killed, Ernest J. Lynch, manager of the Delmonte Theatre, 5630 Delmar boulevard, St. Louis, at 10:30 A. M. February 26, refused to obey the command of an armed robber to throw up his hands and ran from the theatre building and called the police. His action compelled three other masked robbers who were inside the theatre office and their lookout to flee in an automobile which had been parked in the rear of the house.

Lynch had not reached the theatre when the robbers arrived. A. A. Wagner, auditor, Miss Esther Levy, bookkeeper, and H. H. Niemeyer, publicity director, were awaiting Lynch's arrival to check up the receipts for Saturday night and Sunday, amounting to about $3,000. The money was locked in the safe.

The robbers backed the trio against the wall and proceeded to work on the safe. It was then that Lynch entering the front door of the lobby was ordered to throw up his hands by the lookout, but instead ran to telephone the police.

Cracksmen secured $106 from the safe of the Maffitt Theatre, Vandeventer and Maffitt avenues, Sunday, February 25. They overlooked $83.50 which was in the safe. The St. Louis Amusement Company owns the theatre.

With adjournment of the Missouri legislature but a few days distant the Committee of Fifty's film censorship bill can't possibly be passed. The measure was ordered to engrossment by the Senate committee on Criminal Jurisprudence on February 27 after being amended so that the governor, attorney general and secretary of state would constitute the official censor board, but without additional pay. The bill hasn't a fractional chance of passing in the House, and it is almost certain it will die on the Senate calendar.

Many prominent St. Louis bankers, business men and city officials were guests of Fred L. Cornwell at the opening of his new Leclaire Theatre, Moline, Ill., on February 23. The trip was made in a special car. Mayor Henry W. Kiel of St. Louis, City Comptroller Louis Nolte, Festus J. Wade, president of the Mercantile Trust, and Walter Smith, vice-president of the First National Bank, St. Louis, headed the prominents in the party.

A minor theatre deal of major importance was an announcement the past week that the St. Louis Amusement Company has taken a ten-year lease on the North Grand Theatre and airdome, Grand boulevard and Natural Bridge avenue, and the Zelphia airdome, St. Louis avenue west of Grand boulevard. Fred Warner and associates owned the theatre and airdomes which were rivals of the New Lindell, Grand boulevard near Palm street, and the Maffitt, Vandeventer and Maffitt, property of the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Spyros Skouras and his brothers and Harry Koplar own the St. Louis Amusement Company. They now control twenty-one theatres and airdomes, and it is said are negotiating for a few more North and South St. Louis picture houses. They have closed the North Grand, but will operate both airdomes in the Summer months. The First National franchise held by Warner has been transferred to the New Lindell.

R. A. Stierlin has disposed of the Fairy Theatre, 5640 Easton avenue, to Samuel Horwitz. The price paid was not made public but is said to approximate $50,000. The theatre has 500 seats.

Sigoloff Brothers, owners of the Union Theatre, have taken over the Elite Airdome, Eighteenth and Park avenue, owned by Mrs. Palma Farr. They plan to erect a 1,000-seat adjoining the airdome.

Negotiations are also under way looking to the construction of a new airdome at Mississippi and Park avenues.

The Shubert Vaudeville interests have closed the Shubert-Empress Theatre, Olive street near Grand boulevard, several weeks in advance of the scheduled date. Although an official statement was issued proclaiming the initial season of unit vaudeville at this house a success, in local amusement circles gossip has it that much red ink was used in the bookkeeping of the Empress. After being closed almost a week the house will re-open on March 11 with the Woodward Players, a dramatic stock company as the attraction. This organization has been playing at the Garrick Theatre and has enjoyed a good season. The Shuberts have announced they will re-open with unit vaudeville and revues next September.

St. Louis film circles have extended condolences to Mrs. Henry Turner of Poplar Bluff, Mo., whose husband, owner of the Jewel Theatre in that city, died very suddency on February 19. Acute indigestion was the cause.

Sam Bromley, of the Becker-Bromley Enterprises, is threatened with pneumonia. He contracted a very severe cold several days ago. Bromley promoted the beautiful Aubert Theatre which opened for business a few weeks ago, and is also interested in the Chippewa and Broadway theatres.

H. H. Maloney of Fort Worth, Tex., is the new assistant manager of the Missouri Theatre here. He formerly operated the Palace, Fort Worth.

Dominick Frisina, owner of the Elks Theatre, Taylorville and the Gem, Litchfield, Ill., has purchased Simplex-Mazda-equipped machines for those houses from the St. Louis Exhibitors Supply Company.

Another club has endorsed daylight saving for St. Louis and has forwarded a resolution to that effect to the Board of Aldermen. It is the Missouri Athletic Association. The local exhibitors' organization is watching the situation carefully.

Callers of the past week included S. E. Pertle of Jerseyville, Ill.; Harry Turner, Eagle Theatre, Pana, Ill., and R. Hinard, who is building a new house at Lebanon, Ill. He expects to open about May 1.

Los Angeles

Sid Grauman broke all records for continuous runs with "Robin Hood" at his Hollywood Egyptian Theatre. It has just started on its twenty-first consecutive week and is packing them in at both performances daily.

Herbert A. Dunklee, late a Vitagraph salesman out of the Salt Lake City and Los Angeles offices, has taken a five-year lease on the Academy Theatre, Forty-eighth street and Normandy avenue, Los Angeles, and is installing new seats and machines. He will open the theatre on March 10. David O'Lander, late a Hodkinson salesman out of Denver and Salt Lake City, will be the manager.

E. C. Bostick, manager of Loew's State, opened Sunday with "Toll of the Sea" as the feature and Bull Montana's comedy, "Rob 'em Good." In his new campaign for additional newspaper space, Bostick continues to top all other first run theatres in matter of amount of newspaper advertising.

WHO SAID THAT SERIALS WERE DYING OUT

Not while theatres can make money with them, and Corseen, of the Roosevelt Theatre, New York City, finds a good serial a fine Sunday special. Note how he worked to get a good start for "The Social Buccaneer." It beat the feature showing.

Toronto Showmen Organize and Elect Nine Directors

Twenty-five exhibitors of Toronto, Ontario, representing the bulk of the independent picture theatre men of the city, held an important meeting at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on March 1, when the Motion Picture Exhibitors Co-operative Association was organized, with a temporary board of directors comprising nine local managers. It is the intention of the new organization to deal with the C. O. D. clause in rental agreements, to oppose Daylight Saving in Toronto and to seek relief from the regulation requiring all advertising matter to be censored by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors.

Harry Alexander, proprietor of the Park Theatre, Toronto, presided, and the directors provisionally elected included: William Bailey, temporary chairman, Cum-Bac Theatre; William Brady, Madison Theatre; H. Ginsler, Iola; Harry Alexander, Park; J. D. Goldhart, Duchess; I. Cohen, Classic; W. Ball, Revue; W. Appleton, Queen's Royal; J. R. Foy, Wonderland, and J. Starkman, Vermont.

Addresses on current subjects were made by William Brady, who has been president of the Ontario Moving Picture Exhibitors Protective Association for years and William Bailey. The motion to organize the new local association was made by Mr. Brady and seconded by Mr. Starkman. S. Lent moved that a board of nine members be appointed, this being seconded by Mr. Goldhart. On the motion of Mr. Alexander, Roy Lewis was elected secretary of the association.

Those present, not including the members of the board, were: M. Mental, Park Theatre; A. Lester, King Theatre; S. Besvenick, Moss Park; L. Rosenfield, Pastime; S. Lent, Dundas Playhouse; S. Lester, Doric; S. Friedman, Monarch; J. A. Boyd, Model; J. T. Isbell, Rex; S. Ulster, Victoria; H. Rottenberg, Pickford; A. Applebaum, Reo; Sam Bloom, Academy, and others.

Claiming that sentiment toward daylight saving had changed, a deputation representing the exhibitors of Toronto, Ontario, waited upon the Toronto Board of Control on Thursday, March 1, to oppose the local reenactment of a daylight saving measure this year. The spokesman for the delegation was John A. Cooper, who declared that changing the clock had interferred seriously with the moving picture business.

Representatives of a local women's organization also appeared before the Board to point out how daylight saving disturbed the routine of the home and how it affected the habits of children. The Board of Control decided to hear a deputation of local mothers on the subject in two weeks' time. In the meantime, the Board is withholding action.

Bert Blackmore, for a number of years with the Pantages Theatre in Edmonton, Alberta, has been appointed manager of the Empress Theatre, a local house operated under the direction of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto. Mr. Blackmore returned to Edmonton recently from Chicago, where he had been managing various theatres of the Asher chain and had also gained prominence in vaudeville circuits of the United States.

L. R. Acker, of Halifax, N. S., has completed a deal whereby he has taken over the Strand Theatre, Halifax, the latter house having been operated a number of years by J. M. Franklin. Acker's Family Theatre in Halifax is being closed, it is announced. Mr. Acker also has the Orpheus Theatre in the same city, as well as a theatre in Dartmouth, N. S. Mr. Franklin continues as lessee of the St. John Opera House, St. John, N. B., and of the Community Theatre, Halifax.

James Adams, manager of the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., has been appointed manager of the big Capitol Theatre at Calgary, Alberta, by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto. Victor Winning, assistant manager of the Capitol Theatre at Vancouver, has been placed in charge of the Dominion, Vancouver. All three theatres are directed by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Loew's Court Theatre, Montreal, which has experienced various changes of fortune, has been taken over by J. Sparrow, lessee of His Majesty's Theatre, the one legitimate house in Montreal. The Court will continue to operate as a picture theatre.

Announcement is made that the System Theatre, Phillip's Square, Montreal, will be torn down in May, following the termination of the lease by the Universal Film Company, to make way for a large office building. John T. Fiddes, former manager of the System Theatre, is now manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg.

MAKING VALENTINO WORK ALL DAY FOR "ALL NIGHT"

J. C. Wodetsky, of the Regent Theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., believes in plenty of poster material in the lobby, but he does not overcrowd, though this photograph shows twenty pieces used for the revival of his old success.

Cincinnati

One of the busiest picture places in Cincy is the municipal theatre which was recently opened by the city on the top floor of the City Hall. It is being conducted by the Board of Examiners of the Motion Picture Operators for the purpose of testing the knowledge of projectionists. The Nicholas Power Co., of New York City, donated the machine, while Local No. 165 of the operators' union in connection with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association donated the funds for the installation of the necessary equipment.

Manager Francis Gilbert of the Shubert Theatre comes forward with the announcement that the swan song has been sung for the Shubert unit and vaudeville shows at his house and that he has arranged to show the Italian film, "Fabiola," for the week of March 11. Thereafter it is understood that the house will show Shubert legitimate attractions.

The Literary Theatre at Wellsville, Ohio, is among the newest picture houses to open in that vicinity. This is the first theatre project in the Wellsville district since the old Valley Theatre was closed several years ago, the Valley being prominent in its time as one of the earliest burlesque houses.

Joseph Modi reports from Barnesville, Ohio, that he will begin work on a new picture house soon. The seating capacity will be around 1,000.

A few days ago Manager John Schwalm of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, showed his initial Urban's Statesmen's Classics, the film depicting the life of Alexander Hamilton. On the way out after the picture a lady was heard to remark to her escort that she had enjoyed the program immensely, but she never knew before that they had moving picture cameras as far back as Alexander Hamilton's time. Can you beat it?

Manager Jules Frankel says he is cleaning up with "The Flirt," the first week's business going way beyond his highest expectations. The picture will doubtlessly have a four weeks' run at Frankel's house, known as Gifts Theatre. Other return showings include "The Voice from the Minaret," at the Family, following a screening at the Walnut last month, while the Walnut Theatre is holding over "The Christian" for a second week. The Family and Walnut are both under control of I. Libson.

Over in Hamilton, Ohio, Managing Director Fred Meyer succeeded in locating an antiquated horse-drawn fire engine, which he sent out daily through the streets of the downtown business section advertising "The Third Alarm." After the engine was through making its daily rounds it was placed on display in front of the Palace Theatre, where it continued to attract attention.

New York Theatre Employes Prove Heroes in Bad Fire

When fire broke out last Sunday in the Crystal Hall Theatre and Arcade, 48 East Fourteenth street, New York City, the members of the staff acquitted themselves gallantly. About 260 people were in the theatre when smoke began to seep through the floor at 8 p. m. and 200 were in the arcade. Miss Ioleen Thompson, the organist, told the people to leave quietly and played a lively march. Manager N. Schaefer attacked the fire with a hand extinguisher, collapsed and was rescued by his brother and Harry Stein, an employe. Olga Buchinger, cashier, got the money into the safe and then ran into the smoke-filled basement to rescue four kittens, returning a moment later in a vain attempt to save her fox terrier. Frank Murphy, the projectionist, got twelve reels of film into their fire-proof cases and turned on the lights.

The fire was a bad one, thirty firemen being overcome. The damage was estimated at about $75,000 and it was two hours and a half before it was gotten under control. But for the heroic work of Manager Schafer and those under him, there would have been fatalities.

That the entire Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce slate of candidates nominated at the meeting of last Thursday at Hotel Astor in New York City will be elected to office when the final elections are held March 27 was accepted as a fact among well-informed exhibitors in the metropolitan district. While prior to the nominations there were three different slates scheduled to be thrown into the field, all groups came together and decided to nominate Charles L. O'Reilly. No opposition is likely to be offered at the elections.

The slate that will be elected at the meeting late this month includes:

President—Charles L. O'Reilly.

Vice President—Charles Steiner or Herman Yaffa, and Abraham Jame or Max Miller.

Secretary—Sam A. Moross.

Treasurer—Hyman Rachmil.

Sergeant-at-Arms—Al Friedlander.

Executive committee — William Landau, David Weinstock and Leo Brecker, for New York; A. H. Schwartz, Rudy Saunders and Bill Brandt, for Brooklyn; Bernard Edelhurtz and Bernard Grob, for the Bronx; Hy Gainsboro and Sam Schwartz, for Queens; Charles Moses, for Richmond; Leon Rosenblatt, Dave Snaper, Louis Blumenthal, Joseph Stern and Louis Rosenthal for New Jersey.

Finance committee—A. H. Schwartz, Saul Raives, Jack Schwartz, Harry Brandt, B. Rossasy, Samuel Schwartz and E. H. Behrend.

A merry war is in the making up in the Washington Heights section of New York. The Haring-Blumenthal, B. S. Moss, Fox, Keith and Marcus Loew interests are involved. The battle is over a couple of houses that Moss is believed to have acquired. This will strengthen his hold on business in that section and forces the Haring-Blumenthal and Fox and Loew interests to do a little hustling. It is rumored that Loew will build a new theatre in that territory.

New York exhibitors journeyed to Albany en masse Tuesday to voice the opposition to the censorship board. Most of the metropolitan theatre owners went via the Empire State Express. Charles L. O'Reilly, who has been making frequent trips to Albany on business involving measures touching exhibitor interests, headed the exhibitor faction from New York.

Senator James J. Walker, who resigned officially as counsel for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, had three different offers made to him by producing and distributing corporations, but he refused them all. The Senator's resignation was received with deep regret among exhibitors, but the move did not come as a surprise. Senator Walker is now majority leader of the Senate and as such is contributing notably to movements having for their purpose the betterment of the picture business. It is no secret in Tammany Hall circles in New York that Jimmy is being nursed for the Gubernatorial position, as all the big organization measures that have been introduced in Albany thus far this year have been presented by Walker. He is also the Smith Administration spokesman and "whip" in the legislative end of the Government.

There are five measures pending before the New York Legislature concerning the exhibitors of New York. The most important, of course, is that which has the abolition of the Censorship Commission for its purpose. A hearing on that bill was held on Tuesday of this week. Another important bill concerns the admittance of children after school hours and on Saturday under proper chaperonage. It is virtually settled that the latter bill will be passed.

While there is considerable hope held out that the censorship board will be put out of commission, odds in well-posted circles were at an even break. The anti-drug pictures that are being thrown on the market are not expected to help the cause despite the newspaper campaign for the punishment of drug traffickers.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at its meeting last week was expected to take action against narcotic pictures, but nothing of the sort materialized. However, the question is under advisement, according to various members. Meanwhile, bookings are pouring in on these pictures and many members of the T. O. C. C. are among those who are giving out dates on these films.

Just what the status of the confederate New York State exhibitor organization is at present is unknown, although there is some talk from upstate exhibitors relative to a convention. The New York Staters at their convention in Albany last year voted to hold the next meeting in Buffalo, but so far little or nothing has been given out for publication purposes concerning the convention. The M. P. T. O. faction is expected to hold its meeting in Buffalo some time after Easter, preparatory to the national convention in Chicago in May. Whether or not New York City will be officially represented at the national convention remains a question.

M. L. Finkelstein, of the theatre-operating firm of Ruben & Finkelstein of Minneapolis, was in New York this week, closing contracts with a number of national distributors.

That criticisms published in the New York dailies on first run productions as they play Broadway houses considerably affect the rentals of films in the metropolis and other sections covered by the papers is now frankly admitted by exchangemen, but exhibitors are mum, although they are unanimous in admitting that what critics have to say about pictures does show at the box office.

Five independent exhibitors last week inspected that piece of land bounded by Broadway and Forty-sixth street, east of Broadway, with a view of purchasing the site for the purpose of building a theatre However, when they looked up the agents they ascertained that at least three other firms had entered bids that same day—and, incidentally, that the land was not for sale.

The Boston Hotel, Surf avenue and West Twelfth street, Coney Island, N. Y., is now under new management, doing business under the firm name of S. Seiger & Son. It closed March 5 for alterations that will take about a month and greatly beautify the building. Motion pictures are shown in the hotel.

One of the busiest theatres on the Loew time is the Greeley Square Theatre right in the heart of the city. Charles Potsdam, manager, has been at the theatre quite a while and is kept as busy as a bee. A great student of human nature, he knows what people like in the way of entertainments and presentations.

We have with us all the way from Newark (just lately arrived) Manager Bosch from Loew's State Theatre. He now is in charge of the Warwick in Brooklyn and is one of the young managers on the Loew time. He is well deserving of the position that he holds, as he was always a keen student of things going on around him. We wish him lots of luck and we know he'll have it.

A real old timer but as frisky as one of Fred Stone's colts is Manager Bosch's assistant, Mr. Talmadge, the father of the three famous Talmadge sisters. He has been with Loew for several years. The song, "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," might have been dedicated to Mr. Talmadge, for his jollity and good nature, as well as his white whiskers, may make Santa Claus envious.

It is not necessary to be armed with a blackjack and blasting powder in order to gain admission to the office of Walter Reade, manager of the Savoy Theatre, Thirty-fourth street and Broadway, New York City. The possessor of an even, likable disposition and a host of friends, Mr. Reade always has a cordial greeting for picture men. Hard work and consistent attention to detail are responsible for his advancement, and he always is ready to lend another a helping hand. In addition to his connection with the Savoy, he is general manager of several theatres outside the city.

Needles & Rhonheimer have disposed of their interests in the Normandy Theatre, Fulton and Howard streets, Brooklyn, to Al Lichtman. Mr. Lichtman will continue the same policies, but will make complete changes in the house, such as carpets, lighting and decorating. He will also have during the week different attractions, such as country store and prize nights, and perhaps later vaudeville will be added. Mr. Lichtman will have with him as his manager Phil Greenberg, a man who has been in the picture business many years, he having at one time owned his own houses in the West. Mr. Greenberg was also connected with the F. B. O.

The Carolinas

H. W. Marcus, formerly in stock, vaudeville and pictures on the West Coast, but more recently connected with the Opera House, Florence, S. C., and Liberty and Rex theatres, Darlington, S. C., as publicity manager, has become associated with the Rockingham Theatre Company as managing director of their two houses, the Garden Theatre, Rockingham, N. C., and the Garden Theatre, Bennettsville, S. C.

Mr. Marcus says the policy of the houses will remain unchanged. Pictures and road shows are now playing both houses. This live company, still in its infancy, owned by M. H. French, will bear watching and they expect to further their interests in the houses and also the production end.

Amm Quits Rochester House; May Join Paramount Company

Arthur Amm, who has been house manager of the Eastman Theatre since its opening, has resigned. Mr. Amm came to the Eastman from Shea's North Park, Buffalo, where he was manager. He had formerly managed several Buffalo houses and at one time had been assistant to Harold B. Franklin when the latter was managing director of Shea's Hippodrome. It is rumored that he may join up with the Paramount theatre department as a manager.

Mrs. Carrie Pratt, 65 North Division street, is the winner of the automobile offered by the management of the Grand Theatre.

A seven-reel film depicting events from Russian history during the last six years and embracing a trip of 10,000 miles through that country was shown on the Family Theatre screen Sunday for the benefit of the Russian "Children's Villages," as the school homes for the famine children are called. The picture is being shown throughout the country under the auspices of the American Relief of Russian Orphans as part of the campaign for American "adoption" of these children.

"Robin Hood" is being shown Rochester folk this week at the Eastman Theatre, where it is being given an elaborate musical setting which uses all the resources of the house's vast musical organization. Regular admissions prevail during the presentation.

Mort Howell, owner of the Lincoln Theatre, has taken over the Ideal. Mr. Howell also operates the Regent in Lyons, N. Y., and the Grand in Auburn, N. Y.

Miss Thelma Edwards, former Buffalo high school girl, whose success as a rhythmic dancer won her fame and popularity in London, was the special attraction at the Eastman last week, appearing in a striking scenic setting of Lampe's "Visions of Salome." Miss Edwards recently appeared with unusual success at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls.

March 1 brought to a close one of the most novel, unusual and yet successful campaigns for charitable entertainment work ever staged in Rochester. On that date the Strand Theatre and Democrat and Chronicle campaign of furnishing motion pictures for the shut-ins of the city ended. Jackie Coogan proved the supreme favorite of the winter. Particular pains were taken to never disappoint when a showing was promised. Only on one or two occasions out of the 200 was a show postponed, and those because the roads were absolutely impassable.

The projection and presentation, which were in charge of Carol Fennyvessy, assistant manager of the Strand, met with great favor and enthusiasm from the officers of the institutions. Practically all the charitable institutions of the city and vicinity were included in the round of the cameramen's visits. The project has been under way since the first of November last and during the sixteen weeks more than 40,000 aged, sick and orphaned were entertained.

Albany, N. Y.

Louis Schine, of Gloversville, supervising director of what is rapidly becoming the largest circuit in the state, in Albany the past week announced that four or five more houses will probably be added to the chain before April 1.

"Doc" Hall will reopen the Capitol, in Troy, a 500-seat neighborhood house, closed for the last three months, on March 24. Al. V. Bothner, who manages the Strand and the Colonial, will also handle the Capitol.

Lent and bad weather proved a poor combination for the Third Avenue Theatre in Watervliet, and the house will now run but four days until further notice.

The Star, of Cobbleskill, closed on March 3. It is said that the house will reopen under new ownership soon.

Ponds Theatres, Inc., have just purchased a site in Saranac Lake on which a new house will be built this spring. The company, which has its headquarters in Malone, is planning a chain of houses which will include all of the larger towns in Northern New York.

Among those in town the past week were Mrs. D. S. Regan, of the Star in Greenwich; William C. Benton, of the Congress in Saratoga; Mr. and Mrs. Grant, of the Grant in Hobart; Lew Fisher, who owns the Play House in Ticonderoga, the Bradley in Fort Edward, and the Empire in Port Henry; R. V. Erk, of the Big Ben in Ilion; L. L. Connors, of the Victory in Cambridge; E. Dopp, of the Electric in Johnstown.

Toledo

Business conditions in Toledo motion picture houses steadily improved during February. All of the leading houses report a substantial increase in business and a little profit put away on the right side of the ledger.

Toledo fans caught on in great style to the new policy of the Valentine and Temple which calls for a big vaudeville act, along with a first class picture and a good comedy, for a 50-cent top price. Both the Valentine and Temple have more than doubled their business in February under this plan.

That Toledo churches intend to unite in a war against Sunday picture shows in this city was indicated in a letter sent to Representative Homer Ramey of Toledo by officers of the Toledo Council of Churches this week. The latter voiced the Council's disapproval of Ramey's introduction of the bill in the House legalizing Sunday movies in Ohio.

"About 37 counties out of the 88 in the state now prohibit film entertainments on Sunday," said the Rev. C. Smith, secretary of the Toledo Council of Churches. "Although we have taken no official action on the matter, we feel that the movie interests have forced the issue upon us."

Eddie Zorn, for nine years manager and part owner of the Temple Theatre, has sold his interests to C. E. Bullock of Toledo and the latter will assume full management of the theatre on March 11. James A. Beidler, of the East Side Amusement Company, also will have part in the management of the Temple.

Eddie Zorn will be associated with the Seymour Simons vaudeville acts and other interests, with headquarters in Chicago. Zorn will look after the bookings of the Simons acts. When Bullock assumes management of the Temple the scale of prices will be lowered to 15 and 25 cents at the matinee and 25 and 35 cents at evening performances. The first picture to be shown under the new management will be "Poor Men's Wives."

Billy Exton, publicity director of the Temple, resigned this week to take up his duties with the Sells-Floto Circus as advance man.

Indictments were faced in Common Pleas Court by the managers of Findlay's five picture shows, on charges of violation of the State Sunday Amusement Law by keeping their theatres open on Sundays. The indictments were returned by the Grand Jury, which closed a three-day session. The managers indicted were E. B. Gilmore, W. K. Richards, E. Marquart and A. R. Kraft, who operate the five theatres here.

The Sunday movie fight has been in progress for ten years in Findlay, with success favoring both sides at times. This is the second time a Grand Jury has indicted managers. They were fined three years ago.

The Sunday movie case, decided adversely to two local managers by the Third District Court of Appeals, this week, is expected to be taken to the Ohio Supreme Court, if that tribunal will grant a review. Heretofore, the Supreme Court has refused to hear such cases, however, on the ground that all Appellate Courts have held similarly in the matter.

Managers said today the Appellate Court decision will not deter them from putting up a strenuous fight to win their case at the hands of the grand jury, which will consider indictments for Sunday operation when it meets. All local managers were recently bound over to the grand jury from mayor's court.

Toledo Managers Turn Actors

Step right this way, ladies and gentlemen, and don't crowd. Boy, get back there. You see before you, Eddie Zorn, triple-tongue cornetist of the Monroeville Gold Flash Brass Band, in native costume. Eddie was captured, when young, in the jungles of Monroeville and was brought to Toledo. He was incarcerated in the Temple Theatre, where he now roams at will among both the wild and domestic denizens of the moving picture world. Since becoming a theatre manager Eddie has retired from public observation as a tooter of the horn, but in private he will play or annoy at your pleasure. He plays "The Lost Chord," "The Found String" or "The Misplaced Rope" with equal facility.

Mr. Zorn is organizing the Toledo theatrical managers into a vaudeville show to fill out an open week at his house under the new policy.

Emil Gerstle of the Valentine will put on an animal act, featuring Buster, the pet of the ladies, in his bone-scraping specialty. Joe Pearlstein of Keith's will spring a few wheezes and Howard Feigley of the Rivoli, a noted equestrian, will put on a daring barehead riding turn. Harold Holstein will do the "Weep Scene" from "Camille," and Harry (Sanitation) Winter will discourse on the "cleanliness of burlesque." Nat Charnass will play the juvenile lead in the skit, "I'm Poor, but Pure." Happy Hoak, Barney Lustig, Kid Mohr and Harold Watkins, quartet, will sing the Ohioan aria from "The Hamburger Sandwich." Eddie Zorn will play an obligato with apologies from Billy Exton.

Wisconsin Exhibitors Score Notable Legislative Victory

Aroused to action by threats of obnoxious legislation, a joint legislative committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin and the F-I-L-M club has begun functioning in earnest to safeguard the interests of the film industry. Thus far during the present legislative session, one bill attacking the screen has been defeated and another indirectly affecting the exhibitors has been passed. At least one other law is pending.

The bill that was killed prohibited children under 16 from attending movies, with the exception of educational films, unless they were accompanied by their parents or guardians and unless the picture had been passed by the National Board of Review or a local censorship board. Its defeat was effected after various members of the motion picture business had appeared before a Senate committee to point out that such legislation would mean needless expense, inasmuch that the film men themselves are doing everything in their power to keep the screen clean.

The bill that has become a law, and which is looked upon with a certain amount of suspicion by exhibitors, is the initiative and referendum. This law provides that all matters must be submitted to a vote of the people when a petition is signed by 10 per cent. of the qualified electors. It is feared that the reform element may seek through this legislation to railroad through their pet ideas, it being generally agreed that the average voter pays too little attention to matters of this kind.

The law which is still pending would put teeth into the blue law, but thus far little fear has been expressed by theatre men.

The legislative committee of the F-I-L-M club consists of the following: H. J. Fitzgerald, First National; Ray Smith, Ray Smith Co.; Frank Hensler, Metro, and George Levine, Universal.

Daylight saving, attacked by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin since its introduction, will go to a referendum vote of Milwaukee citizens this spring, according to indications. Motion picture men are confident that such a step will spell victory for them in their attempt to maintain standard time throughout the year.

Leading the battle against a return of the daylight saving system is the Standard Time League, supported by leading business men of the city. The league recently invited the exhibitors to aid it in the fight, and as a result threatres have been displaying slides and distributing literature urging retention of good old sun time.

The move for a referendum has been recommended by a committee of the common council and comes up for final action within a few days.

According to Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, more than a score of organizations have already pledged themselves to block a return of the long day. These include the Milwaukee County Milk Producers' Association, the Marquette Women's League, the State Federation of Labor, labor unions and the railroad brotherhoods.

Badger members of Congress were appealed to recently by members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin to lend their support to the McGregor bill for the abolition of admission taxes up to and including 25 cents.

W. F. Baumann, executive secretary of the organization, after urging all exhibitors in the state to write their congressman in support of the measure, sent a letter to the representative from his district.

Refusing to recognize defeat, opponents of commercial movies have called another mass meeting of citizens in an effort to block construction of the first picture theatre in Shorewood, aristocratic suburb of Milwaukee. Plans for the theatre, as a part of a new store and apartment building, were announced recently and immediately met with a storm of protest from those who argued that school movies could well take care of the needs of the community. The first meeting of this faction failed to obtain results in a demand for revocation of the building permit, and after a short interval the call for the second meeting went forth.

A. R. Welch, formerly of the Strand Theatre of Oconomowoc, Wis., has purchased the Iris Theatre, Fourteenth street and North avenue, from Steve Bauer, veteran Milwaukee picture man. Bauer still controls several other show houses in the city. One of Welch's first acts after completing the deal was to join the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin.

The part that exhibitors play in aiding matters of public service was clearly demonstrated recently when members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin joined the move to put Milk for Health Week over in the state.

Under the leadership of Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary, members of the organization showed a series of slides and films teaching the lesson of milk for health. Downtown Milwaukee houses showed short photoplays on the subject while the outskirt houses confined themselves to educational slides.

The University of Wisconsin, through two of its psychology instructors, conducted special research work in connection with Dr. Coue's famous film after it had been booked at Art Desemeraux's Strand Theater in Madison, Wis., recently.

Following the announcement by the Strand manager that the doors of the theatre would be thrown open free of charge during certain hours so that the needy might view the film, two university professors began research experiments to determine to what extent the photoplay would benefit an audience of disabled.

In offering the free chance to partake of Coue's theories, the theatre even went so far as to provide carfare for the poorer people of the city, with the result that the lame and those suffering from other disabilities came from miles around to view the picture.

Scores of picture theatre men, representing virtually every branch of the business, joined in entertaining Theodore Roberts, famous screen star, at a banquet during his recent visit in Milwaukee.

The Biter Bit

Considerable interest has been manifested for weeks past in arguments of Kentucky lawyers over the matter of juries being permitted to see picture shows where juries are held intact during trial of murder cases. A new version came in from Catlettsburg, Ky., this week, in which a Baptist preacher refused to go to a picture show, thus preventing the eleven other jurors from indulging. The jury retaliated by refusing to go to church on Sunday.

Baltimore

The Capitol Theatre Company has purchased the West End Theatre, Baltimore street at Frederick avenue, from E. T. Newell & Co., auctioneers. The furniture and equipment was included in the sale and the price was $43,500 in fee simple. Interests of the Rialto, Broadway, Apollo and Poplar theatres are controlled by the officers of the Capitol Theatre Company, who are: Morris Klein, president; Samuel Bach, vice-president; William Hoffmeister, treasurer; J. Louis Rome, secretary and general manager, and Morris Rome, attorney. On Washington's birthday the playhouse was reopened to the public. It seats 450 and was formerly operated by the Emmert Brothers.

E. A. Lake, manager of Loew's Hippodrome, Baltimore, arranged a result getting publicity tie-up with the Baltimore News and American. It was worked through the classified advertising columns. An eight column streamer was printed across the top of each classified advertising page reading: "Take Your Friend to Loew's Hippodrome. Find Your Name Below and Get 2 Free Tickets." Names of Baltimoreans were inserted at intervals through the classified ads.

Arrangements are now under way to hold a large moving picture ball in Baltimore by the Exhibitors' League of Maryland, of which Frank H. Durkee is president. The Fifth Regiment Armory is being considered as a suitable place to hold the affair.

According to a provision in the lease of the Howard Amusement Company, which operated but recently closed the Strand Theatre, 404-6 North Howard street, when the lease expires in 1925 the building reverts to the owner of the land. The property was sold to Cleveland R. Bealmear, real estate broker, recently and the title to the property turned over on February 21. When the lease expires the present owner plans to raze the theatre and erect a five story store.

Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests in Baltimore, arranged for a special free performance of "The Message of Emile Coue" for the public at the Century Theatre on Sunday night, February 25. The playhouse, which seats 3,600, was filled to capacity.

Ultimatum to Loew

Wisconsin exhibitors have delivered an ultimatum to Marcus Loew. He must explain satisfactorily the alleged use of the photoplay, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," for commercial advertising purposes or face the alternative of having a ban placed on the picture by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin.

The demand for an explanation went to Loew in the form of a telegram from Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary of the Wisconsin organization, following the appearance of a beauty clay advertisement in a Chicago newspaper. The advertisement included a reproduction of a certain portion of the film to illustrate the benefits of Terra-derma-lax, as alleged to be used in the picture by Barbara La Marr.

Pittsburgh Exhibitor Books Bible Films for Holy Week

Fred Smith, of the New Palace Theatre at 2726 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, says that he is going to get the business this year during Holy Week. He has booked twelve single-reel Bible pictures and these reels will constitute his show for two days of the week. He will use six single reels of the Bible pictures for his program, augmented by a comedy and news weekly. Last year he did a big business during Holy Week with "From the Manger to the Cross." This year he is going to play it again.

Charles Johnston is now managing the Triangle Theatre in East Liberty, succeeding Dave Adler. Mr. Johnston has been a lifelong friend of Nate Friedberg, owner of the theatre, and for the past thirty years has been in the employ of the city. Most recently he was police commissioner in the East Liberty district. Dave Adler owns the Fairyland Theatre in Cleveland, but can still be seen occasionally on Pittsburgh's Film Row. He states that as yet he is undecided whether or not to locate here permanently.

Owing to an epidemic of sickness at McDonald, Pa., the local board of health has prohibited children under 16 years of age from attending the picture houses. This works a hardship on the exhibitors, and it is to be hoped that the town's health will soon be such that children will be safe in public places.

L. C. Van Orsdale, well-known member of Local 171, is now in charge of projection at the Triangle Theatre in East Liberty.

Bart Dattola, popular exhibitor from New Kensington, along with Mrs. Dattola, entertained the other evening at the Hotel Edna in that town following the christening of their daughter, Miss Domenica Laura Giovanni Dattola.

The property on which stood the Aris Theatre at Erie, recently destroyed by fire, has been sold and the house will not be rebuilt. Storerooms will be erected on the site, it is said.

Fire which virtually destroyed the Cameraphone Theatre on Main street, Sharpsburg, February 20, entailed a loss estimated at more than $5,000. The building was a one-story frame structure and the flames spread rapidly. Fire Chief Berner expressed the opinion that the fire had started in two places, the balcony and the rear of the building. The theatre was owned by C. P. Denson and A. Goldstein.

The Huffman Theatre, Alexandria, Pa., heretofore open but Saturday nights only, has added another show night to the week and hereafter will be open on Wednesday evenings as well.

Louisville

Louis F. Steuerle, Louisville, Ky., exhibitor, will be elected Exalted Ruler of the Louisville Lodge of Elks at the annual meeting, he having no opposition for the position. The lodge has started work on a new $1,500,000 home in Louisville.

Mr. Steuerle finished the law school of the University of Louisville in 1901 and practiced law for thirteen years, finally dropping his practice to give his entire attention to the picture business. He was one of the original organizers of the Broadway Amusement Company, which started with one theatre at Shelby and Broadway and grew until today the Steuerle-Dolle interests, in the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, control a chain of a dozen or more theatres in Louisville. Mr. Steuerle is secretary-treasurer of the Broadway Amusement Enterprises and a director of the Lincoln Bank & Trust Company.

News was received March 3 of the death at Marengo, Ind., north of Louisville, of John Franklin Blackford, manager of the Blue Diamond Theatre, of Marengo, which is owned by the deceased's father, James Blackford, Sr. Death was at his father's home in English, Ind., and followed a three-day illness of spinal meningitis, which had closely followed attacks of ptomaine poisoning and influenza.

Film Exchange Personalities

Pittsburgh

On Friday evening, February 23, Joseph Skirboll, for years manager of the Pittsburgh First National exchange, and who has recently been promoted to the position of western district representative for the same company, with headquarters at Los Angeles, was the honor guest at a banquet tendered him by the employes of the First National, Educational and Columbia exchanges. Covers were laid for fifty, and after the banquet every one present was called on to say something or do a "stunt." After this kind of entertainment, dancing was on the program. Mr. Skirboll was presented with a trunk by his former employes. He is succeeded here by A. S. Davis.

C. L. Tietjen is the new office manager at the Universal exchange, succeeding C. W. Dickinson, who will hereafter handle Universal features in the city territory. Mr. Tietjen comes here from the New York home office of the same company, and while young in years, is an old-timer in the film business, having been connected with various film exchanges for the past twelve years.

Local film people got a surprise when they learned that C. A. Lynch had resigned as assistant manager at the local Pathe exchange to go to Buffalo and act as short subject sales manager for the Universal exchange there. "Charlie," as he is best known to his many friends here, was employed by the Paramount, Fox, Triangle and Educational exchanges here, having been manager of the latter office for some time.

Bronson Reese, shipper at the United Artists exchange, is slowly recovering in the hospital from serious injuries sustained in an automobile accident several weeks ago. Reese suffered a fractured skull.

M. C. Hughes, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of Famous Players, is again back on the job after a tussle with the "flu." "Mike's" wearing goloshes now, and we don't blame him, either.

Frank L. France, former manager at the U. T. E., is now on the job at the First National exchange, and is out on the road calling on his exhibitor friends.

Harry Myers, Universal salesman, is back on the job once more after having been confined to his home for some time with blood poisoning.

The various film exchanges are forming ball teams, and it is expected that a baseball league will be formed this year, with probably six teams in the league. Watch the dust fly when that crowd gets started. The exchange teams had some mighty good games last summer, but the lack of a league and the lack of a real leader caused more or less confusion and hard feelings as well.

At the end of the second week in the seven-week drive for business and the incidental prize money being conducted by the F. B. O. exchanges, the Pittsburgh branch headed the list. Here's hoping A. H. Schnitzer and his boys keep Pittsburgh at the top until the end.

John David ("Doc") Smith, for over six years on the sales force of the local Pathe exchange, has resigned his position and on March 5 began his new duties in a similar capacity at the Universal exchange.

A. F. Morrone, well known to Pittsburgh film people and exhibitors, is the new manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, succeeding Frank L. France, who resigned recently to join the sales force of the First National exchange here. Mr. Morrone for the past three years has been the installation man for the U. T. E., and previous to this connection was for nine years projectionist at the Lyric Theatre in downtown Pittsburgh.

The employes of the Pathe exchange have "pooled" their money to buy a Victrola. Now every day, during luncheon hour, they have a concert.

W. L. Gibson has joined the sales force of the Pittsburgh Pathe office and is working the main line territory. Mr. Gibson cames here from the Baltimore Pathe exchange.

Work was begun on the new Seltzer Film Building, to be located at 1014-16 Forbes street, on February 26. The new building will be probably the most modern film exchange building in the United States, and is to be six stories in height. It is expected that it will be completed by the first of July, as the work is going on day and night. When the building is completed and the exchanges from the downtown section move into the new structure, Pittsburgh's film exchanges, for the first time in many years, will be located in the one square. Exchanges which have already signed leases to occupy the new building include Goldwyn, First National, Film Booking Offices, Educational and the Columbia Film Service, Inc.

San Francisco

Ed Rubens, formerly with the Select organization, is now with Progress Features and is traveling out of the San Francisco office.

P. H. Brinch, special representative of Famous Players-Lasky, was a visitor late in February on a tour of inspection of exchanges.

Following a short stay in this city, Harry Lustig, district manager for Metro, left for Seattle and the Northwest.

The American Photo Player Company is now well settled in its old home at 109 Golden Gate avenue, in the heart of Film Row, the building having been placed in better shape than before the disastrous fire last fall. The Sherman, Clay & Co. sales division has fitted up offices on the ground floor.

Through the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Carol Nathan, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, has presented a projection machine to the Pacific Hebrew Home in the Westwood district, San Francisco, and the youngsters there will enjoy a moving picture program weekly through the courtesy of Mr. Nathan, manager of the local exchange.

Chicago

Bill Brimmer has resigned his connection with the First National office here and will make another connection in the film field shortly.

Neal Agnew has been made manager of the Milwaukee exchange of Paramount. He was formerly supervisor of sales for the Chicago office.

R. T. Smith has joined the sales forces of the Educational exchange.

Edwin Johnson has been made assistant country sales manager for the F. B. O. exchange, of which I. B. Gettleson is manager.

Roy Alexander, manager of the Kansas City exchange for Universal, was called here by the death of his mother.

A. J. Gallas, J. J. Clark and Joe Duskin are new salesmen with the F. B. O. office here, under Manager Jack Samson.

The local office of the Celebrated Players have added Lee Woodyatt, Al Galles and Mort M. Krueger to their sales force.

Joe Lyon, salesman, and William Layman, bookkeeper, of the Fox exchange, are on the sick list, but they hope to be back on the job in a few days.

The many friends of Captain Nicholas McDonald, who lost his right hand in a premature flashlight explosion while taking a picture for the Herald-Examiner, are glad to hear he is getting along in fine shape. He was formerly with the Fox exchange and is well remembered by the boys.

Ray Morfa has joined the sales forces of Associated Exhibitors. Henri Ellman is covering the South Side for the local office.

Bill Brimmer has resigned his connection with First National and will announce his new connection in a few days.

John Eisele, treasurer of the Fox Film Corporation, was in the city last week. He was accompanied by his wife.

Tony Philbin has joined the Goldwyn sales forces and is covering river towns in Illinois and Iowa.

It was recently stated that Hal Olver, formerly of Paramount, Goldwyn and R. C. exploitation forces, and during the past year exploitation representative for First National at Boston, would come to Chicago as assistant to Al Sobler. Mr. Oliver wishes to deny the assistant part and Ned Holmes, chief of the exploitation staff of First National, states that Hal was sent to Chicago so as to afford that exchange the benefit of two representatives instead of one, and there is no difference in rank between the two. "Both are crackerjacks," says Mr. Holmes, "and they'll make a great team."

The Chicago exchange of First National has announced a newly formed plan to tie up the exploitation department with the sales force in such a manner as to be of real material benefit to the exhibitors. Every exhibitor will have the benefit of the services from the exploitation duo, Hal. Olver and Al Sobler gratis, no house is too small and none too large. Exploitation does pay!

Albany

At least two of Albany's exchanges are ranking first in sales contests in competition with exchanges throughout the entire United States. A. J. Herman, manager of the First National exchange in Albany, and S. E. Feld, his salesman, lead all others in a contest for managers and salesmen. At the F. B. O. offices, Vic Bendell, the manager, is smiling because of the fact that his office leads in a national drive which closes on March 24.

Jimmie Rose, of the Pathe exchange, is proving himself a 100 per cent salesman these days, leading all other salesmen in the local exchange in a big contest now under way.

In spite of the fact that he is suffering from a most severe cold, and practically voiceless, A. L. Burks, exploitation man in the First National exchange here, is still on the job and putting pictures across in a handsome way in Gloversville, Troy and nearby places.

Arthur Whyte and George Trilling, of the U. B. O. in New York, made the rounds of the exchanges as well as the theatres here last week.

Up in Watertown, Charles Sesonske, well known exhibitor, is known as "Hercules." But it appears that Hercules, despite competition and zero weather, has been adding weight to the extent that, acting on a doctor's orders, he has gone on a diet. All of which is by way of saying that many of the managers visiting Watertown are almost insistent in asking Sesonske out to luncheon, or even to dinner for that matter.

Eddie Hart, of New York, directing Proctor's houses, was in Albany last Wednesday.

A. W. Smith, special home office representative of the Associated Exhibitors, along with Sam Hockstin, was greeted in Albany during the past week.

Changes are being made in the F. B. O. offices here in the way of remodeling the interior, giving the manager, the salesmen and the office force individual offices. H. W. Fisher has just been added as a salesman in F. B. O.

St. Louis

Lester Bona is now assistant manager for First National succeeding Russell McLean, who was made sales manager, effective March 1. Bona set a record in placing "Oliver Twist" in fifty-eight St. Louis houses in a few weeks' time.

Edward Grossman, special representative for Lichtman Preferred Pictures, was a visitor of the week. He reports that "Poor Men's Wives" is going very big. Skouras Brothers have obtained the St. Louis first run on this film, and probably will show it day and date at the Grand Central, West End, Lyric and Capitol theatres.

Dave Chatkin, district manager for Educational Film Corporation, dropped in to select a new manager for St. Louis. He decided on Sol J. Hankin.

Sixty of the seventy film salesmen working in this territory have already joined the St. Louis Film Salesmen's Club. This organization, recently launched, has attracted considerable attention throughout the country, this interest not being confined to the film industry. Officials of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce have requested President Tom McKean for full details of the plan and scope of the club. Letters have been received from industrial organizations in other parts of the country.

Buffalo

Percy G. Emslie, formerly booker at the Vitagraph exchange, has gone "on the road." He has been succeeded at the booking job by Frank J. Young, who until last week, occupied the position of assistant manager at the Select exchange. N. Hepworth, formerly with Realart, is the new booker at Select.

Manager T. W. Brady of Goldwyn has engaged Fenton Lawlor as a member of his sales staff. Lawlor, who was formerly sales manager for Hodkinson, is to cover the Rochester district.

An Al Lichtman office has been opened here. Space has been obtained in the United Artists exchange on the second floor of the Bond Photoplays Corporation building in Franklin street. United Artists will take care of the distribution. G. S. Jeffrey, special representative of Al Lichtman, is in charge temporarily. He expects to appoint a manager soon.

Film deliveries via motor truck will be resumed about March 15, at which time the roads to Rochester and Syracuse are expected to be cleared of snow and ice. They have been impassable most of the winter.

Two new cars have arrived on Film Row. E. J. Haynes, of First National, is sporting a new Willys-Knight, and Charlie Johnston, of Fox, a new Nash.

C. A. Lynch is the new short subject department manager for Universal in the Buffalo and Albany territory. Mr. Lynch was formerly with Pathe in Pittsburgh.

Gus Garrick, Hodkinson sales manager, attended the sales conference in New York last week when "Down to the Sea in Ships," was discussed.

Gene Markens, the debonair city salesman for First National, is showing the latest thing in spring garments of joy. It is a race-track check affair that is without equal this side of the equator.

Seattle

There are three western district managers just arrived on Film Row this week, H. Bradley Fish of Vitagraph, Harry Lustig of Metro, and Harry Leonhardt of Goldwyn. After discussing conditions with all three, who are on their regular tours of exchanges, the feeling that general conditions throughout the Pacific Northwest and down the Coast are already in satisfactory shape, with every probability of an excellent season ahead for both producer and exhibitor, is strengthened. This is further borne out by local exchange managers who have noted a lessening of complaints on the part of exhibitors in their territory.

Film Booking Offices report the following releases just received, "Storm Swept," "Can a Woman Love Twice?" and "West Bound 99."

James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Goldwyn, was due in Seattle March 3 on a tour of the exchanges throughout the United States. He comes up from California.

Over at Select they swing a mean mashie. Championship is claimed by several members of the organization and it is frequently contested on the Municipal Golf links, where the balmy spring sunshine beckons. The exercise keeps 'em all fit, even if the electric light works overtime occasionally to make up for a prolonged lunch hour.

E. O. Brooks, serial sales manager for Pathe out of New York who recently spent three weeks in the local Northwest territory, took particular occasion to mention that he was impressed with the class of exhibitors he met during his visit.

A Great Window Display on "When Knighthood Was in Flower," the Cosmopolitan-Paramount picture starring Marion Davies.

Any exhibitor who does not read Van's "Straight from the Shoulder Reports" is missing the best bet of his business career. See Page 336.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

S. S. Wallace Describes in Detail How He Handled a Popularity Contest

IN a broadcast from the Dallas offices of Southern Enterprises, Bill Johnson tells how S. S. Wallace, of the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, put over a popularity contest, just before the holidays. It is the most comprehensive bulletin Bill has ever gotten out, and it is a credit both to himself and to Wallace.

Wallace decided upon the contest as a jazz to the pre-Christmas slump. The contest cost $1,521 and brought in $4,291.50, showing a net increase of $2,770.50. Of course, a part of this money—perhaps a large part—would have come in anyhow, but the point is that it brought the rest of it in. People had purchased their tickets and felt they might as well use them; which is always the big angle in a popularity contest. Mr. Wallace writes that most of the tickets sold were used during the contest, and that very few of them ran over into the period beyond the sale.

Laying the Plans

First of all he had to decide upon the prize, and the number of prizes. He figured that something big would be better than a lot of little prizes, and finally decided that the awards should be trips to Los Angeles for three girls and for a chaperon, who would manage the party and pay the bills. It was further announced that the trip would include a visit to the Lasky studios.

There was no time to be lost, so the announcement was made before the reply was received from Adam Hull Shirk that permission for the visit must be obtained from Jesse L. Lasky. A letter to the producer soon set Wallace on an even keel again, though for a few days it had him sweating blood like the behemoth of holy writ.

Hooked a Paper

Mr. Wallace decided that he would let a local paper in on the deal, to save advertising costs, so he hooked up The News, and during the contest he obtained more than $2,000 worth of publicity, without cost, the hook-up being arranged on a split basis.

Votes were counted on sales of tickets worth $5, $2.50 and $1. The paper's yearly subscription was ten cents a week, or $5.20 annually, but, for the purpose of the drive, this was reduced to $5 a year.

It was more or less of a gamble, and Mr. Wallace gambled that enough voters would prefer theatre tickets to The News to give him HIS money. The candidates sold both tickets and subscriptions, the purchaser taking his choice. The result to the theatre is stated above, but the newspaper also made a substantial increase in its circulation.

Nominations First

One week in advance of the opening of the contest twenty ballot boxes were placed in as many prominent stores, with a supply of nomination blanks. These were yellow slips, 3½ by 5½ inches, carrying this text:

Who will you nominate for the trip to Hollywood, California?
(All expenses of the trip FREE)
I nominate Miss.....(Ladies only)
Street number.....
Telephone number.....
And will aid her in winning the contest.
Name .....
Street Number.....
Telephone.....

Below was a list of the location of ballot boxes, in small type. Some of the candidates received as many as 200 nominations. All balloted for were called on the 'phone and asked if they accepted the nomination. If they did, they were invited to call at the theatre for instructions and blanks.

Names to Work With

Each girl was told that she would be given 50,000 votes and five dollars' worth of admission tickets to the Capitol if she sold $25 worth of tickets within the first few days. The tickets were to permit her to have access to the theatre. The vote certificate was to start the contest with a respectable number of votes. It was printed in green and gold and made to look important for the moral effect upon the holder. The text for this was:

Extra Vote Certificate
This certificate is good for
50,000 VOTES

In the News-Capitol Movie Campaign if turned in with $25 worth of tickets to the Capitol Theatre on or before 9 P. M. November 11, 1922.

....
Candidate Campaign Manager

The girl was given all of her nomination blanks, which contained the names and addresses of her nominators, and told to go out and sell them, to get the $25 initial sale.

Each dollar sale was to count as 1,000 votes, a five-ticket sale, or $2.50 brought 3,500 votes and 10,000 votes were given for each $5 ten-ticket sale.

The newspaper made the same offer, as applied to subscriptions for ten weeks, six or twelve months. It also made the same extra vote offer, and gave ten tickets for the $25 initial sale if made in time.

Sale Coupon Books

The girls were also given two sets of books. One set, on yellow paper, was for the sale of tickets. The other, on white, was for subscriptions.

The colors prevented confusion in making out receipts.

As the yellow tickets cannot be reproduced, we show the subscription blank, to give the idea of the triplicate form. The divisions are made with perforating rule, that the stubs may be torn out.

In the ticket form, the top stub is much like that shown, but "subscriber" is replaced by "Name," and "tickets is substituted for "weeks" as the unit.

In the second, or middle stub the text reads: "I hereby purchase .... tickets to the Capitol Theatre for which I pay $...., and the "mark whether an old or new subscriber" is dropped. This is turned in by the candidate as a ballot for the number of votes indicated with the cash. The first stub is her own memorandum.

In the ticket form the third stub (which is given the purchaser) is made to read: "I have paid for .... tickets to the Capitol Theatre $.... and will be presented with a book when this receipt is presented at the box office of the theatre."

A better form would be: "The bearer has paid $.... for .... tickets to the Capitol Theatre, which will be given on presentation of this receipt at the box office of the theatre" and signed by the candidate.

Holding Back the Facts

Because of the length of the contest (six weeks) it was feared that the leading candidates would forge so far ahead that the others would become discouraged and drop out. Mr. Wallace started with 28 contestants and wound up with 17 still working hard, and he attributes this to the fact that the vote was held back.

He credits this entirely to his vote certificate idea. In this the leading candidates were given "certificates" to be voted on the last day of the contest. If the newspaper record showed that one girl had 120,000 votes and another but 17,000, it was a moral certainty that the girl with the lesser number would become discouraged and abandon the effort.

To prevent this, the leaders were given certificates to be voted on the last day for any large block of votes they brought in.

These were on a blue paper and were printed up with the statement that the certificate was good for a specified number of votes.

The leaders were told that they would help their chances if they held back their votes until the last day, and were given these certificates. This kept up the interest of the tail enders, and at the same time the knowledge that there were these hidden votes kept the leaders on the jump. They knew that other girls also held certificates, and an apparent lead gave them no sense of security. They worked up to the very last minute.

This is the prime essential in any contest.

Planning the Trip

In the meantime Mr. Wallace was laying out his trip. The G. P. A. of the road out of town; in this instance the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, routed the party over his own and connecting lines, detailing each item of expense. The passenger agents of the other roads were communicated with, and at each change over or stop some representative of the railroad arranged to meet the party and look after them while they were in town. Incidentally they looked after a little press work for the party, and were supplied in advance with the names and photographs.

This entailed considerable correspondence with railroad agents and hotels, but a recital of this correspondence will not prove helpful. You merely get in touch with the railroad and when the tour is decided upon, with the various hotels where hotels must be used.

Rather full details are given here for two reasons. One is because it is one of the most thorough campaigns we have seen and the other is because the popularity contest, rightly handled, is always a money maker.

A Mastodon Release

WHO WOULD NOT BE INTERESTED IN COAL THESE DAYS?

This window display goes with the Johnny Hines production of "Luck." The tunnel is practical and a transparency at the end is backed by a flasher light. When the light is on the catastrophe is shown as in the picture, making a fine effect.

Imported a Tramp

E. C. Ogg, of the Imperial Theatre, South Pittsburgh, Tenn., knows that in a small town any stranger will get the interested notice of the residents, so he imported a trampish looking specimen and put a sign on his back reading "Back Home and Broke." The man drew so much attention that the rest of the advertising was comparatively simple.

Advanced

J. M. Edgar Hart, who has done remarkably good work for Southern Enterprises in El Paso, handling the Palace Theatre, has been advanced to the management of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, second largest house in the Texas division of the Southern Enterprises.

The El Paso Palace has been sold to Louis G. Dent, formerly of Southern Enterprises.

Bags are "In"

Many of the money bags painted up for "Brewster's Millions" are being dug out on the Southern Enterprises for "Missing Millions." The Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., for example, had a huge money sack in profile and a lot of smaller bags strung on a line across the archway. In front of the large sack was a strong box, apparently borrowed from the express company, and provided with an appropriate sign.

FIVE WINDOW DISPLAYS PLANNED BY JOHN McCORMICK FOR FIRST NATIONAL WEEK

Six windows in the business district were landed for paintings or scene miniatures for "The Hottentot," "Oliver Twist," "Slander the Woman," "The Voice from the Minaret," "The Isle of Lost Ships" ("Dead Ships" is the old title). and "The Girl from the Golden West," which latter is not shown here. They stirred up Los Angeles for the Big Week and probably will be sent on tour. Passes to the United Studios to be given customers paid for the use of the valuable space.

A Paramount Release

THIS DISPLAY STOOD THEM OUT FROM L#) TO L)L%

That's what J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, says about "The Young Rajah." As a typist J. M. Edgar is a fine manager, but the display speaks for itself. The large medallion is lighted by a strip back of the title panel. Signs above are O. K. Use them.

Hopped the Hurdle

Animating a cutout of the jumping horse from the paper for The Hottentot gave a good marquise display to the Liberty Theatre, Seattle. The horse did not jump the hurdle, but apparently was just about to, and stuttering on his feet, and a lot of people waited to see if he would get up his nerve.

The hurdle was made of real brush and was made to screen the lights which illuminated the cutout at night.

Drug store tie-ups with arnica were effected with cutouts and a jockey ballyhoo with four horses was used for the street work, the horses, as usual, being obtained from a riding academy.

Poems in Persian

F. M. Francis, of the Casino Theatre, Charleston, Ill., used some novelty heralds on Omar the Tentmaker. At the left of a sheet slightly larger than commercial note was printed some Turkish or Persian type with a "translation" at the right, the familiar "A book of verses underneath the bough" quatrain, adding that "the spirit of the Rubaiyat sweeps through this great photo-marvel."

Two thousand were sent through the mails and the odd appearance got most of them read, and from reading to selling this First National was but a short step.

Sold an Exploit to the Opposition Man

When the president of a bank in El Paso permitted the bank to tie into a campaign on thrift with the slogan, "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow invests in a savings account," he did not realize that it was the title of a play to come to the Palace Theatre.

J. M. Edgar Hart sold the idea to a newspaper and the newspaper sold it to the bank, which permitted the slogan to be placed under the glass on all the desks in the lobby. The slogan was also used in the bank advertising.

The Palace was not mentioned. however, as the president of the bank happens to own an opposition house. Hart put one over very neatly, and if he does not get hoist in return it's a fine stunt, but J. M. Edgar is watching his step for a kickback.

For Fifteen Miles

Robert Sparks, of the Olympic Theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, used East Is West snipes for a week in advance of the Constance Talmadge presentation, posting them from ten to fifteen miles out on all roads leading into town. Three days in advance he pasted them over with fresh paper, giving the house and dates in addition to the title.

The winking contest was made the big noise and this was advertised by a poster contest in which the pupils of an art class competed, the full line of posters being displayed in the lobby before the run. When the opening required the lobby for a more elaborate dressing, the posters were put up in soda bars and restaurants, getting triple use from the stunt.

Hart's Fine Lobby Made Records Break

J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, worked extra hard on Valentino in The Young Rajah because an opposition house was using a reissue, and he stressed the fact that the Paramount was a new picture. He told it in English and Spanish from the sidewalk to the skies, and he told it so well that on Sunday he stood them out from 1:30 to 10:15. What he wrote was that he stood them out from L.#) to L).L%, but if you will look at your typewriter keyboard you will see that Edgar had the right key but the wrong shift. He can't fool us writing in cypher.

For the lobby he used a large head with the turban and frame for the central panel in gold metallic color and metal was also used on the hand-painted side frames. The medallion was lighted from below by a strip of lights in front of the ground row carrying the title, while the other frames were spot lighted from above. They are pulled in to get them all on one plate.

Getting Edgar sore did not help the opposition much, for he got most of the town in and he broke all the records to a point where he will have to have a larger house or higher prices to take an encore on the smash stunt.

Another Cartoon Hook

Hugo Plath, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., is the latest manager to tie a newspaper to a cartoon hook-up. This time it was the Gump series, which the Southwest American was featuring.

Gump buttons were supplied to the newspaper to be given juvenile applicants, these serving as admission tickets to the special matinee. Then the "personal appearance" of Andy was announced extensively by the newspaper. It all took up space.

The special program consisted of two comedies and a locally produced Safety First picture, and each child took home a herald to the grown-ups, telling about the coming attractions. Something like 750 children took in the special performance.

WORKING THREE SHEETS INTO A LOBBY DISPLAY

How A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, worked up his lobby corner with drapes, three sheets and a "book" for Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist." It cost very little and sold as well as many of his pretentious displays.

National Tie-ups Saved Local Date

Because of a booking kink, the Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Mich., had only 48 hours in which to work up a profitable interest in Lorna Doone. It did it through the national tie-ups arranged by the First National publicity department.

The Lorna Doone Shortbread was in five windows the next day, and a shoe store offered the smallest Lorna Doone shoe in stock to the first girl who could wear them. The Lorna Doone pearls (formerly the Norma) got into a jeweler's window and the hats blossomed in another window.

It was all done by telephone, with the least possible delay and without the need for extended argument, since all of the window owners had been sold by the national organizations handling the goods.

This Is Easy

Of course Hugo Plath, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., used a double truck hook-up with the tailors on A Tailor Made Man, and in return telegrams were sent from the Dallas office, in Ray's name, to each of the co-operative stores.

Then Mr. Plath had seen an advertisement in which Ray was working a portable typewriter—the Corona—and he hooked the local agency to a two tens for this angle. It gave an additional twenty inches of advertising merely for the asking, which was cheaper than the regular inch rate, and can be worked with any live agency.

Gave Reference

Because The Face in the Fog had pleased his patrons, Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., tied Missing Millions to the other title, telling that it was one of the Boston Blackie series. He lost one of the three days through weather conditions, yet managed to get a three-day average business into two.

Made the Front Page

Getting the editor to treat a booking as a matter of front page interest is going a little better than usual. C. E. Stillwell, of the Casino Theatre, Spokane, did it for The Grub Stake, and he got it played up in a two-column head, upper half of the paper, at that.

It seems that the Nell Shipman company made a couple of scenes for the picture in Spokane about a year ago, and ever since Stillwell has been nursing the front page idea. When it was at last released, he booked it and then rushed to the editor with the news. It had a local kick and it won a five-inch drop. It's good work.

Schade Under Bonds

As a variant to the personal guarantee, George J. Schade, of Sandusky, put himself under $1,000 bonds lately.

He was playing The Bond Boy and the bond of $1,000 was to be forfeited to charity "if the production does not excell in dramatic strength the performance of any other male star in any other first run picture presented in this city" during the three-day run.

It does not appear that any other male star was at a first run house for the days indicated, but it listened well, and it got attention.

A Five Buck Kiss

To give emphasis to the reunion of Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien in The Voice From the Minaret, the Rex Theatre gave the News the go-ahead on a contest in which the length of the longest kiss, in feet, was made the basis of an estimate; five dollars to be given the one making the correct estimate, or to each correct estimate in the event of a tie.

The stunt was good for half a dozen stories, each with a different cut, and was worth a lot more than it cost, both to the paper and the theatre.

One Appreciated

Usually when an exhibitor writes to a brother manager for more light on some stunt mentioned in the trade papers, he thinks he is doing a lot, leaving the manager to supply the return cover and do the addressing.

But when F. K. Davis, of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col., wrote Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, for a copy of the program the Palace puts out, he liked it so well he sent Meyer a check for three dollars, asking to be placed on the mailing list for a year.

The magazine is well worth the money in helpful suggestions, but Meyer sent the check back, explaining that he was already sending it to some 200 exhibitors, and that when he needed to collect, he was going to send the bill to the trade papers.

Cheap Exploitation

German marks are cheaper than lithographs, and at the instigation of John D. Howard, Paramounteer, Claud Cady, of the Gladmer Theatre, Lansing, Mich., posted a three-sheet board with German marks, labeling them "Nobody's Money." He let it ride a few days and then added that Nobody's Money would be at the Gladmer on specified dates and would prove better value than German marks.

Supplementing this, he had a local laundry enclose a note in each package of returned shirts enclosed in an envelope stating "This money does not belong to us." These marks were printed up as heralds for the play. It's all right where you can get marks in small denominations, but nowadays they are not printing them up smaller than 5000s, and that is about six for a dollar.

COLUMBUS FLIRT CARRIED A SHORT LENGTH PROTECTOR

Ballyhoo girl for the Pastime Theatre was attended by a three-foot midget on her shopping and hotel tours. Backed up by thirty-two window displays, and some special hook-ups, she managed to put the Universal special over for both house and exchange.

Hired a Midget to Protect The Flirt

Because The Flirt played the Pastime Theatre, Columbus, when the M. P. T. O. of Ohio were in session in town, Charles Loewenberg, the Universal exploiteer, felt that it was up to him to do something out of the ordinary, and he put over hook-ups until he had landed thirty-two windows, including all of the ten cent stores on the plugger song and the United Cigar Stores on the statement that The Flirt bought her cigarettes at the green coupon hangouts.

Then he hired a decidedly attractive woman for a street stunt, and she went around town all decked out in furs and with an automobile bannered "This is the car The Flirt wants. Will she get it?" She was properly chaperoned by a midget in evening clothes with a large banner for the attraction on his back. Her own handbag was modestly lettered.

Through the day she pervaded the shops and in the evening the oddly assorted pair frequented the jazz joints, except on the evening of the banquet to the theatre owners, when they were among the guests and The Flirt did not experience the slightest difficulty in flirting with the entire bunch.

For paper they used 500 ones, fifty threes, 25 twenty-four sheets, 5,000 novelty cards and 1,000 window and tack cards. The theatre got the local benefit, but the exchange cleaned up some bookings, as well.

Sales and Shoes to Help Out Kick In

When it came to popularizing Kick In, Roy C. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., hunted up a merchant who wanted to get attention to a bargain sale, and tied him to the title.

The tie-up was hung on the supposition that the merchant was kicking in on a sale because presently he had to kick in to the jobbers. He started to tease a week in advance, using every newspaper page except the inaccessible front, and broke out with half pages for Saturday and Sunday. Then he plastered his store front with signs and held the most successful sale in his history, while helping to put over the picture to a big extra business.

In return for all this hard work Mr. Smart donated 500 single passes good before three o'clock the opening day; another form of the penny ticket sale. This got a good audience for the opening matinee and you had to do your shopping early in order to get the pass in time.

Mr. Smart also used the free shoe shine stunt, the idea for which he got from this department. He dressed up the idea by having the boys dressed in red and yellow cheese cloth, and made the idea that much more attractive. The boys wore banners on their backs, which were most conspicuous while they worked. It's a neat scheme, which does not appear to have been taken up as it should have been. It's not too late to put it to work.

Still Fooling

Foolish Wives is still fooling around the country, and at Clinton, Indiana, William Esch, a Universal promoter, put it over to a big three-day business at the Capitol Theatre, mostly through cutouts from the posters of the women in the play.

These were strung along the top of the marquise and placed in windows. Newspaper displays were used to back op the pictorial work.

Plant Proverbs

Several managers in various parts of the country have been thanked for press stuff when they took over to the local paper the book of proverbs prepared on The Flirt. These short paragraphs came in useful for plugging column ends and if given well in advance, they were all used before the showing of the picture. They were better press work because the advertising was plain yet indirect.

Used Last Chance

When news came of Wallace Reid's death, Roy C. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., had on hand about a hundred fanfotos of the star. He knew that Thirty Days would be his last chance to use them, so he advertised that while they lasted a picture of the star would be given each ticket purchaser on the opening day, the offer being limited to adults. It gave him an unusually good opening matinee and the crowd went out to sell other of the citizens. It did a better than average business for two days.

A Paramount Release

PRETTY SOFT FOR SID GRAUMAN BEING IN LOS ANGELES

All he has to do is to hike out to the Paramount studio and borrow the props for a ballyhoo for "Adam's Rib." Perhaps your local museum will lend you a dino or something, but don't be so certain of it that you neglect to provide other ballyhoo.

State Forester Is Plugging a Picture

Because Vitagraph's production of The Ninety and Nine shows vividly a forest fire and the ease with which these costly conflagrations are started, State Forester William T. Cox, of Minnesota, is conducting a State-wide campaign to interest the people in the safety angle, and has also interested the Dakotas, Wisconsin and Michigan, since fires are no respecters of State lines.

He is stripping the 24-sheets and the ones with an urge to see the forest fire, and the one sheets are being posted all through the forested districts, while letters to the newspapers have enlisted their cooperation in putting the idea before the public.

It is working wonders with Vitagraph bookings, but Mr. Cox does not care about that so long as he can get the results he is after, and if through this agency he is able to avoid a single fire, the result will more than repay all his efforts.

Last year, coming down through northwestern Canada, we saw billions of trees standing gaunt monuments to someone's carelessness and on two occasions acres of flaming wood. If every exhibitor could have shared the sight, he would have tied this and all similar pictures to the safety angle even in the cities. You cannot gain, through reading, any adequate idea of the menace of the flames, often started through the careless throwing down of a match or failure to extinguish a camp fire. Don't wait for the State Forester. Do your bit anyhow.

Down to the Sea Has Fine Display

One of the best window displays we have seen in a long time is that used by the Cameo Theatre, New York for Down to the Sea in Ships. The Cameo is a short distance from the corner of Forty-second street and Broadway and on the corner is a drug store.

A Pathe Release

THE COLDER THE BETTER IN LANCASTER, APPARENTLY

The further the thermometer drops the better, for the sign reads: "You Will Smile, Giggle, Laugh, Shake, Roar, Convulse with Laughter." It is better to start at the bottom and read upward, but the thermometer idea is good. Try it some time.

In one of the windows, perhaps fifty feet from the box office, is a highly colored plaster panel depicting a spirited relief of the overturning of the whalers' boat. Above and below are several old harpoons and lances, evidently the real thing, along with some of the bones of a giant whale and the rope police clubs used aboard the old ships to preserve order. At the right of the panel is the miniature of the boat used in this production.

No matter what time of the day or evening we have passed the store, there has been a crowd inspecting the display, and it has attracted more attention than any recent window show we can recall. And this is because the display is interesting. It holds the crowd and sinks the idea in, and helps to make the unusual business the Cameo has enjoyed.

Another good stunt is a banner which faces the spectator as he leaves the theatre and which commences "The picture you have just seen is a Hodkinson production" with more talk to the same effect. As the picture makes an unusual impression on practically everyone who sees it, the crowd goes out with a last message to look for other Hodkinson pictures. It is a most adroit promotion of the brand name.

A Hodkinson Release

A BALLYHOO WINDOW WHICH HAS TOLD ITS MESSAGE WELL

Thousands of persons pass the Knickerbocker Drug Company's store at Broadway and Forty-second street, and hundreds stop to view this interesting display for "Down to the Sea in Ships." It is only a few feet from the Cameo Theatre, where the picture is.

Vamped the Springs on Alleged Wager

Helping out J. E. Thompson, of the America Theatre, Colorado Springs, T. B. McCormick, a Universal exploiteer, started in with a letter to the newspaper denouncing flirtatious girls. This was replied to by The Flirt and the scrapping started which ended in The Flirt making a supposed wager of $500 that she could vamp the town.

This led to the employment of the street worker, as has been done in other cities, a local dealer lending a car in return for a banner to the effect that The Flirt demanded a car of his make. The usual ballyhoo stuff was worked, with the usual good effect.

One good angle was a display of engagement rings in a local store with a card to the effect that of all the engagement rings The Flirt had won that from this store was her favorite because it was in the best taste.

Pictures Won

There was a jam down in Indianapolis lately between a picture and a road show, and the picture won.

The road show carried a jazz band sponsored by Paul Whiteman, who has almost as many jazz bands as First National exhibitors have street parades. The road show agent announced a Paul Whiteman Week in the phonograph shops. But Robert Lieber had "Mighty Lak a Rose," which also is a phonograph number in various forms, and he wanted the windows. His agents pointed out that the Circle Theatre was a permanent feature of the town and Whiteman's band was here tomorrow and gone the day after.

The argument won and most of the windows were shot over to Rose records. It might be a good argument to remember.

JAZZED AMARILLO FRONT FOR MURRAY IN "JAZZMANIA"

Greene's Letter Brought Results

When he played The Headless Horseman at the Rialto Theatre, Jamaica, L. I., Fred V. Greene, Jr., sent out a letter to the principal of each school which not only brought in a lot of single tickets but attendance by classes. It will be noted that passes are enclosed for all of the teachers. The letter is so well phrased that we are offering it as a model. It runs:

This Thursday, Friday and Saturday we are showing Will Rogers in "The Headless Horseman," which is adapted from Washington Irving's "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow."

This picture is truly one of the classics of the year, as was amply proven when it was recently shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York City.

Will Rogers plays to perfection the quaint character of Ichabod Crane and the scenes in the picture were taken in the actual locations which figure in the story.

In fact, historically and in every other way the picture is perfect, and I would like you to see it, as well as the teachers under your jurisdiction. I am informed that you have four assistants, so I am enclosing herewith five passes and would ask that you be so good as to distribute the four, keeping the other for yourself.

Neatly Put

Buffalo took The Flirt for a second week at the Olympic Theatre, on the strength of a comprehensive four weeks publicity campaign. One of the good ideas was a preliminary teaser which read: "The Flirt says it doesn't hurt to flirt if you don't flirt to hurt."

Rode It In

Fighting pretty stiff opposition, the Family Theatre, Davenport, Ia., put out half a dozen jockeys with blanketed horses for The Kentucky Derby, and backed this up with a street wagon, the details of which are not clear in the photograph sent in. It's old stuff, but it built up receipts where a deficit seemed to loom. It's one thing to put over a good one against a couple of poor ones, but when they are all above the average, the prize goes to the fighter, and C. G. Behrens is a scrapper for exploitation.

Hooked on a Diner

The Lyceum Theatre, Duluth, hooked the Northern Pacific Railroad to "The Stranger's Banquet" and got window displays through the connection line "because of their uniform excellence dining car meals have often been called the Stranger's Banquet, the title of the Marshall Neilan photoplay now being shown at the Lyceum."

This offers a suggestion to other towns. The railroad windows are generally in fancy positions.

Liked the Production So Played It Up

Ross D. Rogers, of the Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, liked the Tiffany production of Jazzmania so well that he got solidly behind it for a cleanup, and he writes that it is one of the best audience pictures he had handled in his twelve years in the business.

The cut speaks for itself except that the circular panel back of the figure of Mae Murray in the centre requires a little explaining. This had openings cut in the circumference, back of which a colored wheel revolved so slowly that the various colors did not blend into one neutral tint. At night this was illuminated by a spot light, but we think that placing colored mediums back of the openings, illuminating from the rear, and interrupting the light with the revolving wheel would have made an even better effect. This would give some result, even in daylight.

Mr. Rogers does not tell the color scheme but blue and white, red and yellow, red and black, yellow and black and blue and silver would all give good color combinations.

Back stage a phonograph was supplied with jazz records and a repeater attachment and this was relayed to a magnavox back of the central panel for a mysterious music effect.

Pride Pays

When the Strand Theatre, Ottumwa, Ia., played Marion Davies in When Knighthood Was in Flower, W. E. Matlock, the manager, got a letter from the Des Moines Paramounteer to the effect that Ottumwa was the first city in the southern part of the State and the second in the entire State to see the Cosmopolitan production.

Matlock reproduced the letter for his display advertisement and local pride did the rest. Even the newspapers played up the appeal to municipal vanity. If you get an early run you don't have to be too darned careful as to the exact truth. It's a strong bid always. It means nothing, but sounds well.

There is an Egyptian slant to "The World's Applause," and Richard A. Addison, of the Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, Calif., played this up with very little painting—and a Buddha. It was a great flash.

Mid-week Splash to Help Dangerous Age

This makes a too long cut, but the text is so good that we are pasing it along to you. Even if you do not get The Dangerous Age you can fit it to any one of half a hundred other titles. It is one of those special stunts J. W. Sayre, of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Seattle pulls now and then. In the original it is 180 lines by two. It ran in the middle of the week. Sayre thought that the business could be jazzed up a little, so he discarded the usual form of display ad and broke out with this on Wednesday. It put a new kick into the house receipts and paid for itself many times over. Some of this may have come out of the press book, but it sounds like Sayre. Few managers realize that sometimes even a good attraction needs a midweek tonic, but often receipts can be jumped by giving a little fresh push with a special display if the business is not full capacity, and Sayre collected a lot of coin with a display that was read by everyone. He writes the same sort of stuff each week in his Screenland, the house organ, and they are used to looking for his quips, so that when the Liberty came out with this display, they all settled down to read. Probably it reached a great many who fully intended to go if they had time, and were not quite certain they would have the time. When they heard from him, they figured that they simply must go and the half-formed intention was crystallized into an urge. This sort of stuff cannot be used very often. If it is, it will lose its punch, but for a now and then idea, if you can write this style of stuff or get it out of the press book or from the titles, you will find that it brings in real money.

Too Much Black Is Hurtful to Display

This advertisement from the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, would have been unusually good had the printer been prevented from spoiling it with too much bold type. That lined backing gives the panels an isolation which does not require that every line be set in the blackest type to be had in the size used. The stars could have been displayed in a light face letter of a little smaller size, and the sales lines would have looked better in italic. The text in the lower panel could have been made a light italic, and the result would have been a very pretty display; but it is almost impossible to persuade a Los Angeles printer to cut out the heavy blacks unless you stand over him with a club, and the result is that there is no real display because it is all "display." You might get the idea in a single-column reproduction, but we are hitting it up to a two because we think that a study of the space will repay you. Note how the names of Stone and Miss Clifford keep the title from showing at its best, and how they, in turn, are held down by the lines below. Then try and imagine how that would have looked with all of the star names smaller, both in the matter of height and lightness of line. Figure how the 'Jazz age" line would have come up had Louis B. Mayer been presented in an eight-point roman instead of twelve-point bold. Then take it over to your printer and talk it over with him. Don't let on that you are trying to teach him something. Cut this text off and pretend that you are trying to get information, not give it. Perhaps the idea will sink in and he will give your own job a better result next time he sets one. Black type is not display. Sometimes it is precisely the reverse. Good display is relative and consists in giving display to the important lines and not to all of the type matter. You do not lose the effect of the lesser lines by holding them down. In a space so well guarded nothing else can intrude. You will get the lines read and read more easily in a lighter letter and at the same time give greater strength to the big lines.

Grauman Combines Three House Ads

Combining three displays to get a larger space without taking as much space for any one of the attractions is only one of the points of improvement shown by the Grauman advertising department. For some weeks now they have been using stock cuts for attractors and have given the type its proper place as the chief selling agency. This set of three is not as good, in point of copy, as some of the other examples to come in lately, but even this is so much better than the old material as to excite comment. The cuts are from the plan books and work just as well as the original drawings, and there is no excess of art work to confuse the eye and detract from the message. These days it is no job at all to discern with the naked eye just what the Grauman houses offer in the way of main attractions and other program components. Two of these features are holdovers, To Have and to Hold entering its fourth week, with Robin Hood credited with a longer stay than that. Only The Pride of Palomar is a one-week feature, and that is in its last day. It is odd that Grauman does not follow the usual course on the west coast and open on Saturday when he can make his Saturday and Sunday splashes work for more than one day. Opening Monday, he gets very little business out of his Sunday ads. Of course the Grauman houses are institutions and people go there week after week without particular notice of the feature, but there is still some business to be gotten from the transient trade if it were properly approached, and this would at least justify a Sunday opening, with the Saturday space given the coming attraction.

to prefer the deep advertisement, but it is seldom that they achieve effects as striking as the better proportioned space. In this instance hand work further detracts from the effect. column width as against the present two both the title of the shorter feature and the vaudeville act should have been given a single line, with a hairline, part-length rule instead of the heavy paneling that makes the space look like a pigeon-holed layout. This would have permitted the stretching of the main title, Over the Border, to a single line, which, in an eighteen-point type, would have been more conspicuous than the huddled hand work, and the cuts could have been used without the signboard if the latter could not be stretched to three. It looks like a space built around a plan book cut instead of a plan book cut selected to fit a space. Since this cut means very little it might have been better to have dropped this out if another cut could not be found, but generally there is a cut in every plan book that Paramount puts out that can be made to work in a space if it is trimmed a little. In any event a little more white space would have helped; all out of proportion to its area. This looks cramped and does not carry the suggestion of bigness, but rather that the space was too small, carrying the same suggestion as you get from a child in misfitting clothes. We believe that Mr. Lichtenstein can do much better than this.

Hookups for Sixty

Hookups were the main reliance of M. J. Melvin, of the Phiel Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., on Lorna Doone. The National Biscuit Company contributed a large display advertisement on Sunday and put two demonstrators into the lobby to sample the patrons, and stirred the grocers to displays. Another hookup was made from the book end. Between them they gave the business a sixty per cent hoist.

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." That is the spirit that prompts sincere exhibitors to send the dependable booking tips you always find on these pages. Used by a host of exhibitors, they have aided in the booking of good pictures and the avoiding of bad ones. They are published in a spirit of fair play to producer and exhibitor, without fear or favor. Use these tips and send some from your own experience.

American Releasing

DANGER POINT. (5,807 feet). Star, Carmel Myers. Can't say much for this. Bought it cheap and it surely was cheap. Town of 8,000, draw working classes. Generally admission is 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

FOOLS OF FORTUNE. (5,600 feet). Star, Russell Simpson. Look out for this. I played it, knowing what I was getting, and bolstered it up with a fine line of fillers and "got by." But don't expect much from this picture—in five reels of photography. Advertised as usual to health seekers and tourists. Attendance good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. (7,382 feet). Star cast. I did not think much of this picture and my patrons told me the same, although I did a good business. Look before you book this one. Used six, three, one, slide, to pull good attendance. Big city, draw all classes, getting ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. (7,382 feet). Star cast. For me, a good, entertaining picture. Had fair attendance. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,377 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This is a knockout and pleased everyone. One of the cleanest as well as one of the funniest comedies we have ever shown. Used ones, three, photos, window cards for fine attendance. Town of 1,700, draw town and country. Admission 10-25 and 15-25. Herbert Taft, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

LADY GODIVA. (5,800 feet). Star, Hedda Vernon. Just another foreign production. Drew good for me, but did not satisfy. My advertising slant would be the title. Attendance was fair. Town of 2,300, regular small town. Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

SILAS MARNER. (6,344 feet). Stars, Kent, Crawford, Courtot, others. You can tie up with schools on this one and clean up. They liked it fine and the public schools turned out to see it. Small town patronage, good attendance. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

F. B. O.

BOY CRAZY. (4,800 feet). Star, Doris May. For me, a mediocre picture that did not pull. Every time we run this star we lose money on her. Used lobby and newspaper, had very bad attendance. Draw mixed type. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

FIRST WOMAN. (4,950 feet). Star, Mildred Harris. By far the best program picture I have ever run. Better than lots of specials. It's got the surprise at the end that sends them away pleased. Print good. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Town of 1,364, general type. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. (5,400 feet). Star, Harry Carey. My patrons said this was Carey's best picture. Action in this one will knock 'em off their seats. Book it and boost it. Used six, three, one, lobby, slide for very good attendance. Big city, all classes, get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. (6,126 feet). Featured cast. Fair. Has popular appeal, good exploitation material and if bought right should prove a money maker. Advertised with billboards, seven newspapers. Draw every class, having fair attendance. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

MY DAD. (5,600 feet). Star, Johnnie Walker. A great picture to screen about the middle of August; plenty of snow scenes, which, coupled with the aboundance of snow with which we are blessed this winter, gave some cold feet. Good, nevertheless. Advertised usual way, with good attendance. City of 44,000; draw mixed type. Admission 10-17-20-25. Walter C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

SON OF THE WOLF. (4,970 feet). Star cast. Norman Dwan directed. For me, absolutely nothing to it at all. Poorest picture I have ever run. Good many left before picture was half over. Advertised with ones, threes, six, slide. Attendance poor. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

WHITE HANDS. (5,654 feet). Star, Hobart Bosworth. Star always good. A good program picture; has moral attached. Nothing extra in advertising, fair attendance. Town of 2,500, usual small town draw. Admission 17-28. Stanley G. Allen, Allen Theatre, Chatham, New York.

First National

ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR. (6,131 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Just another motion picture. Not as good as his usual run but better than his weakest. For us, Ray is about done. I wouldn't want to pay too much for it. Advertising angles are nothing exceptional. Poor attendance. Town of 7,100, draw better class. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. (7,268 feet). Stars, Kirkwood, Daw, Wesley Barry. This is old but good. The only objection to it is its length. Nine reels. When you give them a two-reel comedy along with a feature of this length, by the time the show is over and the farmers return home through the thirty-foot snow banks, they get no time to sleep as it is then time to start massaging the cows. Attendance was good, though. Town of about 2,000, draw town and country. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,650 feet). Features dog, Strongheart. A splendid audience picture and made us money. Usual advertising pulled excellent business. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Very good picture and one that will please all classes in any community. Get behind it, it's worth it. Used special cards, extra paper to bring good attendance. Town of 6,000. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

FURY. (8,700 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Truly a great picture. Our patrons were highly pleased; incidentally, we did much better business the second day than the first. Used regular panels and newspaper, having excellent attendance. Town of 5,000, draw home class. Admission 10-28, war tax included. C. L. Laws, T. & D. Theatre, Watsonville, California.

LORNA DOONE. (6,082 feet). Stars, Madge Bellamy, John Bowers. Good; audience liked it. Advertising slant—National Biscuit Company had man here three days for tie-up. Attendance was big. City of 17,000, draw family trade. Matinee admission 10-17, evening 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

MASQUERADER. (7,835 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. Extra good for the people who know good pictures. A masterpiece of acting. Shot just a little bit over my headgear, but when real folks told me it was good I began to believe it myself. Town of about 8,000. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

MASQUERADER. (7,835 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. A fair picture; does not compare with the legitimate. Exhibition value too high, as it is with all these for me now. Advertised extensively to best class and got very poor attendance. L. Holeman, Garick Theatre, Madisonville, Kentucky.

MIDNIGHT BELL. (6,140 feet). Star, Charles Ray. One of Ray's best. Pleased most all. Some very funny situations. Used ones, threes, photos. Attendance good. Town of 1,700, draw from town and country. Admission 10-25 and 15-25. Herbert Taft, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

PRIMITIVE LOVER. (6,172 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Connie has been slipping for me, but she came back strong in this one, and pleased a fair sized crowd each night. Last three reels are Western. You can promise quite a lot on this one. Town of 7,125, draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-30. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

SCRAP IRON. (5,000 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Pleased Ray fans, but didn't draw any new ones out. Good for fight fans. Used regular advertising. Attendance good. Town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

SIGN ON THE DOOR. (7,100 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A great picture from every angle. A little old but worth working. Attendance good. Town of 1,600, draw high class patrons. Admission 10, 25 to 50. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

SIGN ON THE DOOR. (7,100 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Story and production good, but I was surprised to see an actress of Norma Talmadge's ability doing such crude work as wiping her nose and mopping her mouth to simulate sobbing. If this is "Art"—I'm Henry Irving! Town of 800. Draw farmers and miscellaneous. Admission 10-25. Al. C. Stewart, Empire Theatre, Waitsburg, Washington.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Don't let them kid you along about this picture. Just fair drawing card. Perhaps if you could give about all you got in away to put it over, would draw. Comments from just a few. Advertised extra big; fell down on it. Town of 5,000, draw best in town. William C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

TROUBLE. (4,800 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A first class picture, but a little too old here, as it has had too many return dates already. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge, with Eugene O'Brien. Drew well and profitably for entire week, though story is not as good as many previous ones. Norma is wonderful. Used usual newspaper space to pull excellent attendance. Big city, general draw. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

WHITE SHOULDERS. (5,966 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. A fine picture. This star does not pull, but I ran this on a Sunday to good business. Town of 4,000, draw family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

WOMAN CONQUERS. (5,102 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Good. A nice mixture of society scenes and outdoor scenes wtih the latter predominating. Used posters and papers to pull fair attendance. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

WONDERFUL THING. (6,880 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. This picture pleased every one. A picture which will appeal to the average audience. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Town of 1,800, draw mixed type. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred. S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

Fox

BOSS OF CAMP FOUR. (4,325 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. This is an ordinary Jones picture. Cannot help but satisfy the younger generation, but I am quite positive that the older people will not think much of it. Usual advertising accessories drew good attendance. Town of 1,000, draw all classes; summertime our best time; run only once a week now. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

BRASS COMMANDMENTS. (4,829 feet). Star, William Farnum. This is a good Western with a good cast. It did not take with me for the reason that my patrons do not enjoy Westerns. Used one, three, six, twenty-four, 11x14s for poor attendance. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

BROADWAY PEACOCK. (4,380 feet). Star, Pearl White. Patrons classed this as a very poor picture, and I guess they were right. Also, several remarked that Fox pictures were not as good as they formerly were. Attendance was good. City of 110,000, draw medium working classes. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

DEVIL WITHIN. (5,997 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Six reels that should have been cut down to five. Action somewhat slow. It seems that when a producer has a first class star he wants to make him "act" too much before the camera. The fans don't want that sort of "acting"—they want realistic action! Personally I thought this picture excellent. Forty per cent of the audience thought otherwise. Used slides, ones, threes, sidewalk ads. Attendance fair. Town of 1,000, draw general type. Regular admission 10-20, special 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. The worst picture this star has ever appeared in. In some places it is very silly. It did not please here. Used ones, threes, sixes, drew fair attendance. Town of 4,200, drew neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FAST MAIL. (6,000 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. One of Jones' best pictures here. Advertised with threes, ones, newspaper; crowds were big, pleased a hundred per cent. Town of 4,000, draw mixed class. Admission 15-30. Gus Frank, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

FAST MAIL. (6,000 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Picture with lots of action and thrills. Pleased the majority. Used regular advertising, had good attendance. Town of 1,800, draw mixed class. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

FAST MAIL. (6,000 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. We let them "kid" us on this and bought it as a special, when it is nothing more than a good "Buck" Jones star picture. Played it in a house where melodrama is not liked and it flopped with a sickening thud. Where they like Jones they will like this, but it lacks a whole lot of being a special. Advertising slant, several startling big scenes. Attendance was poor. City of 14,000, drawing merchants, farmers, workers. Average admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GREAT NIGHT. Star, William Russell. A very good picture and was payed well through the whole production. Used twenty-four, six, three, one, 11x14s, slide, had normal attendance. Draw from best people in city. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

THE JOLT. (5,000 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. Very good program picture. Walker and Edna Murphy are two good stars and our patrons like them very much. Used photos, paper, slide, got pretty good attendance. Town of 1,000, draw all classes. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, featuring horse, Tony. Very good, as are all of Mix's pictures. Regular advertising drew good attendance. Thomas J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Only fair program picture. Bad weather, snow; did not do any business on this one. A Western; will go over about fifty per cent. Regular advertising. Town of 992, draw mixed class. Admission 10-25 to 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

MAN'S SIZE. (4,316 feet). Star, William Russell. One of Russell's best pictures. Pleased all who saw it. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

MEN OF ZANZIBAR. (4,990 feet). Star, William Russell. Showmen, you will not make a mistake in booking this picture. Has a good plot and a thrilling climax. Pleased well in my house. Used a three, two ones, for fair attendance. Town of 2,000, draw residential class. W. F. Piland, Victory Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

MIXED FACES. (4,400 feet). Star, William Russell. Good feature. Pleased everyone. I think the story was very good, but William Russell is not the star for this kind of picture. Used regular advertising and had good patronage. Town of 1,800, draw mixed class. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

MOONSHINE VALLEY. (5,619 feet). Star, William Farnum. Very good feature; pleased everyone. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Town of 1,800, draw mixed attendance. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

MY FRIEND THE DEVIL. (9,555 feet). Star cast. A very good feature, for me. One of Fox's best Specials. Draws only high class patronage. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

NERO. (11,500 feet). All star. A great, spectacular production that cost over a million dollars, in my belief, but isn't worth much for the exhibitor as it hasn't much of a title. This picture was overrated. Used newspapers and regular advertising, with

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Several times we have reared up on our hind legs and snorted because so many exhibitors are getting mutilated films, bad prints—whatever you want to call them.

Still the reports come in: "had a bad print and audience didn't know what it was all about" or "the ending was chopped out and my audience asked me when I was going to run 'the next part.'"

This bad print thing doesn't seem to mean much to the exchange; but it sure does mean a lot to an exhibitor when he spends his money to get a good house and finds out he has to show them damaged goods. He can't get a substitute as they do in Grand Opera when the prima donna's top note goes sour. He has to face the music and face it for days afterward.

D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania, thinks every report ought to state condition of film. That's good, but not enough. Plenty of exhibitors tell the world about it here, but that hasn't seemed to help. Adjustments with exchanges don't get back patron confidence.

What will help? A little more care in the exchanges. More care in projection rooms. It's time to get busy. VAN.

poor attendance. Town of 3,000, draw poor class mostly. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

NEW TEACHER. (4,453 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A cute little picture of this star's type. Pleased all who saw it. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

NIGHT HORSEMAN. (4,970 feet). Star, Tom Mix. We play very few Westerns, but this one—certainly pleased. Brand new print. Our first Mix, but we expect to play them all now. Used regular advertising. Poor draw on account of rain. Small town draw. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

NIGHT HORSEMAN. (4,970 feet). Star, Tom Mix. For me, Fox has a habit of sending out about two-thirds of the print on Mix subjects, this one being no exception. Might be all right if it was all there; rotten the way it was. Used photos and newspapers, had poor attendance. Town of 600, draw townspeople. Regular admission 10-25. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

OVER THE HILL. (11,000 feet). Mary Carr and star cast. Small exhibitors—book this one, whatever you do! Biggest and best ever shown here of its kind. Had the biggest crowd in the history of Enterprise Theatre and pleased a hundred per cent. Used extra heralds, threes, six, ones, photos, pulling extra good. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

QUEENIE. (5,174 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A very good little program picture. Shirley Mason does some wonderful acting. Story light, but very pleasing. Attendance fair. Small town, draw general class. Admission fifteen cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A good program picture. The usual Tom Mix picture. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ROUGH SHOD. (4,486 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Fairly good picture. Where Jones is liked it should go. He is only a fair drawing card here. Advertised regular way to get fair business. S. H. McNeill, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ontario, Canada.

SELF MADE MAN. (4,920 feet). Star, William Russell. The kind of picture that pleases in a small town a hundred per cent. It certainly made a hit here. Draw general small town class. Admission ten cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. (5,957 feet). Star, William Farnum. The usual Farnum picture—nothing either to commend or condemn. William Nobe, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. (5,957 feet). Star William Farnum. Pretty fair picture with Farnum in a sort of society role which he manages to put over pretty good. In no way a big feature, but satisfies if they like Farnum. City of 15,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-30. Ben L. Morris, Elk Grand, Temple, Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. (5,957 feet). Star William Farnum. Not up to the standard of Farnum pictures. Farnum should play in Western—not Society—plays. Used newspaper and posters. Attendance good. City of 12,000, draw all classes. Change admission. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS. (4,668 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. This picture drew well and pleased. It's a fine little picture. Only objection you might find is that the first three reels are all laid in France. Lot of pep in the last reel when the lion gets loose in the crowded circus tent. Advertising slant—a story of the circus, lion escape. Attendance good. Town of 7,125, draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-20. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. Mary Carr, in "Over the Hill," holds the best house record and, I believe, in "Silver Wings," the worst. She is a wonderful character, but no more "sob stuff" for me, if I have my choice. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

SMILES ARE TRUMPS. (4,049 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Fine program thriller. If your fans like fast action and plenty of thrills, get this one. Played to a Wednesday night bunch who went out satisfied. Used one and three sheet. Poor attendance. Town of 1,000, draw general class. Admission regularly 10-20, specials 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

STRANGE IDOLS. (4,300 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. "Sob sister stuff." There's no excuse for this class "movie" except to fill dates and lose money. Keaton saved the show. Poor old Keaton—seems to have hard work saving a lot of shows—and Semon; but they do it. Town of 2,850, draw transients, tourists, farmers. Regular admission 10-25, Thursday nights 15-35. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

STRENGTH OF THE PINES. (4,382 feet). Star, William Russell. This story has been running for the past six weeks in the boilerplate section of our local weekly. They gave me plenty of gratis space and I packed 'em in. There is a murder or some sort of a killing every few feet. My regulars told me they thought it was a piece of "cheese." Attendance was good. Town of 2,000, regular small town draw. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

UP AND GOING. Star, Tom Mix. A better type of Tom Mix picture that is more pleasing to your best class of patrons. Bennie Cline and Dan Clark's work at the camera is wonderful and the boys deserve a handshake from all of us. Some fine shots and the production brimful of action. Will please any audience, whether they like Mix or not. Advertised with ones, threes, slide. Attendance fair. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

VERY TRULY YOURS. (5,000 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Mason staged a wonderful comeback. A ninety-nine per cent pure entertainment. Her new co-helpers look good. Play on significance of title. Attendance excellent. Town of 282; admission 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre Cushing, Iowa.

WHILE JUSTICE WAITS. (4,762 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Fine program picture. Patrons say that Dustin is better than his brother, William, because he acts naturally. Usual accessories pulled fair attendance. Town of about 600 in winter; summer our best time; draw all classes. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

YOUTH MUST HAVE LOVE. (4,368 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A good little picture. Regular advertising and good attendance. Thomas J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

Mr. Schutz Talks About Vaudeville

Mr. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico, has something to say about the acts that play in picture houses. Here's his talk:

"Away up here the so-called vaudeville we are able to get is 'rotten.' I don't see why the exhibitors who play vaudeville with their pictures don't send in reports (when they are able). It would enable exhibitors to get a line on any vaudeville in this part of the country. I, for one, would appreciate reports and I know there are many whom it would help. Straight From the Shoulder reports are the best way to get a line on pictures. I take another service of reports, but you can't beat Straight From the Shoulder."

It's a question for the boys to handle. This is really a motion picture trade paper, but here's the suggestion. What do you say?

Goldwyn

BE MY WIFE. (4,650 feet). Star, Max Linder. A fairly good picture, but have seen better. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Lon Chaney and star cast. Excellent in every respect. Plug Chaney's dual role—scientist and ape man—and you have a winner. Used a special built front, pulled excellent attendance. Big city, draw transient trade. Admission 17-20. J. L. Stallman, Savoy Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). All star. Failed to pull, but pleased. To me worth just one-half what I paid for it. No better than "Dust Flower," sold for less than half. Attendance fair. Town of 4,000, draw family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

HIS BACK AGAINST THE WALL. (4,690 feet). Star, Raymond Hatton. Fair attendance; crowds were disappointed for a Western. Used threes and ones to pull fair attendance in town of 700 with country and town draw. James Blodgett, Rushville Theatre, Rushville, New York.

INVISIBLE POWER. (6,000 feet). Stars, House Peters, Irene Rich. Frank Lloyd production. A very fine picture. Irene Rich leading lady. The regeneration of a crook through the love and confidence of a good woman. Used a three, two ones, photos. Attendance fair. Town of 650, draw town and country class. Admission 10-22-25. Elmer E. Stearns, "Dewtell" Theatre, South Dayton, New York.

PARDON MY FRENCH. (5,500 feet). Star, Vivian Martin. This picture is rather novel and should please most any audience. It was sold to us for a program picture and we can recommend it as a good one. Usual lobby, etc., pulled fair attendance. Small town, regular type. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

MADAME X. (7,000 feet). Star, Pauline Frederick. When you want something extra to offer your patrons, put this on. Mighty good. Used threes, ones, slide, photos, heralds to pull good attendance in small town of mixed class. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

MADAME X. (7,000 feet). Star, Pauline Frederick. Ditto on all the rest of the reports so far. One of the finest and most interesting pictures of this class we have ever shown. A hundred per cent satisfaction and people told us so as they left with smiles and red, tear-soaked eyes. One lady told me she cried until she had a headache. Court scene wonderful. Ran this with Semon in "The Fall Guy." Comedy did not come up to my expectations. Booked this from reports, as we do with all our programs. Used ones, a three, heralds and local paper. Attendance was good. Town of 305, drawing village and country. Admission 10-30 and 10-35. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

SIN FLOOD. (6,500 feet). Star cast. There was just a little something that prevented "Sin Flood" from being one of the really great productions of the year. Was it a too sudden transition from the usual type to a sublime feeling of brotherhood in the face of death or a too thin love story, or both? Still it was much and favorably commented upon and drew well. A credit to any house to run it. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

STRANGER'S BANQUET. (5,531 feet). Star cast. This all-star production resembles the Milky Way on a cloudy night—the continuity is a jumble of misplaced titles and several different lines of dramatic action. If this is the best Neilan can do, I do not want another. Had more kicks, walk-outs and money refunds with this than, all told, for the past two years. Advertising slants are unlimited—but don't. Attendance was fair in town of 4,100, drawing all classes. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, advertising manager for Edwin Bluck, owner, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

Hodkinson

CERTAIN RICH MAN. Star, Robert McKim. Gloomy and unwholesome. Good enough picture of its kind, but will only appeal to those people who come to be made miserable. Less of it, Hod, less of it. Town of 800, draw farmers and miscellaneous types. Admission 10-25. Al. C. Stewart, Empire Theatre, Waitsburg, Washington.

HEADLESS HORSEMAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Will Rogers. This feature follows the story, Irving's "Legend of Sleepy Hollow," close enough so that they recognize what it is; in fact, as close as they can adapt a story of "old New York" to satisfy the audience of today. It's a little slow compared with the high-power stuff the audiences seem to want, but Will Rogers as Ichabod Crane pleased our audiences much more than I thought he would when the lights went down at 7:30. We are glad that we played it; told them through the papers that they had seen bigger but not any better. It is worth playing in any house. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

NO TRESPASSING. (6,900 feet). Star, Irene Castle. A slow moving picture that puts people to sleep watching it. Used regular advertising, had poor attendance. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

RIP VAN WINKLE. (7,000 feet). Star, Joseph Jefferson, Jr. A dandy. The humor is good. Much credit due the titler. The schools co-operated. Hope this picture survives as a classic as I want to bring it back here a few years later for the next batch of school kids. Announced it on monthly program, used slide, ones and letter to superintendents of neighboring schools. Had good attendance. Town of 300, draw farmers. Usual admission 15-25, occasionally 20-30. E. L. Partridge, Ryan Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,265 feet). Star cast, including Lon Chaney. One of the best sea stories I have ever played. Pleased a hundred per cent. Boost it; it will stand all the boosting you give it. Used lobby and newspaper for fair attendance. Mixed small town draw. Admission 10-30. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

Mr. Werner Helps

"Theatre closed a week. When open will send reports regular. I read everything in Straight From the Shoulder and think it about the best I've ever read. Regards to Van. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas."

These reports are good because Mr. Werner and other honest exhibitors contribute them.

MATCH BREAKER. (6,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Not a big picture, but good entertainment. Used threes, ones, stills, heralds, newspaper. Admission 15-35. Town of 400, small town, no country. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9,000 feet). Rex Ingram production, all star. Boost this and advertise it big. Everything a Special should be! Navarro, Barbara La Marr wonderful. Used ones, threes, six, photo, newspaper, twenty-four, stunts. Patronage high class. Attendance fair. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. (8,000 feet). Rex Ingram production, with Jack Mulhall. A very good picture; pleased all. The best Rex Ingram picture I ever ran. Attendance good, of small town type. W. M. Venturo, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. (5,481 feet). Star, Wallace Reid, cast includes Theo. Roberts. A good Reid picture. Roberts is a wonderful "old man." Used slide, one sheet, 11x14s, to get good attendance of mixed type. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. (5,481 feet). Star, Wallace Reid, cast includes Theo. Roberts. A wonderful picture. You never go wrong when you get a Reid production full of thrills. You can rely on Paramount for reasonable prices and good shows for small towns. Used threes and photos to pull good attendance, drawing small town mixed types. W. H. Sebastian, Royal Theatre, West Liberty, Kentucky.

ALWAYS AUDACIOUS. (6,000 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Holds one's interest throughout. Very good program picture. Advertised with ones, heralds, photos, for good attendance. Harry Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, South Dakota.

AFTER THE SHOW. (5,884 feet). Featured cast. A different picture, but a dandy. Used one sheet and 11 x 14s, appealing to small town mixed class, had good attendance. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR. (5,601 feet). Stars, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt. This met with the approval of a fair sized audience and I consider it worth showing. My advertising slant was to lay stress on popularity of the play. Attendance fair. Town of 3,000, typical small town without foreigners. Admission 15-20. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Wanda Hawley. Not a "Sheik" picture. Only a fair program. Too many subtitles almost spoiled it. Speedy projection and heavy music will put it over. My advertising slants were the title and story. Attendance average. Town of 5,000, all nationalities. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

CAPPY RICKS. (5,962 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This star is always good. A very good picture. Advertised with photos, slide, ones, to mixed type, for poor attendance (radio concert was on, also heavy snow storm). D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

DICTATOR. (5,221 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Nothing but good words for this. Went over fine. Kept audience laughing and they all said they surely enjoyed it. Used regular advertising for good attendance. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35-40. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

FACE IN THE FOG. (5,569 feet). A well acted and produced picture. Moderately entertaining; not worth the price paid. Used usual advertising to neighborhood draw, for poor attendance. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

FOOL'S PARADISE. (8,000 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. One of the best Paramount ever made. You won't go wrong on this one. Advertise heavy, advance your prices, the picture will stand all you can give it. Used newspaper, three and two ones for good attendance. Town of 800 white, 1,200 colored, draw all sorts. Admission 10-20. H. S. Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

FOOTLIGHTS. (7,978 feet). Star, Elsie Ferguson. A good picture; many favorable remarks on it. It was the first picture we had played with Elsie Ferguson in it, and she went over big. Attendance was the better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

FULL HOUSE. (4,000 feet). Star, Bryant Washburn. A good program picture, but like many of their pictures, too darned high price for an exhibitor in small town to make money. Used one, three, six, slide, 11x14, for good attendance. Town of 1,100, draw general class. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

GREEN TEMPTATION. (5,000 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Star is popular here and her support in this picture was all that could be desired. Title has good drawing power. People were curious to know what the "temptation" was. Used slide, billboards to pull good attendance. Town of 800, country patronage. Admission varies. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

LANE THAT HAD NO TURNING. (4,893 feet). A very good program picture. However, there is a hunchback character in it that is repulsive. Scenes of this nature seem to cause a creepy feeling in women and children. Advertised with ones, threes, sixes, slide. Attendance, poor. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission, 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

MAN FROM HOME. (6,895 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. A fine production, filmed among the beauty spots of Italy. One objection—there is an unnecessary number of subtitles. Advertised usual ways. Attendance good. Town of 7,000, draw general type. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Very good picture. Advertised with newspaper and billboard. S. R. Peake, Pastime Theatre, Maquoketa, Iowa.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. (5,795 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A very good picture with a South Sea setting and a well liked star, helped to put this one over in good shape. Advertised with photos, slide, threes and ones. Attendance good. Draw neighborhood type, admission being 10-20. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. With Jack Holt. Picture pleased a big business. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MORAN OF LADY LETTY. Only a fair picture for me. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones. Patronage: resort. Attendance: good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

SINGED WINGS. Star, Bebe Daniels. For me, nothing to it. This picture fell short when it came to pleasing the people. Advertised usual way. Attendance was fair. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS. (5,784 feet). Featured cast. Everybody enjoyed this one. At times the whole house was in an uproar. Lots of comedy; will please most any audience. If you can get them in, it will certainly please. Advertised with usual posters. Attendance good. Town of 4,800, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TILLIE. (5,125 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Picture old. Some very good characters. Will get by for a program picture, if you buy it right. Print O. K. Advertised usual ways. Attendance poor. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

TOP OF NEW YORK. (5,148 feet). Star, May McAvoy. Just an ordinary picture. Star is charming to look at—but this picture will please some and displease some. Usual advertising gave fair attendance. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

TRUTHFUL LIAR. (5,243 feet). Star Wanda Hawley. This picture is fairly good, but not for a feature. Advertised with one sheets, etc. Attendance was regular for Saturday. City of 10,000, draw working people. Admission twenty-five cents. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Reubens. A very good Curwood picture and beautiful scenery. Regular advertising brought fair patronage. Thos. J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. This is a great big, wonderful costume picture and will draw where people know and like English history. Extra big advertising to good attendance. City of 10,000, draw middle class people. Admission twenty-five cents. Bert Jackson, for Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

WHILE SATAN SLEEPS. (6,675 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This is a good picture and should draw if advertised good. We advertised so and had good attendance. City of 10,000, middle class draw. Admission twenty-five cents. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

WHISTLE. (5,359 feet). Star W. S. Hart. A fine picture from every angle. Pleased everybody. Advertised with slides, threes and ones. Attendance good. Town of 2,800, draw nearly all working people. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WHITE OAK. (6,208 feet). Star, W. S. Hart. Not up to standard. Patrons walked out on this one. Advertised usual way, attendance fair. Town of 1,700, mostly draw visitors. Admission 15-25. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. (5,947 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A fairly good picture. Pleased about seventy-five per cent of our audiences. Used posters, slide, to fair attendance; better class draw. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

YOUNG DIANA. (6,744 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Personally thought it was very weak, but it seemed to please our patrons unusually well. The production is a very rich one and will draw the women if properly exploited. Had "Our Gang" comedy and Pathe News with it. My advertising slants would be, Marie Corelli (author) and gowns worn. Attendance good. City of 14,000, draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. One of the celebrated "41" that we bought sight unseen and paid big money for and were sadly disappointed with. The public sure stayed away on the two days that we showed it. Fair story value. Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Fair attendance, and seemed to please all patrons, especially the women. Used newspaper, window cards, billboards, for general patronage in town of 9,237. Admission 10-20-30. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. For the smaller cities I believe this is a better box office bet than "Blood and Sand" though not so great a production. Your people will like the ending better. Valentino is an ideal lover in this picture and it seemed to please everyone who likes his style. Extra good business three days. City of 15,000, draw general classes. Admission 10-25-30. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

As It Came

Just to let you see a sample of the things we have to weed out, give this the once-over. It came on a regular report blank, torn out of the exhibitors' dependable tip department.

Title, comedies. Your Own Report, Yes, is my report, have never play in movies and would like to start in comedies and am thirteen years old and may I join? (Name and address censored—it's great to do a little censoring; everybody's doing it).

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Another knockout for Lloyd. Some said, "Better than 'Grandma's Boy'"; others said, "Not as good." However, it is a winner and worth all the boosting you can give it. Did less for us than "Grandma's Boy," but did not flop by any means. Advertising slant: star and his previous hits. Attendance good. City of 14,000, draw from merchants, clerks, farmers. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HOUSE OF THE TOLLING BELL. (6,000 feet). Good program picture. Attendance was good. Small town of 350, draw town and country. Admission 10-28. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

Playgoers

DISCONTENTED WIVES. (4,695 feet). Star, J. P. McGowan. Fair picture; will get by if well advertised. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Okahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES. (4,687 feet). Star, Leah Baird. A mighty nice program picture that will please. We have played some very good Paygoers features. Advertised this with ones, photos, slides. Attendance fair. Large city, draw from church community. Admission 10-20. P. J. Delgrande, Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

Preferred Pictures

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (6,500 feet). Star cast, includes Claire Windsor. Has both star and story value coupled with good direction. Personally I consider this a very good picture. Attractive title. Mother love theme. Little Dick Headrick in child role. Business was average. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (6,500 feet). Star cast, includes Claire Windsor. A very good program picture. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Selznick

RECKLESS YOUTH. (5,700 feet). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Too bad to make this kind of stuff. Not fit to be shown in these clean-up days. Draw family class with fair attendance. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

RECKLESS YOUTH. (5,700 feet). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. For me, very good picture. Star takes well here. Used four ones and one three, bringing good attendance. Average small town of 2,500. Admission 17-28. Stanley G. Allen, Allen's Theatre, Chatham, New York.

REPORTED MISSING. (7,500 feet). Star, Owen Moore. Very fine entertainment. It is a rollicking romance told in a humorous vein and it kept the crowds laughing most of the time. Played Larry Semon in "Golf" in connection and it made a splendid comedy bill. For advertising angles the press book supplies several ideas. Had good attendance. City of 14,000, drawing from merchants, clerks, farmers. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

United Artists

THE NUT. (6,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Good picture, not big, however, cannot understand why the rumor that this is a "rotten" picture. In my opinion, the worst "Doug" picture is better than a lot of so-called Specials. Usual allotment of posters pulled fair attendance. Town of (winter population) 600, draw all classes. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

SUZANNA. (8,000 feet). Star, Mable Normand. Good picture. Ran full week to successful business. Our usual time is only two to three days. Usual advertising, mostly newspaper. Large city, draw white type only. Admission 20-30. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

"Mad Love"

Pola Negri Gives Remarkable Portrayal in Goldwyn Foreign-Made Film with Unhappy Ending.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Goldwyn is presenting the celebrated star, Pola Negri, in a German-made production "Mad Love," which probably more than any other of this star's pictures so far imported shows her remarkable ability as an actress. At all times she acts with sureness and decision, bringing out finely every little change in the mood of the heartless flirt who at last finds love only to lose it.

Due to the star's truly fine work which serves to verify previous estimates that she is one of the screen's most talented actresses, the production is proving to be a drawing card at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and by her ability and the fine direction of the picture which we understand to be the work of Dimitri Buchowetski, who has gained a reputation as one of the best of the European directors, the attention of the audience is held closely. And this, despite the fact that the settings, production details and work of the cast stamp the picture as a foreign-made production, and the further fact that the picture ends with the strangling to death of the heroine by a former suitor who has been rendered insane by her treatment of him. Obviously, this feature alone will render it unacceptable to spectators who demand at all times a happy ending, but the ending is entirely consistent with the story and the character of the heroine as portrayed by Pola Negri, and, further is perfectly logical.

The picture is finely mounted and unusually well lighted and photographed, and characteristic of the better class of German-made productions. There are some big and well handled mob scenes. In this instance the big scene represents a carnival ball in an enormous opera house in Paris, with several tiers of boxes. It is in such spectacular surroundings that the big climax is laid.

With the exception of the star, none of the other members of the cast are credited; all of them do good work and portray French roles and the entire action of the story is laid in France.

Story

Chabot comes to Paris to see about his cousin Andreas who is in a sanitarium and learns he has been driven insane by the heartlessness of the flirt Liane, the favorite of the Odeon. A friend takes him there where he denounces the wrong woman. Liane overhears him and seeks to win his love. She succeeds, as he does not know who she is, but falls really in love with him. They go away on their honeymoon, but a disappointed suitor follows and tells Chabot the truth. He leaves Liane and seeks to forget her but finally returns to her and finds her at a big carnival ball. Just then, Andreas, who has escaped from the sanitarium, comes on the scene and gets his revenge by strangling Liane to death.

"Are You a Failure?"

Al Lichtman's Tom Forman Comedy Drama a Lesson in Correspondence School Tactics

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

No doubt every student of correspondent schools will want to see B. P. Schulberg's comedy drama, "Are You a Failure?" directed by Tom Forman. For wasn't it a correspondence school that made a success of Young Blaine, a once hopeless failure? This writer dislikse to think what Blaine would have done if any of his lessons were lost in the mails. Gosh, he'd probably be sporting that raincoat and wearing his rubbers when the sun shone its brightest. That's how hopeless this chap was.

But we are seemingly living in the age of miracles. Coueism had nothing on the wonders that correspondence school course did for Blaine, who came from a family of fighters. Tom Forman knew this Blaine kid so well he presented him in a style that makes one sympathize with him and hope with him that the postman will not forget to deliver his next lesson. Anyway, your audience will have a lot of fun watching this chap trying to burn up the world. It took one week—only one week—to reconstruct his entire character. And, gee wilkins, what a change. The story is not new, but Tom Forman has handled it in a semi-serious way that proceeds to prove the authenticity of Dr. Coue's theory that imagination is superior to will power.

The story is interesting throughout, hoakum business putting over some of the rougher spots. The log jam toward the close of the picture in which Young Blaine proves himself worthy of the love of a wealthy lassie, is the real thing and very cleverly put over. The direction is flawless and the settings picturesque. Lloyd Hughes as the youngster is satisfactory in every way as is also Madge Bellamy who looks her best in this one. Tom Santschi, in a heavy role, does a comeback that is refreshing. The rest of the cast is good.

The Story

The Blaines were an old family, famous for their fighting ability. But Oliver Wendall Blaine, present head of the Blaine household, was helpless and the laughing stock of the town. He is loved by Phyllis Thorpe, daughter of his father's old employer. She has confidence in him. Discouraged, following an escape in which he is held up and ridiculed, Oliver consults the advertising columns of a newspaper, notices an advertisement of a correspondence school guaranteeing success in a week. He takes up the course and through these daily lessons finds himself and proves himself a hero when a log jam threatens to flood the town. Incidentally, he wins himself a job—the job held by his late father—and a wife.

"The Grub-Stake"

Unusually Fine Wild Animal Scenes in American Releasing Feature Starring Nell Shipman

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Apparently taking the cue from the big success of a previous picture with its unique assortment of wild animals in their native haunts, Nell Shipman is again presented in a picture of this type, "The Grub-Stake," which is being distributed by American Releasing Corporation. And it is on this angle that the drawing power of the picture will mainly depend. There are animal scenes in great abundance, full-grown and baby bears, cougars, foxes, and various other wild things, even including a family of skunks and anyone who delights in seeing views of wild animals "at home" will be delighted with this picture. In fact there is such an abundance of these scenes massed together in such profusion that they tend to retard the development of the story.

From the straight story angle, the picture is interesting, however, and despite faults in its development and direction there is sufficient "punch" to hold the average spectator. There is a melodramatic climax with a good if somewhat theatric thrill and some good fights. The locale is almost entirely in Alaska and the action vigorous. The picture is finely photographed and there are some exceedingly attractive shots.

Taken all in all, due to the acceptable story and the excellent animal stuff it is a picture that should please a majority of audiences, especially in neighborhood houses, and if properly exploited along its unusual angles, prove a good box office bet.

Nell Shipman is attractive in the leading role and she has been surrounded by a good cast who portray their roles satisfactorily; especially good is Alfred Allen in the unsympathetic role of the Alaskan who proves to be a thorough scoundrel, and George Berrell in a character role.

Story

Faith Diggs, who makes a precarious living for herself and her invalid father, encounters Mark Leroy. Faith's dreams are of the north and she begs Leroy to give her a grubstake so she can make a fresh start in Dawson. Leroy gives her the money and later pretends to marry her, while Faith, believing she is meeting the elite of the town, is introduced as the new "Queen of the Yukon." From Dawson Kate, a woman of the dance hall, Faith learns the truth about Leroy. The girl with her father flees into the wilderness. They are stranded, their supplies are gone and Faith's father is delirious with fever. Faith encounters scores of wild animals and lives in the woods until she is found by Kate's son. A romance springs up between them and they find a lost mine. Faith's "husband" seeks to jump the claim, but is repulsed and killed by a fall over a cliff. Faith falls too, but is rescued and all ends happily.

"Scars of Jealousy"

Thomas H. Ince Introduces an Unusual Theme Into His Newest First National Production

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There is an unusual note in Thomas H. Ince's First National production, "Scars of Jealousy," due to the fact that when a straight-laced, high principled gentleman of the old school disowns his own son because of his dissolute habits, he adopts in his place an ignorant mountaineer, of a clan known as Cajans, who are said to inhabit a section of a Southern state and who have degenerated intellectually but in whose veins flow some of the best blood of France, as their ancestors were noble refugees from the wrath of the king.

On these premises is built a story involving a romance and a hatred between the two boys which develops into a strong friendship and the regeneration of the dissolute chap when the Cajan adopts caveman tactics and takes him away to the mountains.

From a production standpoint, the picture is well handled and there are some excellent tinted scenes of a forest fire; there is also a melodramatic ending where the hero nearly loses his life in seeking to save the girl from the flames.

The basic theme is not altogether convincing, but for those who accept it at its face value, the character development, particularly of the Cajan boy and the straight-laced old father, furnishes an interesting study. Then, too, there is a pretty little romance which is rapidly developed between the polished and refined girl and the Cajan whose people are feared and looked down on by whites and blacks alike.

Aside from the unusual angle of the story this picture is not especially distinctive and from a standpoint of general interest does not appear to be as strong as other recent Ince productions.

Lloyd Hughes gives a good performance as the Cajan boy and Frank Keenan is excellent as the father. Marguerite De La Motte, with very limited opportunities, fulfills all the demands of the role of the girl and Edward Burns is satisfactory in the thankless role of the son. The remainder of the cast are entirely satisfactory.

Story

Col. Newland disowns his son because of his dissolute habits and adopts in his place an ignorant mountain boy of a class known as Cajans who are descendants of noble refugees from France. The boy's intellect develops rapidly. He saves the life of a friend of the family, Helen, when her horse runs away. Learning the truth about the Colonel's son, Jeff, the Cajan boy Coddy kidnaps Jeff, takes him to the mountains and by heroic treatment makes a man of him, and they become friends.

Coddy is accused of killing a revenue officer and jailed. Jeff becomes reconciled with his father and they bring a party to rescue Coddy who is about to be lynched. "The Famous Mrs. Fair"

Stirring and Vivid Drama of Real Life That Has Tremendous Box Office Power

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Vital, vivid and forceful is "The Famous Mrs. Fair," a Fred Niblo production, presented by Louis B. Mayer through Metro, which is based on a successful play by James Forbes. It is a picture that goes right into the home and in a fascinating manner tells an absorbing story of a very plausible domestic situation.

Built on the theme of what happened to a typical family due to the absence of the mother for a long period when her husband, son and daughter were left to themselves, Mr. Niblo has developed the theme with such force and sound logic that the picture rivets your attention throughout its entire length.

Of the same general type as another recent Mayer production, "The Dangerous Age," which, however, was the work of a different director, it bids fair to duplicate the unusual success which the former picture is now enjoying, and to build up a wonderful box office record.

The story has been unfolded with such force that simply through its intense human interest, and the extreme naturalness of the characters who talk and act like real people, you feel that you are almost spying on the innermost home life of an actual household for in its realism it points out the weak as well as the strong points in each character. And to this strong audience appeal has been added a stirring if somewhat melodramatic climax in which, after an exciting race between an auto and a train, the brother succeeds in rescuing his sister, who through ignorance is being led into a compromising situation. This climax is fast and forceful; it does not follow stereotyped lines, but has some unexpected twists which strongly enhance the interest and appeal.

Right along with the exceptionally fine direction of Mr. Niblo, which is evident throughout the production, should be mentioned the truly excellent work of the entire cast. Everyone gives a performance that it would seem could hardly be improved upon. Myrtle Stedman is wonderful in the title role, exhibiting deep sympathy and feeling. Huntley Gordon is fine as the husband and father and the same is true of Cullen Landis as the son, while Marguerite de la Motte as the daughter, a character which runs from the unspoiled simplicity of girlhood to the ultra-sophisticated veneer adopted by the flappiest kind of a flapper, is thoroughly convincing throughout; in fact, it is easily the finest thing that this talented young lady has done in her very active screen career.

Don't hesitate to book this picture, for it should immensely please any type of audience and echo in your box office.

Story

During the world war, Mrs. Fair goes to France as a nurse and is decorated for bravery. Returning home she finds herself famous. An extended lecture tour is offered her, but her husband forbids her to accept it. She resents his attitude and accepts anyway. After she leaves, the process of settling down to humdrum existence without her seems unbearable and the whole family move to a hotel in the city. Feeling her absence every minute, her husband falls easy prey to the fascination of a vamp; her son, who is just reaching manhood, also starts out to find congenial amusement. This leaves the daughter, Sylvia, alone most of the time. So she, too, welcomes the attentions of a scheming young man and seeks to drown her loneliness in a continual round of hectic gayety. Mrs. Fair's sudden return home brings matters to a crisis in which Sylvia elopes, but is saved from disgrace just in time by her brother, who has himself just married a telephone operator. Learning of her husband's affair, she threatens to divorce him, but the greater peril to her daughter brings her to the realization that it was her neglect of her family that started it all, and everything ends satisfactorily with the family reunited.

"The Love Nest"

(First National—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this comedy sad-faced Buster Keaton is shown meeting with all sorts of ludicrous adventures on the high seas. It is one of the very finest of his recent pictures and should please audiences everywhere. It is chock full of humorous incidents and quite a large portion is in the nature of a burlesque of "virile sea stories." Buster's experiences aboard the whaling ship are screamingly funny as well as unusual and are executed with the many unique touches for which he is well known. Laughable also are his experiences aboard a deep-sea target which is being shelled by a squadron of warships. There is an excellent "climax," where it is shown that Buster's wonderful trip was all a dream and his motor boat has never been untied from the dock.—C. S. S.

Negotiations Off on Uniform Contract

nontheatrical centers are using drama films supplied by the members of your organization, and this competition with Theatre Owners by institutions paying no taxes and in many cases no government charges, has become very injurious to the theatre owner. Some of the buildings in which these nontheatrical presentations are made are not equipped with safety devices to protect the public, nor were these places built or equipped with that same consideration for public safety, as applies to the theatres.

The menace of unfair producer-owned, controlled and operated theatres has been increased by the activities of some of the members of your organization, and there has been and is at work within our Industry a subtle and dangerous effort to throttle the independent Producer and Theatre Owner by every possible means to serve the ends of unrestricted and centralized control.

Despite assurances to our Organization and an agreement in writing by a member of your organization regarding the extension of their theatre holdings and agreeing that this practice should be discontinued and that theatres already thus acquired would be disposed of to independent Theatre Owners, they have ruthlessly violated their covenants and agreements with our Organization and have steadily gone on acquiring theatres since you have been connected with them in an executive capacity and, as we believe, with your knowledge and consent. With their control of the film they produce and distribute to theatres they own or control, and the constant extension of their theatre holdings, they make the position of the independent Producer and independent Theatre Owner more precarious.

For the many reasons indicated here and because of further objections to the contract form you issued, made by Theatre Owners in New York City, New York State and throughout the Country, further conferences with you at this time cannot be productive of constructive results for our industry.

These objections emphasize the fact that your contract form offers no protection to the Theatre Owners with regard to the deposit and advance rental money exacted from them by members of your Organization. Now the painful fact confronts Theatre Owners that one Producer-Distributor member of your organization has had a petition in bankruptcy recently filed against him and that thousands of dollars of Theatre Owners' money, exacted by him as deposits and advance payments on film, may be lost. This Producer-Distributor sat at the conference table with you and when we asked to have this deposit money of Theatre Owners safeguarded by law or an agreed trusteeship, you and those associated with you not only refused to do this but insisted that you must retain the right to combat all state laws designed for that purpose and would not agree to any proposal to safeguard theatre owners' money in this connection.

We knew then, and your close association with this since near-bankrupt member of your Organization enabled you to know then, that he was tottering close to failure. We wanted to safeguard the Theatre Owners' deposits thus imperilled.

Under the circumstances there is nothing left for me to do now other than to advise all our members of the history of our negotiations and of the status of the same, warning them of the dangers of the contract which your employers now propose to use.

We expect to demonstrate shortly that there are some Producers and Distributors within the Industry independent of your organization who are sufficiently farsighted to realize that this business cannot be benefited by a continued disregard of the principles of right or wrong, of fair or unfair dealing with the Theatre Owners, and that they owe to our public and to our Industry a code of practice and a standard as fair and honorable as that used in any other business.

For the present at least, the futility of any additional conferences must be apparent even to you. We thus leave the matter now with confidence that the future will demonstrate the folly of your unfair position and that of your associates. We are determined to protect the interests of the Theatre Owners and are unwilling to be drawn into any agreements which do not represent absolute fair play and a square deal for all.

Sincerely yours,

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA

Hunting Big Game in Africa

(Eugene Roth—Animal Picture—8 reels)

M. P. W.—Remarkably entertaining and instructive wild animal hunt film enlivened by real humor.

T. R.—The entire production is replete with action and never a dull moment. * * * Educationally and in every other respect it satisfies to the nth degree.

E. H.—A tremendously interesting and instructive picture of wild animal life in Africa.

N.—Has the lure of travel, scenic beauty, thrills, humor, adventure and every quality needed to make such a picture interesting.

F. D.—Unusually absorbing and interesting pictures of Africa's wild beasts taken in their native haunts.

My American Wife

(Gloria Swanson—Paramount—6,061 feet)

M. P. W.—The story is charming and the cast, a group of box-office winners.

T. R.—The exhibitor should easily find the picture to be one that will readily win the highest praise from his patrons.

N.—There is very little suspense to add to its highlights. * * * The chief appeal is in the atmosphere.

F. D.—"Another Gloria Swanson picture" should cover it adequately; it is just what she usually does.

E. H.—It's a wholly interesting photoplay that should give wholly satisfactory box office account of itself.

What a Wife Learned

(Featured Cast—First National—6,228 feet)

M. P. W.—A production with a penetrating appeal to both sexes, to anyone who appreciates good drama.

E. H.—A thoroughly convincing and well acted screen play. * * * Out of ordinary material.

F. D.—The usual Ince melodrama with the customary hokum that provides a plot but isn't convincing.

N.—Not convincing because of the weak situations which bring on the incompatibility of the husband and wife.

T. R.—Excellent entertainment in every way up to the high standard of previous Thomas H. Ince pictures.

The World's Applause

(Wm. De Mille—Paramount—6,526 feet)

M. P. W.—There is strong drama. * * * The interest is held tensely but the solution of the dilemma will not be altogether satisfying to many.

T. R.—There is every reason to believe that it will please a majority of movie patrons.

N.—Is just what present-day movie-goers want * * * It is a story that holds the interest at all times.

F. D.—Consists of situations and atmosphere intended to provide visual appeal but that is as far as it gets.

E. H.—There is a murder mystery—which is disclosed to the spectator and therefore holds little suspense—but which holds the interest by reason of its outcome.

While Paris Sleeps

(Lon Chaney—Hodkinson—4,850 feet)

M. P. W.—This appealing investure is more certain to please than is the theme. The story is somewhat gruesome and exaggerated.

E. H.—Commonplace story with several sordid incidents that will repel many.

N.—It does not look like good picture material to us aside from the idea that it offers some adventurous action.

F. D.—Very good production accorded commonplace theme that has some gruesome twists.

T. R.—Gruesome story but if shown in a house where melodrama is enjoyed it should give fairly good satisfaction.

All the Brothers Were Valiant

(Featured Cast—Metro—6,265 feet)

M. P. W.—It is an attraction that will be enthusiastically received by men, and because of its romantic interest will appeal to many women.

T. R.—One of the best sea pictures that has come on the screen recently.

N.—Here's a red-blooded story from the pen of Ben Ames Williams that should be enthusiastically received by the great motion picture going public.

E. H.—It is a stirring tale.

F. D.—Virile sea adventure picture which offers fine thrills, unusual action and splendid atmosphere.

The Face on the Barroom Floor

(Henry B. Walthall—Fox—5,787 feet)

M. P. W.—Should appeal strongly to the average audience as it strikes the heart-strings in no uncertain manner and should produce a responsive chord.

E. H.—Real picture entertainment, so full of heart interest, pathos, stirring situations and good comedy, it should prove one of the season's outstanding productions.

F. D.—A very interesting picture that has been skillfully made and offers a good entertainment.

N.—Manages to hold the interest and should please any audience which has been attracted by the title.

Above All Law

(Mia May—Paramount—Five Reels)

M. P. W.—Picturesque production helps sustain interest in story.

T. R.—It will probably afford much amusement to juvenile patrons, but by no possible stretch of the imagination can it be classed as satisfactory entertainment for critical adult audiences.

E. H.—Another German film of little merit.

F. D.—People with distorted imaginations might fancy such a story as that offered in the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation's latest offering, but it is quite doubtful if the normal mind will find much entertainment.

N.—In all it is a picture which is impressive even though it is a hodge-podge of mechanical tricks of the studio. The morbidness in us all will find an outlet here.

A Woman's Woman

(Mary Alden—United Artists—7,900 Feet)

M. P. W.—Amazing in its naturalness and appeal.

T. R.—It is tremendously human, every foot of it, and we predict that it will be a picture that every one will talk about and send others to see.

N.—Here we have Mary Alden paralleling, if not eclipsing her work in "The Old Nest." We predict for this production much favorable comment and real success at the box office.

F. D.—One more mother story. Too long drawn out.

The Christian

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn—8,000 feet)

M. P. W.—Big, powerfully dramatic picture, that will rank as one of screen's finest achievements.

N.—All the superlatives in the dictionary could be called into action in praising this production.

T. R.—It is our deliberate belief that it will prove one of the biggest box-office attractions in the history of the industry.

E. H.—A superb production of this dramatic story.

F. D.—Magnificent production that has many angles of appeal; a highly artistic and worth while picture.

Dark Secrets

(Dorothy Dalton—Paramount—4,337 feet)

M. P. W.—In view of the Coue method of healing the theme should occasion wide interest.

E. H.—Badly handicapped by an automatic story.

T. R.—It is the sort of film which suits the popular taste, moves smoothly and swiftly and registers as a feature of decided merit.

F. D.—A fair entertainment with a rather weird theme and improbable oriental twists.

N.—Has a decided appeal because it is different.

The Footlight Ranger

(Charles Jones—Fox—4,729 feet)

M. P. W.—Charles Jones' personality and ability serve in bracing up a story that is not particularly forceful or original.

E. H.—Not the type of play suited to Charles Jones and because of the roadhouse incident not particularly wholesome.

F. D.—A very tame offering for this star, wholly unlike what they expect from him.

N.—Such a sudden departure from what Charles Jones has offered in the past that it will be hard to reconcile his followers to it.

T. R.—While its general idea is nothing of a novelty it should give fairly good entertainment.

The Ghost Patrol

(Featured Cast—Universal—4,228 feet)

M. P. W.—The cast is pleasing and there is enough heart interest to insure its welcome with the average patron.

N.—While it isn't especially strong with dramatic material it manages to entertain through the wealth of human interest and the characterization.

T. R.—Affords satisfactory entertainment containing sufficient heart interest to put it over.

F. D.—A satisfying short entertainment pleasingly portrayed by a capable cast and nicely produced.

The Flame of Life

(Priscilla Dean—Universal—5,780 feet)

M. P. W.—It is strongly dramatic, high in entertainment value and should appeal strongly to the average audience.

N.—It is a vivid and vital picture.

E. H.—It is filled with tense situations, moves fast and is screen entertainment of a high order.

F. D.—Unique and picturesque entertainment that also contains thrills and action out of the ordinary.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

A Week of Big Pictures

TALK about your quality productions! The current week has recorded two particularly brilliant world premiere showings of just such pictures. And such pictures! Both wonderful in their own line. There is Warner Brothers' "Brass." This production had its premiere Monday night in Boston at the Park Theatre. And at one dollar top it jammed them into that house on Monday and Tuesday —we say Tuesday for that was the date on the special despatch we received. Anyway, the fact that "Brass" played to capacity at the Tuesday matinee and night performances is convincing proof that the picture lived up to promises, for the critical reviews in the Boston papers on that morning and afternoon were, indeed, a remarkable tribute to the efforts of not only the Warner Brothers, but also to Producer Harry Rapf and Director Sydney Franklyn.

"BRASS" is the greatest production Sydney Franklyn has ever directed. It is the best of the 1922-23 Warner crop. It is the best picture Harry Rapf ever produced. It is superlative in every way—in production, direction, photography, lighting, story value, settings and last, but not least by any means, in acting. "Brass" is a work of art. Franklyn has every reason for being proud of this production. If you liked "Smilin' Thru" and "East Is West," both of which, we understand, Franklyn directed, you'll enjoy "Brass" even more. There are many, many reasons why this is truly a great production—one of the greatest ever made. And in making that statement we're not forgetting any greats of the past or present, either.

"BRASS" will make box office history. First, because it is based on one of the most widely discussed books ever published. Secondly, because the screen version of that story is—delicate as the theme of the book itself is—remarkably handled in true showmanship fashion. By showmanship in this instance, we mean that it has been produced in a style that adults will be absolutely safe in bringing their loved ones —old and young. Showmanship means many things. But most important is that portion of its definition which means giving the public what is good for it and what the public wants. Anything that is good for the public, anything that is honest-to-goodness entertainment, anything that entertains in wholesome fashion, anything that gives value for money spent is what the public wants. And "Brass" is just that.

BUT it will go down into picture history as one of its truly great productions. There are character studies borrowed from the book that are even more vivid, even more convincingly realistic as they are thrown on the screen. Each role is excellently handled, particularly that of Philip Baldwin, played by Monte Blue. Marie Prevost as his wife, too, is good and one cannot help sympathize with her shortcomings. We heard much about the greatness of "Brass" before we had seen it. Our expectations were enormous in every way. We feared we expected too much. But "Brass," when we saw it, met our every expectation. We don't blame Warner Brothers for wanting to shout from the roof of the Woolworth Building that they have a wonderful production.

FROM the Coast comes a report that Sidney Franklyn will direct "Beau Brummel" and "Duburau," the David Belasco specials in which John Barrymore will probably be starred. We hope the report is true.

FORTY-FIVE miles south of Boston is a hard-boiled theatrical municipality well-named Providence—in the State of Rhode Island. There at the Victory Theatre Equity Pictures Corporation's "Has the World Gone Mad?" produced by Daniel Carson Goodman, was also given its world premiere showing on Monday. Here is also a good money-making production no exhibitor should overlook. If you are among the numerous exhibitors who cashed in on "What's Wrong With the Women?" you will hurriedly take our tip and book "Has the World Gone Mad?" It is a far greater picture in every way. In story and production this picture finds its greatest values. On Monday "Has the World Gone Mad?" opened to capacity—at ten in the morning. There was a line that extended "around the corner" for a block when the fire department inspectors instructed Manager Reilley to close the doors at the first show. And it was that way all through the day. The Tuesday business was just as big with even more turnaways.

EQUITY has every reason to feel proud of this box office bet. It has a story that is powerful and invites legitimate exploitation that cannot help but inspire news items that newspapers will publish. But more than that, it is everything a first class production should be. And it WILL make money, for it carries its appeal to every type of fan. We journeyed to Providence as a Missourian to be shown. And we were shown. Yes, indeedee! And when we phoned Producer Goodman, the latter wondered at our statement, for he was at loss to understand how we had seen it. His query was: "But where did you see it? The picture hasn't been shown yet." We then informed him of the prelease showing Sam Grand had arranged for Providence, but about which neither Equity nor Goodman knew anything. Moving Picture World has an independent news-gathering and picture "catching" system of its own, in that way being the only trade journal giving the trade all the news first and its readers unbiased showman's reviews far in advance of the others. But that's outside the issue.

GOODMAN is to be congratulated on such a magnificent box office production. We won't say that its production cost ran into six figures—but we will venture the prediction that, regardless what that cost be, "Has the World Gone Mad?" will show a box office gross business 600 per cent greater. The settings are especially good, but it is the story plus production that backs the attractive title so superlatively that should keep exhibitors busy handling crowds that "extend around the corner." Hop on this, Mr. Exhibitor, and hop on it quickly. Remember our tips on "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Rich Men's Wives," "Why Girls Leave Home," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," which, by the way, is surprising even exchangemen by its gross takings at the theatres; "What's Wrong With the Women?" "Beautiful and Damned." "Sure Fire Flint," and a few others. Well, we're not in the tipping business—but we will say you will regret not having booked this one.

SUCH pictures as "Brass," a masterpiece of its kind, and "Has the World Gone Mad?" are the type of productions that will firmly establish the independent market as a source of quality features that will make money. And it's money-making pictures exhibitors must have. A special correspondent—a showman of years' experience —"caught" Johnny Hines' latest picture, "Luck," down at a tryout showing in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and reports "it is sure-fire."

Independent News Bits

Howells are obtaining considerable valuable publicity in newspapers throughout the country on their screen version of Shakespeare's "Othello" which is now in its second week at the Criterion, New York. "Exhibitor Clubbing" Tactics of Certain Exchanges Prompt Warner Brothers to Insist on Their Elimination

That certain local distributors of high class independent productions are utilizing the latter in "clubbing" exhibitors into booking cheaper or mediocre stuff that that exchange happens to have purchased has developed a situation that has aroused considerable interest in the independent market. This situation has been given added importance since discussion arose over the uniform contract question. Complaints from exhibitors who have charged exchangemen with "clubbing tactics" have been many and have been given editorial mention in Moving Picture World's Independent Section.

However, the evil has seemingly grown and is particularly noticeable during the current season. Exchangemen who have been found guilty of this practice have been warned many times, but without much success. However, this week Harry M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, has taken the initiative and in a statement given to Moving Picture World guarantees exhibitor protection against further practice of such tactics. He has hit upon a plan which eliminates these obnoxious "conditional or contingent bookings." This is the first time in the history of the business where an independent corporation interested considerably in production and distribution of pictures has taken such a move.

Mr. Warner's statement, which throws considerable light on an all-important situation, follows:

"In all the talk about contracts that has been going on of late," said Mr. Warner, "there is one matter of the utmost importance, both to exhibitor and producer alike, that has not received the attention it deserves. I refer particularly to the practice of what is known as 'holding the club' over the exhibitor. The usual method of procedure is for the exchangeman, who happens to have one or two pictures that the exhibitor really wants, to withhold these particular subjects or either place an exorbitant price on them. He then very kindly does the exhibitor a favor by saying, 'Well, Joe, tell you what I'll do, if you'll take these six pictures,' which the exhibitor does not want, 'I'll let you have these two specials at such a price.'

"Thereby he penalizes the producer of the good pictures, who secures a much lower rental than he would if his productions were sold alone on their own merits, and also loading up the exhibitor with more material than he can use and and leaving room for future arguments, adjustments and a lot of other things that are absolutely unnecessary.

"I cannot speak for all the other producers, but as far as the productions of Warner Brothers are concerned I wish to state that each and every one of our pictures are to be sold exclusively on their merits and exclusive of the productions of any other producer. To insure the performance of this fact we have a specific clause in all of our contracts with each territorial distributor which specifies:

"'That the booking and renting of all positive prints of each of said motion pictures shall be upon contracts separate and apart from the booking and renting of any other prints, films or pictures handled by the exchange, and the booking or renting of any said prints of the producers' (Warner Bros.) feature motion pictures shall not be made conditional or contingent upon the booking or renting of any other pictures, films or prints handled or controlled by the exchange.'

"If any exhibitor, no matter where he may be located, claims that he has to book other pictures in order to secure Warner Brothers' Classics of the Screen, I want to be informed of that fact. I might further add that I am going to back this up to the very limit and want every exhibitor to know our position in the matter. With that end in view we shall advertise this fact in all trade publications and use every means at our disposal to let the exhibitor know that he can always secure a square deal from Warner Brothers."

Drafting Equitable Contract for S. R.

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Richard Thomas, formerly a producer of scientific subjects, but now producing and directing "The Silent Accuser" at the Hollywood studios for the independent market, has begun a campaign for a uniform contract between independent producers and distributors. Tentative drafts for a more equitable contract, Mr. Thomas says, have been drafted by him and will be submitted to producers in Hollywood and Culver City.

Principal Pictures Return to United Studio

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Principal Pictures Corporation will return to the United studios this week. The deal was closed by Sol Lesser and Joseph M. Schenck and M. C. Levee of United studios, following the latter's return to the Coast from New York. However, this deal does not mean that Lesser and Michael Rosenberg will sell their interest in the Vidor studio, which they recently acquired.

Many Sales on Burr's Newest "Last Hour"

This past week was an unusually busy one for the Charles C. Burr sales forces, territorial sales being made on three features, including "You Are Guilty," featuring James Kirkwood and Doris Kenyon; "Luck," with Johnny Hines, and "The Last Hour," with Milton Sills and Carmel Myers. Lester F. Scott, general sales representative, left recently for the exchange centres with prints of the three pictures.

Sales on "You Are Guilty" follow:

Commonwealth Film Corporation of New York for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey; to De Luxe Feature Film Co. of Seattle for Oregon, Washington, Montana, Northern Idaho and Alaska; to Major Film Corp. of Boston for the New England States; to Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia for Southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania; to Mountain States Film Attractions, Inc., of Denver for Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah and Southern Idaho.

"The Last Hour" is sold to the following exchanges: Commonwealth Film Corporation of New York; De Luxe Feature Film Co. of Seattle; Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia; Moscow Films, Inc., of Boston; Mountain States Film Attractions, Inc. of Denver, and All-Star Feature Distributors of San Francisco for California, Nevada, Arizona and the Hawiian Islands.

"Luck," Johnny Hines' latest feature comedy for C. C. Burr, has been sold to date to the following exchanges: De Luxe Film Co. of Seattle; Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia; Moscow Films, Inc., of Boston; Mountain States Film Attractions, Inc., of Denver; All-Star Feature Distributors of San Francisco, and F. & R. Film Co. of Minneapolis for North and South Dakota, Wisconsin and Northern Michigan.

Two names which feature consistently in C. C. Burr's all-star comedies are Charlie Murray and Raymond McKee. Charlie is known to millions in this country as he grew up with pictures, and McKee is equally well known, today starring on Broadway in one of the outstanding film successes of the year.

Russell Griffin, the five-year-old "find" of C. C. Burr, will probably develop his talents to the full under the banner of Mastodon Films, Inc. C. C. Burr has placed Russell under a long-term contract and plans are under way to give this young man ample opportunity to show his unusual screen ability.

Negotiations are now under way to give Johnny Hines's latest melo-comedy, "Luck," a rousing send-off. The world premiere in New York will show the world a comedy that is a comedy, Johnny says. If it's as good as Johnny's "Burn 'Em Up, Barnes," and "Sure-Fire Flint," and as good as the now famous "Torchies," we agree with him.

Tri-Stone Make Novel Arrangement With Exchangeman

OMAHA, NEB.—(Special)—Under the ingenius sales plan of Tri-Stone there seems to be a good chance for everybody to make money. A three year contract has just been signed whereby the Wisconsin Film Corporation of Milwaukee, and the First Film Corporation of Minneapolis, acquire the sole and exclusive rights to distribute Keystone Comedies, reissued.

The man who buys the territory (and each territory is small) pays a price which enables him to offer comedies on a basis that is extremely attractive to theatre owners. They, on the other hand, are showing pictures that already have a reputation for filling houses—showing them not as new subjects, but as old friends come back.

Henry Novitsky and Barney Kean, well known along Film Row, are now handling the sales promotion on "Drug Traffic," depicting the drug evil, which is being distributed by Liberty Films, Inc. Judging from the enthusiasm displayed by Henry and Barney, this attraction appears to be a cleanup for exhibitors, as it is without doubt the most talked of and timely subject of the year. We contemplate that these boys will experience no trouble in getting contracts, as both are well known in the territory for their square shooting methods.

Liberty Films, Inc., announce that in keeping with their past efforts to present only the biggest and best of pictures to showmen, they have just purchased the super-production, "Environment," which will be released in the near future. This picture is produced by Principal Pictures Corp., and has in its cast Milton Sills, Alice Lake, Ralph Lewis, Richard Headrick, Jr., and Gertrude Claire.

John Waters, branch manager for Enterprise Distributing Corporation, was in Kansas City last Saturday and Sunday where he was in conference with Mr. Jenkins, the general manager.

Liberty Films moved into their new home in the Liberty Bldg. at 1514 Davenport street last week. They will have a very fine office as soon as they get settled.

The Argus Enterprise, Inc., moved on March 1 from their present location to the Liberty Building at 1518 Davenport street.

Max Wintroub of the Fontenelle Film has just returned from a trip of several weeks in the East.

Goldberg Buys Equity Feature

Lee Goldberg, president of Big Features Rights Corporation, of 221 South Third street, Louisville, Ky., closed a deal this week in that city with Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation, for the Kentucky and Tennessee territory on the Daniel Carson Goodman special, "Has the World Gone Mad?"

Mr. Baum is in Chicago this week. He will visit Minneapolis, Denver, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, Cleveland, Atlanta and back to New York.

"Has the World Gone Mad!" Starts Its Career As a Record Smasher

By ROGER FERRI

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Whenever Matt Reilly wants to give his patrons something out of the ordinary when his opposition is billing unusual bills he usually digs into the independent market and manages to locate some sort of production that makes this otherwise quiet New England city sit up and take notice. Matt is successfully managing the Victory Theatre, and when word reached him that his opposition had booked extraordinary bills for the current week it behooved him to look around for some out of the ordinary production that was worth exploiting and that justified loud exploitation.

And Equity Pictures Corporation's Daniel Carson Goodman's production of "Has the World Gone Mad?" was booked for a world premier showing at the Victory Theatre on Monday. It was a remarkable premier—remarkable because it was staged in the face of the stiffest opposition any production has ever had in this or any other New England city. Local showmen have not forgotten how Matt Reilley put over "Ten Nights in a Barroom," but there is absolutely no comparison in the artistic merits of the two specials. "Has the World Gone Mad?" is not freak entertainment; it is superlative entertainment of the higher sort.

The opposition was considerably stiffer and not one-tenth the effort put in exploiting "Ten Nights" was put into the exploitation of "Has the World Gone Mad?" There was no extra advertising and no unusual outside billing. The only big exploitation feature was a huge ballyhoo truck that paraded through the streets of Providence and nearby territory for three days prior to the opening. This truck—a float with attractive cutouts and a revolving globe with the words: "Has the World Gone Mad?" brilliantly illuminating it—blocked traffic on the main thoroughfares so often that finally Police Captain Connors was forced to instruct Manager Reilley to keep it off the streets downtown during busy hours.

The exploitation campaign—save for the float—was of a most dignified type and won editorial mention in several of the newspapers. The management played on the attractive title of the picture and published a personal guarantee that the production was one "of the greatest this house has ever shown." The production was put strictly on its merits—and it went over in record-smashing fashion. While the Monday opening was the means of establishing a new house record, the theatre on Monday morning at ten o'clock opening with a line extending along Westminster street, around the corner to Union street as far as Weybosset street. There was a long line outside all through the show, and so quickly was the house jammed with people that the fire inspector instructed the manager to close the doors at 10:30 a. m.—a half hour after the opening of the house.

It was a case of standing room only all day long. While the forenoon and afternoon business was so great that the overflow aided other neighboring houses, the evening turnout was far greater in every respect. Double lines were formed and in order to accommodate the crowds, the management was forced to eliminate several short subjects. Two extra shows were necessary, according to Manager Reilley.

That the production got over on its merits, that Providence theatregoers consider the picture out of the ordinary was evinced on Tuesday when the scenes of the previous day were repeated. And it promised to continue all week, for newspaper critics gave loud praise to the Daniel Carson Goodman special, characterizing it as "great entertainment" (Providence Journal), "a picture that merits the patronage of every soul in the city" (Providence Tribune), "a story that is true to life . . . will make everybody happy and, indeed, is an investment that is not often given at any theatre" (Pawtucket, R. I., Times), and "one of the best of the year" (Providence News).

"Has the World Gone Mad?" came to Providence in one of the worse weeks of the theatrical season—and during the Lenten period. This city is literally choked with first class attractions. "The Pilgrim," with Charley Chaplin, is playing day and date at all theatres, excepting the Victory. "Java Head" is the other feature at the Modern, while the Rialto, Strand and others also are giving extraordinarily fine bills. The Albee Theatre, a vaudeville house of the first order, in addition to a bill of eight big vaudeville acts, including two local topnotchers—a band and double act—is also featuring the Chaplin picture. Pauline Lord in "Ann Christie" is the best melodramatic attraction that has played the Shubert-Majestic this season.

Equity Pictures Corporation has given the independent market a record-smasher in "Has the World Gone Mad?" and no end of credit is due Producer Daniel Carson Goodman, for it is an artistic production, which deals with a domestic problem that is familiar to newspaper readers and can well be tied up appropriately in every city. But it is the maximum entertainment value, together with its production excellence, that makes "Has the World Gone Mad?" stand out as a box office attraction that compares favorably with the best this remarkable season of big pictures has had recorded in its favor.

The cast is splendid, with settings that are picturesque and wonderful to look at. The title pulls them into the theatre and the picture will hold them and bring others back to the house.

St. Louis Inds. Abandon Theatre Building Plans

St. Louis. (Staff Special.)—All plans for the erection of a first class theatre in this city to house independent first run pictures have been apparently abandoned. The theatre situation, while considerably improved, is not yet what exhibitors would like it to be. Then, too, the local promoters have realized the futility of bucking up against the forces that are in virtual control of the first run situation in this section. However, they insist the plan has not been completely abandoned, although those, who are in a position to know, insist that the abandonment report is about the last that will be heard of the much discussed project.

A. A. Elmore, financial agent of the National Board of Farm Organizations was in St. Louis Thursday, Friday and Saturday in furtherance of the production of "The Toil," a picture depicting the farmers' side of the country's marketing and transportation problems. This picture will be made by the General Film Corporation, St. Louis, for the Producers Co-Operative Syndicate, composed of 40,000 organizations with 5,000,000 members. Romaine Fielding will be the director.

Harry Hynes has been made manager of the St. Louis Film Company, controlled by Skouras Brothers Enterprises. This exchange was known as the Grand Central Film Company. It will handle the Al Lichtman Preferred and Warner productions and other independent pictures controlled by Skouras Brothers. Cullen Espy is salesmen for the exchange. He formerly managed the New Lindell Theatre, controlled by Skouras and associates.

Sol J. Hankin, formerly president-manager of the Fine Arts Pictures Corporation, has secured Hynes as manager for Educational in St. Louis. Hanken sold his interest in Fine Arts several months ago and just recently returned from an extended tour of Europe.

The Gardiner Screen Company of Cleveland, O., has decided to enter the St. Louis territory. Frank Sturgis has been named salesmanager for this territory, including Missouri, most of Illinois, Arkansas and Northern Oklahoma. His headquarters will be in St. Louis. He is not a new-comer to this city having been affiliated with O. T. Crawford in his movie pioneering in St. Louis. He obtained the first permit to shoot movie scenes on the streets of St. Louis about 1906.

New Pittsburgh Exchange Opens

PITTSBURGH — (Staff Special) — Pittsburgh's newest film exchange is the All-Theatres Pictures, Inc., located at 119 Ninth Street. The new company will release the new edition of Keystone comedies, being offered by the Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc., of New York.

The Progress Pictures Corporation has secured the territorial rights for the productions of the Producers Security Corporation, and are already booking the first release, "Just a Song at Twilight," starring Richard Barthelmess.

Harry F. Grelle, of the Supreme Photoplay Company, who has just taken over the Iron City Film Exchange, announces the acquisition of three new salesmen to his force. They are Captain R. J. Kinder, formerly with the First National; Wm. C. Pearce, formerly with the Quality, and T. P. McLaughlin, formerly with Famous Players. The Supreme exchange distributes the Warner Brothers Classics of the Screen in the Pittsburgh film field.

Messrs. Karrer and Langan, of the Merit Films, Inc., have both been sick in bed with the flu, but both are again on the health road and telling the exhibitors about "Deserted at the Altar."

Saul Meltzer, for several years on the road for the Select exchange, has resigned his position, and hereafter will work the Northern territory for the Pittsburgh Federated exchange.

H. Clay Berger, former Universal salesman, is now connected with the Progress Pictures Corporation in a sales capacity.

W. Ray Johnston, vice-president, of the Arrow Film Corporation, spent a day in Pittsburgh last week, visiting the independent exchange boys.

Warners Sign Goulding, Dazey, Johnson

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Edmund Goulding, Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnston have returned here after having signed a contract to write scenarios exclusively for Warner Brothers. Harry M. Warner closed the deal. They have been signed for next season. Other members of the Warner scenario department include Julien Josephson and Grant Carpenter.

Hooking Up Picture With Chaplin-Negri

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—It was discovered here this week that Lee-Bradford Corporation, distributors of "Is Money Everything?", are attempting to tie up the Charlie Chaplin-Pola Negri betrothal and split and re-betrothal affair with that picture. Both are said to have been invited to view the picture at the Los Angeles opening.

"Brass" Dazzles Boston as Theatre Jams Them In at One Dollar Prices

(From Staff Correspondent of Moving Picture World)

BOSTON, Mass.—(Special)—Following a ten-day exploitation campaign conducted through Boston and vicinity newspapers plus clever store tie-ups and billboard teaser displays, Warner Brothers' greatest 1922-23 production, "Brass," based on Charles G. Norris's widely-discussed and candidly written story of marriage and divorce, opened at the Park Theatre Monday night. All film folk in New England are looking forward studiously to the run of this splendid production at New England's principal first-run house. The first-run audience was a turnaway and the advance sale is one that is as big as that which preceded the run of "Douglas Fairbanks' Robin Hood," which closed a long engagement at the Park two weeks ago. The picture is being given a de luxe presentation with two performances daily—at 2:15 p. m. and 8:15 p. m. The matinee prices are 50 and 75 cents, while the evening show commands 50 and 75 cents and one dollar for the orchestra seats.

The entire city was patiently awaiting the world premiere showing of "Brass" in Boston, and the fact that it was a world premiere was splendidly advertised to the theatre-going public. The demand for seats for the opening night was so big that another house the size of the Park could have been filled with the overflow. However, it was a splendid premiere, very artistically staged and a typical first night affair. The picture drew from every class, for they came in limousines from the exclusive Back Bay section, from the tenement sections and from the adjacent rural towns. It was a premiere audience that was representative of the various masses that contribute to the general makeup of movie folks.

The popularity of the book, which ranks, according to its publishers, as one of the best sellers, contributed notably to the cause of the wholesale turnout. "Brass," as produced by Harry Rapf and directed by Sydney Franklin, was hailed by the critics of the Boston Post, Boston Evening-Morning Globe, The Traveller, Boston Herald, Boston Telegram, Boston Advertiser and Boston American as one of the greatest picture entertainments ever offered the theatre-going public. Of this there can be no doubt, for "Brass" is a marvelous production—the best Warner Brothers have ever released. It is the best thing Sydney Franklin has ever done, and it must be remembered that as director for Norma and Constance Talmadge he directed such artistic and box office successes as "Smilin' Thru" and "East Is West," admittedly two of the greatest pictures of 1922. In "Brass" Mr. Franklyn has given the movie world a production that is the last word in the art of picture manufacture. He has treated each character with the touch of the master—the every movement of the players holding the audience undividedly. The settings are lavishly luxurious and consistent, with the photography out of the ordinary.

"Brass" opened here Monday night with plenty of advance publicity. The advance brigade promised much—it promised one of the best pictures ever offered. But the picture made good every promise, for the Tuesday performances were just as packed as the opening one, with the rest of the week sold out in advance. Just how long it will remain at the Park Theatre remains to be seen, but if the enthusiastically commending reviews of the hard-boiled Boston reviewers and the remarkable response of a public that is clamoring the box office for advance reservations constitute any criterion, it is safe to say that "Brass" will hold the boards for at least three weeks—if not more—and at $1, for the production is worth every penny of that dollar.

"Brass" will do more toward establishing the Warner Brothers as producers of high class pictures than any other picture they have released to date. It was a daring venture that they undertook when they decided to adopt such a delicate theme to the screen. But in doing so they proved themselves keen showmen, for "Brass" is inoffensive and censorproof. It dwells on the theme of "Brass" in interestingly clever fashion, for there is nothing that even hints at suggestiveness and every character is a finished type that is an artistic treat in itself.

If the Warner adaptations of the David Belasco specials and the other 1923-24 pictures are as good as "Brass," it is not an outburst of enthusiasm over this feature that prompts the statement to be made that exhibitors who will book 1923-24 Classics will be acquiring gold mines. Certainly "Brass" is that. It's proving that here—at one dollar top, and getting it. And will continue to get it.

Al Feinman, of New York, was here co-operating with the staff of Franklyn Film exchange putting over the advance publicity on "Brass." There was nothing sensational about the campaign. It was straight common-sense—and this fact helped the draw from the society crowd, which is taking an unusual interest in "Brass," judging from the limousines that called for patrons after the opening, Tuesday afternoon and night shows.

H. Leiber Buys "The Curse"

INDIANAPOLIS—(Special)—H. Leiber Company, local State rights exchange firm, is not overlooking a bet and apparently intends redoubling its effort in the local independent distribution field, for this week that concern closed with L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North for the local rights to "The Curse."

Anti-Drug Films Deluge Exchanges In Gotham District

A merry war among exchangemen handling anti-drug pictures is predicted within the next two or three weeks in New York. While there has been considerable said pro and con about these productions, exhibitors are seemingly grabbing these pictures, for exchanges handling them appear well satisfied with business in general. There are four such pictures now in New York. One is owned by Irving Cummings and is entitled "The Drug Traffic." This picture was completed on the Coast two weeks ago and prints arrived in New York last week. The others include "The Greatest Menace" and another one that Nathan Hirsh is handling through his Aywon exchange and also distributing on the State rights plan. Renown Exchange in New York is handling "The Drug Traffic," which, according to information in Film Row, may be tied up with the anti-drug campaign William Randolph Hearst is conducting through his newspapers.

"Othello," the Ben Blumenthal-David P. Powells Shakespearian production, started on its second week at the Criterion Theatre in New York, and bids fair to go through to a business that will equal that of last week. The prediction is made because of the publicity campaign that has been inaugurated. The picture opened virtually cold insofar as advance notice was concerned, for the newspapers gave it little or no space. But once the picture got under way and the critics viewed the special, the newspapers started giving it space. The management redoubled its efforts and proceeded to "sell" the public. The effort is making rapid headway and the run is bound to be a huge money-maker, particularly in view of the quality of the production and the Shakespearian revival epidemic in the big town.

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation is expecting to better the gross business he recorded on Johnny Hines' "Sure-Fire Flint" once he gets the other C. C. Burr special, "Luck," also starring Hines, under way. Sam is holding off until the proper time and it is a safe bet that "Luck," which is said to be one of the best pictures of the season, and admittedly Johnny Hines' best feature, will get into a Broadway house.

This is going to be quite a month for the Warner Brothers on Broadway for they take over the Strand Theatre beginning next Monday, when the Harry Rapf production, production, "Brass," goes into that house. This picture should mop up on Broadway mainly because of the popularity of the book and secondly because it is one of the best produced pictures of the business. "Brass" will be followed with "The Little Church Around The Corner," which the Warners have adapted from the stage.

Al Feinman, exploitation man for Warner Brothers was taken ill while exploiting "Brass" at its premiere showing at the Park Theatre, Boston, this week. He is confined to bed with influenza and will be away from 1600 Broadway for some time.

Influenza has literally put many attaches of New York independent exchanges out of business during the past three weeks.

Animal pictures, now that Snow's "Hunting Wild Game With Gun and Camera" has gone over, are coming out in big numbers. Three of them were offered State rights exchangemen this week.

"Are You A Failure?" is being announced as the next Al Lichtman release in New York. Sam Zierler is handling the Lichtman product in New York.

Charley Goetz, manager of W-B Exchanges, Inc., made a flying trip to Boston last week.

Scott's South Pole Expedition Filmed

The first complete print of the official motion picture record of the late Capt. Scott's ill-fated South Pole Expedition has been received in this country by Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., 1482 Broadway, New York City.

Immense historical interest attaches to these films as Capt. Scott was the first explorer to make photography an important feature of a great Polar expedition. The photographic department, which was under the personal direction of Mr. Herbert G. Ponting, achieved remarkable success and the motion pictures showing the daily grind of the heroes in the Great White South and illustrating the animal and bird life of the region have been acclaimed by press and public, in this country and abroad, to be the finest ever obtained in polar regions, or possibly anywhere else for that matter.

Edited and arranged with interesting data and pertinent scientific facts for the benefit of science, education and posterity, by a member of the expedition, Mr. Herbert G. Ponting, F.R.G.S., F.R.P.S., F.Z.S., world-wide traveler and explorer-cinematographer, the actual pictorial record of this tremendous tale of human adventure and courage has finally been finished, after ten years of studious and conscientious labor and a splendid reproduction sent to this country. The print is in the possession of Robert W. Priest, who introduced "The Undying Story of Capt. Scott" and "Animal Life in the Antarctic" to the world (at the Lyric Theatre, New York) shortly after the discovery of the fate of Capt. Scott and his comrades.

"Luck," Johnny Hines Appearing, Takes Wilkes-Barre, Pa., by Storm

WILKES-BARRE, Pa.—Daniel L. Hart, mayor of this city and author of "The Parish Priest," acted as host to Johnny Hines, the C. C. Burr star, last week while he was making personal appearances at the Capitol Theatre during a trial show of "Luck," the latest Hines special. While "Luck" was given an initial tryout in a Long Island town several weeks ago, its run at the local theatre was really the first big house tryout the production has been subjected to, for, according to those who are sponsoring it, it was only finally edited and cut two weeks ago.

"Luck" is due to gross more money than even its predecessor, "Sure Fire Flint," for the former, while of the comedy drama type and decidedly Hinesque, is far more convincingly entertaining in every way. Johnny Hines stands out as the logical successor to the late Wallace Reid, for the type he personifies in "Luck" is a knockout and will satisfy the customers.

The showing was staged in the presence of a specially invited audience of local luminaries, with Mayor Hart leading the procession. It was indeed a gala occasion, socially, but to the industry the principal question is: How did the audience take the picture?

Frankly, "Luck" literally swept Wilkes-Barreans who were on hand off their feet. It is a masterly production—masterly in its class. It is brimful of hearty laughs that are broken up with heart-throbs that are injected into the piece at the opportune moment. In fact, "Luck" starts off in bang-off fashion. The "bit" in which circus elephants play an important role—a role that forces the star to win a marathon, although he had absolutely no desire of even competing in the affair, having set out to conquer the world minus his outer clothing—constitutes one of the most hilarious and most cleverly staged laugh provokers that this writer has seen inserted into any production.

"Luck" is sure-fire because it has unusual production value and an entertainment status that lives up to the liberal promises made by its producers. The acting is particularly good with Johnny Hines, who is really the "big gun," carrying off the honors unchallenged and in a praiseworthy fashion. Charley Murray, the old-time star, is at all times conspicuous in a character that "takes" pleasingly, his bits with Flora Finch, the comedienne, being particularly funny and brought prolonged rounds of laughter from the capacity audience. Violet Mersereau, Polly Moran, Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson and Warner Richmond also are deserving of praise.

An outstanding thrill in "Luck" dwells on the collapse of a coal mine that is melodramatically and realistically presented with Johnny Hines doing some splendid dramatic work. Watch Johnny Hines, for he looks like the biggest single male bet in the business today. His latest production, "Luck" as projected here on the screen of the Capitol is high class entertainment that will go over as big in exclusive Broadway houses as it will in the small town. Ralph Spence's titles are consistent with the production itself. Jack Gregory wrote the story. Johnny Hines directed. The photography is good.

In the course of his talk to the audience, Hines, who was royally received, told about having taken the mine thriller at Buttonwood and praised the miners there, they having taken part in the scene.

Coast Producers Demand Showdown

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Independent producers not already affiliated with national independent releasing organizations are going to demand a showdown next season before closing any agreements. It seems that many of them have justified complaints against a number of distributors. One distributing organization, which has been falling behind during the past year, has been charged by several of those who have produced for it with misrepresentation and failure to report on sales, etc., regularly. This company is virtually on the taboo insofar as independent producers on the West Coast are concerned.

Independent productions have made rapid progress and, in fact, independent production has made considerably more advance than the distribution end of the business. Because of this fact independent producers are taking every precaution against the practices of a number of State righters. They will make pictures for a particular release and not produce aimlessly as has been the case during the past few years.

Local bankers, realizing the progress and popularity of independent productions, are willing to advance money to reliable and established producters. But they insist on some definite releasing arrangement, demanding an accounting from the independent producer. There is some talk out here concerning an arrangement whereby independent national distributer and exchangeman will be asked to furnish a bond for sums he obligates himself to pay. This arrangement is being given considerable attention and is supported by the financial interests.

It has been made known here that Al Lichtman Corporation will not release "April Showers," which was announced as the April Preferred picture. Instead Ben Schulberg is working on "A Daughter of the Rich," which, those who have read the script, say will be an even better picture than "Rich Men's Wives," the first Preferred Picture Corporation release.

"The Man From Ten Strike," based on a James Oliver Curwood story, will be the first picture that Principal Pictures Corporation will release independently starring Guy Bates Post. Edward Newman is in charge of the casting and general affairs of the firm making the Post pictures. Bob Thornby will direct the production.

Harry Rapf and Sam Warner are back at the Warner studios, brimful of enthusiasm and confident that next season would be the greatest in the history of that organization. Rapf is busy completing his plans for next summer when he starts production on the 1923-24 output.

Fred Myton is adapting Harriet Beecher Stowe's famous story, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which Sol Lesser will produce this spring for Principal Pictures Corporation release.

Irving Cummings and a number of his players went to New York to take exteriors for "East Side, West Side," his next independent production, based on the legitimate play of the same name.

Bert Lytell, Bryant Washburn, Blanche Sweet and Maryon Aye are busy these days working on the screen version of "The Meanest Man in the World," the George M. Cohan story. Eddie Cline is directing. This picture is expected to be completed late this month.

"The Silent Accuser," which was destroyed by fire at the Bert Willa studios recently, has been completely remade. The cast includes Carmel Myers, Carol Halloway, Melbourne MacDowell, Katheryne McGuire, Clyde Fillmore, Spottiswoode Aiken and Edward Borman.

The film colony here is patiently awaiting reports from the East concerning the reception accorded the Warner production, "Brass," which was tried out in a neighboring town early in the winter before Harry Rapf started for New York with a print of the picture.

The Preferred Pictures Corporation here is reported making plans for the production of 12 pictures for release through Al Lichtman co-operative exchanges next season. Tom Forman and Louis Gasnier will continue making Preferred Pictures. There is some talk of another director bein gadded to the Preferred directorial force.

Eastern Studios to Be Busy This Year; King to Make Four

With the advent of the warmer season independent production in the East is slated for a boost, according to observation made by this department. By the first of June something like 14 productions will be in the course of making at the various studios in New York, New Jersey and on Long Island.

Burton King, who has produced a number of pictures for the independent market this past season, is busily engaged formulating plans for an extensive production schedule for this spring and summer. If plans now under way are completed to the extent that they are expected to be, Burton King will produce at the Ideal studio in New Jersey all year round.

King will produce a series of four big specials for next season and all these will be made at the Ideal studios. He has already purchased the first story for this series. This week State Pictures Corporation, to which firm King is under contract, purchased the screen rights to "Complications."

Production on William Nigh's next production, "Marriage and Morals" for distribution through L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, is well under way and will be ready for release some time next month, according to the present plan. Nigh is expected to make another picture later in the Spring, immediately after "Marriage and Morals" has been started on its exhibition career.

Daniel Carson Goodman, whose second Equity special, "Has The World Gone Mad?" was shown for the first time out of town this week, will not start his next independent picture also until late in the Spring. He is now contemplating a story that will be altogether different from either "What's Wrong With The Women?" or "Has The World Gone Mad?"

Dick Thorpe, supervisor of production for C. C. Burr led a troupe of ten players to Jacksonville, Fla., last week to film several scenes for the new All-Star comedy. Upon their return they plan to leave again for Bermuda to secure local color.

Johnny Hines is sitting back these days and waiting until his latest effort "Luck" receives the world's applause. Johnny is a hard worker and it won't be surprising if he takes off his best clothes soon and starts in on his next big laugh maker for C. C. Burr. In the meantime "Luck" is being groomed for its world premiere in New York.

Gregory La Cava is putting the last touches to the eighth and ninth All-Star comedies which Mastodon Films, Inc., produces and distributes through Hodkinson. On Mr. LaCava's return from Florida, work on the tenth All-Star will begin at the Long Island studios of the company.

Charlie Murray still takes the lead. Nothing downs this veteran of the screen. As the featured players on C. C. Burr's All-Star comedies, he does some of the best work of his career. At any rate, Charlie gets the laughs, many of them, which is the thing, as all will agree.

Johnny Hines and Charlie Murray are great friends. So much so that Charlie consented to play a part in Johnny's picture "Luck." Only in "Luck" Charlie's famous chin whiskers have given place to a mustachio, just as eccentric, albeit of a darker hue.

Flora Finch who hurt herself while taking part in Johnny Hines' picture "Luck" just before Christmas, is still in the Jamaica Hospital. Constant visitors are at her bedside, among whom are men and women high in the theatre and screen.

Nigh's Weber-North Special Sets New Mark for Settings

The first independent production reported to be staged and furnished on the same scale as the "million-dollar" brand of costume specials, will be Will Nigh's forthcoming feature to be distributed by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North. Heights of artistic splendor and spectacular staging never before known in the state-right field have been reached. Under the skillful hand of John D. Schulze, art director of many of the most beautifully mounted films of recent times, a new mark in screen embellishment has been attained.

Six different schools of architecture and decorative design are represented in Will Nigh's second feature. A Gothic mansion built on the proportions of a cathedral and outfitted with stained-glass windows, marble porticos and towering arches, forms the largest set. It took four weeks to construct, and its equipment was more costly than the structure itself. Mediaeval furniture, hangings and utensils were used. The costumes of the characters appearing in the scene were also faithful to the period. French art and decoration is in evidence in the Parisian salon and modiste shop, where part of the action is staged.

Its contents and construction rival the luxurious Continental emporiums in finesse and richness. A Spanish library of the Moor period forms a third section of the properties constructed. The trappings and furniture suites used here were built from art prints of the age. An Italian dining room suite of the Medici period is the fourth set. It is also a faithful reproduction of the brilliant school of sculpture and mural decoration then in vogue. An Egyptian set, forming part of a cabaret scene, constitutes one of the most unique art achievements of screen staging. Weird, angular figures, representing ancient Egyptian architecture and reproducing a number of the historic statues of Oriental civilization, appear here. Finally there is a modern studio setting in the futuristic style, brilliantly colored and grotesquely shaped. The effect is bizarre in the extreme. Schulze spent the past two months in research, and toured the libraries and homes of the most famous art collectors of the country for the properties he needed. Museums were searched, and a good number of imported paraphernalia was bought.

Mississippi Valley Hard Hit—Rathner

Upon his return to New York this week following a seven-week tour of exchange centres east of the Rocky Mountains, Harry Rathner, sales representative of Principal Pictures Corporation, brought back the information that conditions in the Mississippi Valley are paralytic and independent exchangemen there in an almost destitute state. That territory always has been hard put, but industrial reverses have made the situation there even more critical than usual.

Mr. Rathner said: "Conditions in general throughout the country are particularly encouraging insofar as independent productions are concerned. The independent exchange field has come down to a question where one can count not more than three first class releasing offices in each territory. This is, indeed, helpful, for it is stabilizing the market—and that is what it has needed or a long time.

"Good productions are wanted, but they must be good—good in the sense of productions and story value—and, of course, if the picture possesses these values it can not help entertain, and if it is entertainment it is a box office proposition. And that's what exchangemen want, for that, in turn, is what exhibitors are seeking from independent exchanges.

"The Eastern territory, however, is considerably more prosperous than the Middlewest. By Middlewest I mean the Minneapolis, Missouri and such territory. It seems the further west one goes from New York the worse conditions are, although on the Coast independents are experiencing their banner season. But that territory bounded by the Mississippi River on the east and the Rockies on the west is having a hard time of it.

"Why, out in North Dakota, which is quite a large State, more than 50 per cent of the theatres are closed. Down in Denver and in Montana, Wyoming and other neighboring States, conditions are bad. The exchangemen there are having a hard time getting back their original investments. There are a lot of theatres that are closed and this makes conditions worse than in normal times, for the reason that in normal times, it takes anywhere from two to ten days for prints out of a Denver or Salt Lake City exchange to make its destination. There are times when a print is in transit about a week, not earning a cent, before it gets to its destination. The Denver exchanges cover more territory than exchanges in other centres, but the playing points are far apart and railroad conditions are not the best in the world."

Canada Gets Anti-Narcotic Films Galore

Reports from Canadian exchange centres this week indicated that the Dominion is being deluged with anti-drug traffic, pictures of all sorts. Most of them are not worth the cost of the film on which they are printed. A number of British producers with anti-dope films have rushed, seemingly, prints of those pictures to Canada, while several American distributors, too, have sought a market there.

"Loyalties," which is running in play form in New York, is due for production for screen entertainment. The producers of "Paddy-the-Next-Best Thing" will make "Loyalties."

"The Pipes of Pan" is a Hepworth special that is scoring big on the other side and for which American distributors are negotiating.

"Southward on the Quest," Shackelton's last Arctic expedition production, is a special feature that is due to make money in England and that will come to this country shortly, for an American distributor has practically closed a distribution deal for the picture.

A cablegram from London last week brought news of the arrival there of Al Lichtman, head of Al Lichtman Corporation, distributors of Preferred Pictures. Renters, Ltd., are releasing the pictures in England at present.

A special expedition for the purpose of filming unexplored Africa, conducted by Ratcliffe Holmes, and others, has resulted in the release of a special known as "Wildest Africa." This picture is being enthusiastically praised abroad.

Reports from abroad on the Danish version of Charles Dickens' "David Copperfield" are very good.

Matty Reubert will be starred in a series of two-reel comedies that Kilmer Exclusive Films, Ltd., of London will make. The first picture is due to be ready late this month.

W. & F. Films, Ltd., of London, which is releasing C. C. Burr's "Secrets of Paris" in England sent out a report last week expressing great satisfaction over the reception the picture got at the hands of exhibitors there.

Exploitation is making great headway on the other side. The value of exploitation impressed a number of European film distributors who have come to this country. There are a number of American exploiteers working in England now.

Strauss' "Salome" Opens in Philly Poorly Handled

PHILADELPHIA—(Special.)—Malcomb Strauss' version of "Salome" opened Monday at the Orpheum Theatre in the Germantown section. Whether or not this picture will get over is yet too early to predict, for many liberties have been taken with the story of Salome as the general public knows it. There is a happy ending with Salome eloping with her sweetheart after having been influenced by her mother to insist on the head of John the Baptist from Herod as reward for her dancing. The Salome of this picture does not die, neither was she in love with John the Baptist. Her lover is the chap who in the story, as the theatregoers understand it, committed suicide.

Malcolm Strauss' "Salome" will in no way hurt business for Nazimova's version, for it is ridiculous to even compare the two. The Nazimova production is an artistic achievement, while the other, shown here, is pure hoakum with the picture ranking only pass. It is no doubt a foreign-made picture with Diana Allen starred. However, in the sticks it probably will score. Or it may go over on a double feature bill, but alone at a house where the best is demanded by patrons, this picture would probably be unable to hold its own.

At the Germantown house it was put over with a "kootch" dancer advertised as Princess Ziralda. She did the "dance of death."

The advertisements Bill Haggerty is mapping out for De Luxe Film Company are attracting considerable attention among exhibitors. Bill seems to have the knack of putting over ads that draw the most attention—and certainly Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufeld will profit by it.

Walter Greene has resigned as exploitation manager for Ben Amsterdam's Masterpiece Film Attractions Exchange. It is understood he will go to the Coast to take a correspondents' position for a trade paper.

Bob Lynch, manager of the Metro Exchange, is back from a well deserved vacation in Miami, Fla., and Havana, Cuba.

Al Fisher, Jr., has quit his job as exploitation man at the local F. B. O. Exchange, to take up similar duties to the Metro exchange.

Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation, local distributors of Warner Brothers pictures, was so pleased with the singing of Francis Weaver, a 12-year-old lad, at the New York showing of "Heroes of The Street," that he has signed the boy to sing at all houses showing that feature, starring Wesley Barry.

Graphic Film Exchange here is advertising another Ivan Abramson production entitled, "Thou Shalt Not Love."

Four Sales on "Greatest Menace"

Resolute Film Sales report the following territories sold on Mayer & Quinn's new production, "The Greatest Menace": New England, to Sam Moscow, of Moscow Film Exchange, Boston; Eastern Pennsylvania and Northern New Jersey, to DeLuxe Film Exchange of Philadelphia, and Canada, to Elly Marks of Toronto.

"The Greatest Menace" was taken from an original story by Angele C. Kaufman. The production is the work of J. G. Mayer. The adaptation and direction was the work of Albert Rogell.

The cast includes Ann Little, Wilfred Lucas, Robert Gordon, Harry Northrup, Rhea Mitchell, Mildred June and a host of others.

Luchese Buys "Great Expectations"

PHILADELPHIA—(Special)—Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufeld of De Luxe Pictures Corporation have acquired two new pictures, "Great Expectations" from Hopp Hadley and "The Greatest Menace" from Mayer & Quinn, both for Southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania.

Joe Brandt Out on a Long Sales Tour

Joe Brandt, president of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, left this week on an extended trip to start the ball moving on a preliminary whirlwind campaign on "Temptation" and "Her Accidental Husband."

It is Mr. Brandt's opinion that these two features, "Temptation," the third of the C. B. C. series of Six Box Office Winners, and "Her Accidental Husband," the first of the Belasco Productions, which that company is distributing, are the biggest his organization has ever handled—and, accordingly, it is his intention to cover the major part of the territory himself, heralding the coming of these productions, and outlining plans for putting them over in the biggest way possible.

It is his intention to swing the entire circuit, covering the key cities and seeing the big territorial holders in each.

A large part of the success of the C. B. C. organization has been due to the fact that Mr. Brandt himself, a recognized authority on exploitation campaigns of a big kind, gives so much of his own time to launching the campaigns on the C. B. C. distribution—buyers thus being confident that when they buy a production from that company they will have the entire benefit of a big and original campaign to back it up.

Mr. Brandt will also study the independent situation while he is away, with a view to applying his observations to future C. B. C. productions and distribution.

In his opinion the handwriting on the wall points to the biggest independent year ever recorded in the industry.

Primrose Will Have Five Melodramas in 1923

Plans are now being completed at the offices of the Primrose Pictures Corporation, of which Charles H. Rosenfeld is general manager, to offer for distribution a five-reel melodrama entitled "Men Women Hate."

Primrose Pictures Corporation also announce that they have for distribution six two-reel Perry Comedies, and that work has already been started on a series of 26 Beatrice Bare Facts Animated Cartoons, which will contain advice to the love-sick. These pictures are being made by a well known cartoonist. The first of the Bare Facts series, which is now ready, was screened for Harry Charnas of Cleveland and Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia. These two expert showmen were very enthusiastic in their praise, declaring that the new series would prove an instant box office winner.

Jesse J. Goldburg is back from a trip to the Coast where he made arrangements to distribute three features through Independent Pictures Corporation, of which he is the head.

Truart Film Corporation has acquired the screen rights to the title, "Broadway and Forty-second Street."

Eugene Roth of Los Angeles is in New York and called on some of his state rights friends.

Some confusion seems prevalent over the titles of two pictures. Warner Brothers have included in their list of 1923-24 pictures one entitled "Wolf Fangs," starring Rintintin, the dog, while Producers Security Corporation give notice they are releasing a feature entitled "Wolf's Fangs," starring Wilfred Lytell and Nancy Deaver. Oscar Apfel made the latter.

The Apollo Exchange, owned by Bobby North, has purchased the New York rights to the first David Belasco picture, "Her Accidental Husband," which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is handling. Dallas M. Fitzgerald directed the picture, in which Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley, Mitchell Lewis and others appear.

News On Theatre Showings

BOSTON—(Special)—Wesley Barry's "Heroes of the Street" is enjoying good patronage in local theatres, this week playing the Bowdoin Square Theatre.

BOSTON—(Special)—Gordon's Scollay Square is playing C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's second "Big Six" release, "Only a Shop Girl." This picture is expected to draw big crowds at this house, as this type of photoplay takes to patrons of theatres in this section.

BALTIMORE—(Special)—This is an unusually big week for independent pictures in this territory for the reason that three of them are showing at downtown houses. At the Broadway Theatre two Warner specials are on the same bill, "Beautiful and Damned" and "Heroes of the Street," while at the Rialto Theatre Principal Pictures Corporation's "The World's a Stage" and "Beautiful and Damned" hold the boards.

PITTSBURGH — (Special) — "Enlighten Thy Daughter" is being revived in this territory and is this week showing at the Minerva Theatre.

FARGO, N. D.—Business in this territory is far from normal, with no indication of any immediate improvement. Bad local conditions are what is hurting patronage at all theatres in this section.

DENVER, COL.—Reports heard at local independent exchanges are far from encouraging insofar as this territory is concerned. It appears, from reports exchangemen have given out, that the country bounded by the Mississippi River in the East and the Rocky Mountains in the West, is hard hit and is now experiencing one of its worse theatrical seasons.

INDIANAPOLIS — (Special)—"East Vs. West" is the title of a Pete Morrison western that is heading the bill this week at the Regent, which plays to a class of audience that enjoys thrilling outdoor stuff.

INDIANAPOLIS — (Special)—"The Broken Silence," starring Zena Keefe, is the attraction at the Isis. This Arrow picture did a good opening day's business, the house preferring the featuring of James Oliver Curwood in all advertisement rather than picture, which was cleverly produced.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

MARJORIE DAW

Who will appear in James Young's First National release, "Wandering Daughters"

Hodkinson Picture Making Big Success

Owing to the success achieved by Elmer Clifton's production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," released by Hodkinson and now running its third successful week at the Cameo Theatre, New York, N. Y., announcement has been made that Rowland and Clark of the State Theatre, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., have signed for this production for an indefinite run.

According to reports from the various branch offices, exhibitors are discovering the box office possibilities of this feature attraction dealing with the romantic daring of old whaling days. It is also stated that Nathan Gordon of the Gordon Circuit has signed contracts for the appearance of "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the Brockton Theatre, Brockton, Mass.

It is stated that "Down to the Sea in Ships" has been meeting with much success wherever shown.

"Daddy" Applauded at Big Tryout

Sol Lesser believes he has another big picture in "Daddy," the next First National release, in which Jackie Coogan is the star; and, to test his belief with that of an audience, he put "Daddy" on cold at the Strand Theatre, Los Angeles, one of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., chain. A capacity house greeted the first flash of the Coogan picture with applause, which was renewed with great vigor at the last fade out.

"If that audience was a typical audience it agreed with me about every point of the picture," declared Mr. Lesser. "I feel that 'Daddy' will be a fine successor to 'Oliver Twist.'"

"Daddy" is said to be a typical Jackie Coogan screen offering. It is said to be full of the kid stuff that has made this youngter so famous. It was written by Jackie's father and mother, and is believed to contain phases of Jackie's life as daddy and mother recall them. Of course there are many more incidents, drawn from the imagination of the proud parents.

It will be released by First National the latter part of next month. After "Daddy" Mr. Lesser has one more Jackie Coogan picture to present through First National before the lad passes from his management. This is a big circus story, called "Toby Tyler," which will come to the screen some time in June.

In the cast with Jackie in "Daddy" are Arthur Carewe, Anna Townsend, Bert Woodruff, Josie Sedgwick, Ceasare Gravini, William Lewis and George Kuwa. "Daddy" is said to be in six reels.

VIOLA DANA IN METRO'S JAPANESE GARDENS

The charming Metro star takes keen delight in the Japanese Gardens of the Metro Studios in Hollywood, and she can usually be found there during a lull in production

Fights Blizzard to Get to Theatre

Nell Shipman, star of American Releasing's "The Grub-Stake," has been making personal appearances in conjunction with her picture at the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Oregon, where it played the week of March 3.

Many stars have done this, but few, if any, have gone to the lengths demanded by circumstances in order to make Nell Shipman's appearance possible. With her director, Bert Van Tuyle, four woodsmen and her malumute dogs, "Tex" and "Lady," she battled for 75 hours through six feet of snow, a terrific blizzard and temperature 28 below zero to cover the thirty miles lying between the Nell Shipman camp in the wilderness of Northern Idaho and the nearest railroad station in order to get to the theatre.

Universal Finishes "Town Scandal"

A new flapper romance starring Gladys Walton has just been completed at Universal City. It is "The Town Scandal."

The original title was "The Chicken that Came Home to Roost," and it was a story in the Cosmopolitan Magazine of a recent issue, written by Frederick Arnold Kummer. King Baggot, director of "Human Hearts" and "The Kentucky Derby," guided the filming of this story from a continuity by Hugh Hoffman.

Two Paramounts for Release on March 11

On March 11 Paramount will release the Cosmopolitan production, "Adam and Eva," starring Marion Davies, and Agnes Ayres in "Racing Hearts," both comedy-dramas, though widely different in theme and treatment, it is stated.

Guy Bolton and George Middleton's stage play, "Adam and Eva," adapted for the screen by Luther Reed, and directed by Robert G. Vignola, proves a splendid vehicle for Marion Davies, and the beautiful Cosmopolitan star scores quite as completely as she did in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," according to Paramount. T. Roy Barnes has the leading male role.

"Racing Hearts" is another automobile race story by Byron Morgan, author of the series which proved so popular with Wallace Reid as star. Will M. Ritchey wrote the scenario and Paul Powell directed. The race scene, staged at the famous Santa Monica course near Los Angeles, is said to be by far the most thrilling yet portrayed on the screen.

Playing opposite Miss Ayres, who is the heroine throughout, even in the big road race, is Richard Dix, who recently signed a five-year contract to play leads for Paramount.

Tully Marshall in Universal Film

Tully Marshall, one of the best known character men of the screen, who was signed recently by Universal for an important characterization in the production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," will also play in the next Hobart Henley production, "Up the Ladder."

"Up the Ladder" is the play by Owen Davis which William A. Brady produced with such success in New York City. Virginia Vallie, the newest of the Universal stars, is starring in an elaborate filming of this dramatic vehicle. Hobart Henley is directing.

Paramount Company Goes to Florida

With a company of ten principals, headed by Bebe Daniels and Antonio Moreno, seven extras and a technical staff of nine, Richard Ordynski left Sunday for Miami, Florida, to film exterior scenes for "The Exciters," a Paramount picture adapted from Martin Brown's stage play by John Colton and Sonya Levien.

Vernon Steel Signed

Vernon Steel, who played with Gladys Walton in "The Girl Who Ran Wild," has been signed for one of the leading roles in the all-star Universal production to be directed by Jack Conway, "What Wives Want." The story is an original one by Perry Vekroff.

Going to Florida

Bebe Daniels has sufficiently recovered from her recent operation for appendicitis to be able to play in "The Exciters," and Agnes Ayres, who came from the coast to play the part when it was feared Miss Daniels would not be well in time, will go into "Arms and the Girl," a story by Harry Durant.

The exteriors for both pictures will be made in Florida. Richard Ordynski will direct "The Exciters." Antonio Moreno will play opposite Miss Daniels. Wesley Ruggles will direct "Arms and the Girl."

Pathe to Release Soon Feature Showing Life in Pacific Islands

The forthcoming release of something wholly new and distinctive in the way of feature pictures is Pathe's latest new product announcement. Authorized by General Manager Elmer Pearson, this is the fifth of a series of weekly announcements holding lively interest for all exhibitors, especially those, Pathe says, who shared in the profits and public estimation assured by bookings of "Nanook of the North."

Like that classic of the frozen regions, the new feature now first announced deals intimately with human life at once mysterious and the subject of universal curiosity, yet differs in the circumstance that its characters are wholly savage and live their precarious existence in conditions remaining the most primitive on earth.

The picture is in five reels and is called "Black Shadows." Its most important locations are in the Soloman Islands—that region in the South Pacific inhabited by the dread "Head Hunters"; several rival tribes of warlike, tattooed and grotesquely self-mutilated cannibals, heretofore inadequately pictured, and their savage ceremonies vaguely described in rare volumes and in sensational Sunday newspaper features.

"Black Shadows" is produced by World Tours, Inc., whose schooner, "The Wisdom II," voyaged with its filming staff and outfit from Los Angeles to the southwestern antipodes, touching at all the important island groups en route and thus making "a journey backward along the worn trail of time," with intimate camera revelations in the "Head Hunters'" country its successful main object.

On the return of the expedition a few months ago the many thousand feet of negative were edited and titled at the Hal Roach Studios, and the finished picture promptly accepted by Pathe as measuring up to the standard of its policy to release only features of distinctive character and quality.

The human drama depicted in "Black Shadows" is said to be dramatic and thrilling in the extreme, the film itself demonstrating the actual presence of the director and camera staff in the thick of battles between tribes of these cannibal savages and guests at their strange, often gruesome, ceremonies.

Will Make Dramas in Unexplored Locale

Organized to make South Sea Island dramas for the screen in a locale hitherto unexplored by white men, the Wide World Photoplays, Inc., has opened offices at 220 West Forty-second street. The officers of the company are Tom Swinton, president; Alvin V. Knechtel, vice-president; Arthur Wilson, secretary-treasurer; and the board of directors is composed of Tom Swinton, Alvin V. Knechtel, Arthur Wilson, Pat Dolan and John Frost.

While Mr. Swinton has declined to divulge the exact location for his first production, it is known that the venture will mark a complete innovation in picture-making. The first company, headed by Mr. Swinton and Mr. Knechtel, cameraman, will sail from San Francisco for Hawaii early in May. In Honolulu the party will be augmented by a physician, said to be the only white man who has ever set foot on the island where the picture is to be taken. The party will cover the distance from Hawaii to this island—a matter of several hundred miles—in a sailing vessel that has already been chartered.

The most important point that the producers wish to emphasize is that their product will not be a scenic. It will be genuine drama, for which a script and continuity have already been prepared, the former having been approved by the board of directors.

With a strong story the party will locate in its South Sea Island "studio." Any sets that are necessary for exteriors or interiors will be built by native carpenters. It is expected that the party will be away about six months, during which time ample opportunity will be had to incorporate in a dramatic picture scenes never before shown on the screen.

The company has already been assured of the co-operation of the U. S. Aviation Service at Hawaii in procuring unusual shots and facilities for strong action sequences.

"Salome" Draws Big Crowds to Theatre

Under the headlines "Nazimova's 'Salome' Startles Aldine, Philly, by Big Gross," "Variety," in its issue of March 1, tells of this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation picture having been held over for a second week in its engagement at the Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, and adds "Expected to do $5,000; did $12,000."

"The surprise feature last week in films here was the good business turned in by Nazimova's 'Salome' at the Aldine," says "Variety's" dispatch from Philadelphia.

"It was booked for a week, and generally figured to gross around $5,000 in this medium capacity house. Instead, after a weak opening, 'Salome' commenced to drag them in. The dailies were enthusiastic, and one critic devoted most of his Sunday column to it. None of the reviews were of the cut-and-dried nature, and all commented on the fact that 'Salome' was a little bit different from any other feature ever made," continued "Variety."

More Praise for "The "Hero"

"The Hero," B. P. Schulberg's recent release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, which was chosen by the National Board of Review as an exceptional picture, has received an additional honor by Photoplay Magazine, which has ranked it as first in its "Six Best Pictures of the Month."

This recommendation is carried through Photoplay's circulation of 450,000 to some two million readers of the publication.

In addition this Gasnier production takes two places in Photoplay's "Six Best Performances of the Month," John Sainpolis in "The Hero" ranking first and Barbara La Marr in "The Hero" ranking third.

Irvine Appointed

Clark Irvine has been selected to do the publicity for Frank Borzage productions that Arthur Jacobs will present through Associated First National. Irvine is well known on the coast. He will make his headquarters at the United Studios.

She gave up everything to go with the Abysmal Brute—Why?

"Jazzmania" Given Hearty Reception

Boston has given a royal welcome to Mae Murray in her new photoplay, "Jazzmania."

After the showing of "Jazzmania" at Loew's State Theatre George C. MacKinnon wrote in the Boston Advertiser: "'Jazzmania,' now rejoicing State Theatre patrons, is the most shining example of the peculiar Mae Murray type of cinema exhibit loosed upon a fortunate world within our recollection. Mae's irresistible dance-tapestry weaving seems just a bit more gratifying than ever."

The Boston Globe calls the screen play "amusing as well as thrilling." The Boston Post praises Miss Murray's ability as a dancer, and draws attention to the good supporting cast.

The Boston Transcript points out the lavish manner in which the production is done. "She stints not in wardrobe," it says of Miss Murray.

"Jazzmania," presented and directed by Robert Z. Leonard, is released by Metro. It was produced by Tiffany Productions.

Lichtman Lists Big Film

Tom Forman's second production for Preferred Pictures, "Are You a Failure?" is this month's release on the schedule of the Al Lichtman Corporation. Prints are now in the Lichtman exchanges ready for exhibition March 15.

"Are You a Failure?" is a comedy-drama, written by Larry Evans and presented by B. P. Schulberg.

It features an all-star cast, including Madge Bellamy, Lloyd Hughes, Tom Santschi and Hal Cooley. Early first runs for the feature will be given at the Republic, Jacksonville, Fla.; the Strand, Altoona, Pa.; the Arc, Lafayette, Ind.; the Alcazar, Birmingham, Ala.; the Grenada, San Francisco, Cal.; Broadway-Strand, Detroit, Mich.; the Capitol, McKeesport, Pa.; the Rialto, San Antonio, Texas; the Melba, Dallas, Texas, and the Temple, Union Hill, N. J.

Four Funmakers in Paramount Film

At least four noted slapstick artists will appear in "Hollywood," James Cruze's new Paramount production. Scenes were recently made at the Christie studio, and among the notable figures will be Ben Turpin, Ford Sterling, James Finlayson and Kalla Pasha. Joe Martin, the celebrated monkey, was an actor also in scenes made at the Lasky studio representing a studio waiting-room.

Lewis Dayton in Metro Picture

Lewis Dayton, who has a leading role in "Cordelia the Magnificent," Harry Garson's forthcoming production for Metro, starring Clara Kimball Young, has appeared in pictures made in practically every European country, including England, France, Italy, Holland, Switzerland and also Egypt.

"Cordelia the Magnificent" was written by Leroy Scott, and the film version will be directed by George Archainbaud.

Says Norma Shearer Is a "Find"

Exhibitors and fans have united in acclaiming Norma Shearer, who is featured with Gladden James and Yvonne Logan in the recently released "A Clouded Name," as a genuine find, says Playgoers Pictures. This is the consensus of opinion of reviewers who have passed upon the qualities of "A Clouded Name," it is stated.

Austin O. Huhn directed the feature.

Fidelity to Novel Marks Vidor Film

Fidelity to the locale in which the scenes are set, it is said, as well as the novel from which it is adapted, mark the Associated Exhibitors' feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," after Booth Tarkington's great prize-winning novel. The "certain small city of the Middle West," where "the social position depended largely upon how large a bank balance the head of the family possessed," is a picture of the life of thousands of communities scattered not only about the Middle West, but also the Far West, the South and the East.

Persons who have been privileged to have previews have, it is said, described this offering as "the great American photoplay," the adjectives which also have applied to Mr. Tarkington's novel, as reflecting life in a typical American town. Florence Vidor has the title role.

Rowland V. Lee directed this seven-part feature, which Associated Exhibitors has set for release April 8.

Strong Cast Is in Leah Baird Picture

In "Is Divorce a Failure?" the first of the Leah Baird 1923 specials, which Associated Exhibitors is releasing March 18, Miss Baird, who is featured, is supported by a strong cast, it is reported. Arthur F. Beck, producer of his wife's big features, believes that he has assembled an ideal aggregation of players for the various parts.

Tom Santschi has an important role. Walter McGrail had just finished his work in "Susanna," with Mabel Normand, when Mr. Beck procured him for Leah Baird's latest and biggest picture, and Richard Tucker was completing "Hearts Aflame," with Reginald Barker, when he was signed for one of the leads.

Associated Exhibitors announced this week that among the early booking contracts was one calling for runs of "Is Divorce a Failure?" throughout the entire Wilmer & Vincent Circuit in Pennsylvania.

Mae Murray Begins "The French Doll"

Mae Murray has begun work on "The French Doll," a Tiffany production, presented by Robert Z. Leonard, to be released by Metro. This is her second picture to be made in California this season. It will be an elaborate version of the stage success of the same name by A. E. Thomas, adapted by him from a famous French play. As a stage play it had a long run in New York and on tour.

Robert Z. Leonard, director of Mae Murray's Tiffany productions, has surrounded the star with a cast, including Rod La Rocque, Willard Louis, Orville Caldwell, Madame Rose Dione, Bernard Randall, Paul Cazeneuve, and others. The production will be, it is stated, in the same uniquely lavish style which has always characterized Miss Murray's pictures. The adaptation for the screen was made by Frances Marion.

Miss Murray's recently completed picture, "Jazzmania," has been booked by some of the most prominent theatres in the country, it is reported.

Mary Pickford to Begin New Picture

Mary Pickford oiled the wheels of progress at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio last week when she announced that she was ready to start work on a new photoplay production.

"My first new play is to be an original story," said Miss Pickford, "under the working title of 'Rosita,' but before that is complete I expect to have started work on 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall,' the script for which already has been prepared."

Miss Pickford will postpone making "Faust," which, it had been reported, would be her next picture.

Miss Pickford's new story, the final title for which will be decided upon later, is from the pen of an European dramatic editor, and was brought to this country by Ernest Lubitsch, director. The scenario was prepared by Edward Knoblock, noted dramatist, who also wrote the script, in colloboration with Mr. Lubitsch, for "Faust."

Makes Replica of Mayflower

A precise replica, save in a single respect, of the doughty Mayflower, which bore the Pilgrim argonauts of 1620 to America, has been constructed at the Charles Ray studios in Hollywood, and is now being used in that star's production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish."

The one respect in which the 1923 craft differs from its forebear is in the fact that its framework is of metal.

This steel framework, a trussed hull 102 feet long, with a width of 24 feet and depth of 14 feet from deck to keel, has been so equipped with mechanical contrivances as to make possible a re-enactment of the terrific storms which buffeted the original frail craft in its epoch-making voyage across the Atlantic.

Hiers Production Nearly Finished

Walter Hiers is on the home stretch with his Paramount comedy-drama, "Sixty Cents an Hour," directed by Joseph Henabery, with Jacqueline Logan featured in support. This original by Frank Condon was adapted by Grant Carpenter.

Hiers' next picture will be an original by Walter Woods and will be directed by Rob Wagner, this being Mr. Wagner's first effort with the megaphone. It will be started in about three weeks. Ralph Block is production editor of Hiers' present picture, but Walter Woods will assume that office for "Fair Week," as the next one has been tentatively titled. It is being adapted by Thomas Geraghty.

Rex Ingram Is Back at Metro Studio

Rex Ingram is back in Hollywood after an absence of seven months, during which time he filmed John Russell's story, "Where the Pavement Ends," in Florida and Cuba. Immediately upon arrival Mr. Ingram went to the Metro studios, where a large staff has been working for the past month upon the initial preparations for the filming of "Scaramouche," Rafael Sabatini's popular historical romance, by arrangement with Charles L. Wagner.

Ramon Novarro is to have the title role, and Alice Terry will enact the leading feminine role.

In Metro Pictures

Ralph Lewis is one of the four screen character actors appearing in "Desire," Louis Burston's forthcoming photoplay, which Rowland V. Lee is directing at the Metro studios in Hollywood. The others are Edward Connelly, Frank Currier and Nick Cogley, all familiar names to followers of stage and screen.

SYLVIA BREAMER
Who is appearing in "The Girl of the Golden West," the Edwin Carewe production for First National release

Lois Wilson Here

Lois Wilson, who will be seen in one of the featured roles in James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," and who recently portrayed an important character in Pola Negri's first American starring picture, "Bella Donna," is in New York for a brief vacation. While in New York Miss Wilson is stopping at the Hotel Pasadena.

In "Exciters" Cast

Cyril Ring, who played an important part with Thomas Meighan in "Back Home and Broke," has been added to the cast of "The Exciters," the Paramount picture Richard Ordynski has just begun at the company's Long Island studio with Agnes Ayres and Antonio Moreno in the principal roles.

Christie at Truckee

Al Christie left town today for Truckee with twenty people, three wind machines, a wooden horse and the funny plot of a farmyard comedy, titled "Winter Has Came." Dorothy Devore will be starred, supported by Babe London, Earl Rodney and Ward Caulfield.

Another comedy is being finished at the studio, "Green As Grass" featuring Jimmie Adams, and directed by Scott Sidney; while a third picture featuring Bobby Vernon and directed by Harold Beaudine, has just been started.

Levine with Associated

Max M. Levine this week joined the publicity and advertising staff of Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Levine is a native New Yorker and a product of the city's schools. The addition to this department is another evidence of the rapid expansion of Associated Exhibitors' activities.

Exhibitors Say Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last" Is in Class by Itself

As a result of exhibitor previews of Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last" achievement, Pathe reports the blazing of a new trail uniting distributors and exhibitors in a mutually profitable and frank get-together spirit.

In a word, it is declared that the new Lloyd feature comedy flashes upon all who see it, qualities which make the flat rental contract illogical, out of date and ill-adapted to foster the best interests of either party. This—according to the statement of E. A. Eschmann, Pathe general sales manager—is not only frankly admitted but urged by the biggest theatre and circuit owners on their first view of "Safety Last."

"Without stopping to consider the possible effect of such a verdict upon their own booking arrangements," says Mr. Eschmann, "these big leaders in the exhibition field declare with emphasis that 'Safety Last' is in a class by itself and should bring the distributor and exhibitors together in contracts based on frank discussion and consideration of their respective problems.

"To us this point is so obvious that the spirit of it pervades our instructions to all Pathe branch managers and salesmen concerning their 'Safety Last' negotiations. Every exhibitor is given the opportunity which frank discussion of exhibitor problems creates to book this Lloyd masterpiece on terms calculated to enable him to continue his run with profit and service to his community for a reasonable period after the 'capacity houses' stage of the engagement has run its course."

It is understood that every "Safety Last" booking is based on the principle of enabling exhibitors, when conditions are favorable, to reap the benefit of extended runs. Contracts are individual and variable in their terms, taking into consideration each exhibitor's special problems of investment of rental, up-keep, running expenses, local conditions, and so forth.

The results so far of the exercise of this spirit in booking "Safety Last" are said by Pathe to be actually beyond expectations, and represent the highest possible appreciation of Harold Lloyd's seven reels of mingled thrills and laughs which follow each other so swiftly that—in the language of one pre-viewer: "It was hard to believe that I had sat through more than four or five reels."

Eight Productions Scheduled by Paramount for Release in March

During the month of March Paramount will release eight productions, included among the high lights being Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Adam's Rib"; two Cosmopolitan productions, "Adam and Eva" and "The Nth Commandment"; Allan Dwan's "The Glimpses of the Moon," his first under his new contract with Paramount, and the initial starring picture of Walter Hiers, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime."

First on the schedule is Betty Compson in "The White Flower," which is listed for release the 4th. Julia Crawford Ivers wrote the story and scenario and directed the picture. The story is laid in Hawaii, and it was there that Mrs. Ivers took the company for the filming of the exterior scenes. Edmund Lowe is Miss Compson's leading man.

Cosmopolitan's "Adam and Eva," starring Marion Davies, is scheduled for the 11th. Robert G. Vignola, who produced "Knighthood," also directed this picture, which is an adaptation by Luther Reed of the stage comedy-drama success by Guy Bolton and George Middleton. The settings were designed by Joseph Urban, who was the art director of "Knighthood."

Agnes Ayres in "Racing Hearts" is also scheduled for the 11th. This is an automobile race picture from the pen of Byron Morgan, who wrote "The Roaring Road," "Too Much Speed," "Across the Continent" and other automobile stories in which Wallace Reid starred. Will M. Ritchey adapted "Racing Hearts" and Paul Powell directed. Miss Ayres' leading man is Richard Dix.

On March 18 Walter Hiers, long a popular leading player under the Paramount banner, is formally introduced as a star in "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," a comedy by Dana Burnet. Wesley Ruggles directed from a scenario by Albert Shelby LeVino. Featured as Hiers' leading woman is Jacqueline Logan.

On the same date comes "The Nth Commandment," from the Cosmopolitan studios. This drama was written by Fannie Hurst, scenarized by Frances Marion and directed by Frank Borzage—the same trio that was responsible for "Humoresque." Coleen Moore, James Morrison and Eddie Phillips are featured, with other prominent roles in the hands of Charlotte Merrian and George Cooper.

Allan Dwan's production, "The Glimpses of the Moon," with Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi, is announced for release March 25. This is a picturization of Edith Wharton's novel, treating the subject of trial marriage. E. Lloyd Sheldon wrote the scenario for the production.

Alice Brady in "The Leopardess" is the other release for the 25th. This is an adaptation by J. Clarkson Miller of the novel by Katharine Newlin Burt. Edward Langford and Montagu Love have the two chief supporting roles.

"Robin Hood" Breaks Record

"Records may come and records may go, but I believe this one will stand forever," said Sid Grauman in a telegram to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, about the run of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," at his Hollywood Egyptian Theatre. "On February 11 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' had shown at 'Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre' for nineteen consecutive weeks to 274,643 paid admissions at $1.50 top, amounting to $273,341.90. The picture is now in its twentieth week and still going strong."

They called him woman-shy! Yet he carried off the woman he wanted!
Why?

Allied to Release Two Marsh Films

Announcement is made of the signing of contracts by Hiram Abrams, president of Allied Producers' and Distributors' Corporation, and Lee Arms, American representative of Graham Wilcox Productions, Ltd., of London, by which two Mae Marsh pictures made in England will be distributed by Allied Producers and Distributors. The two pictures are "Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing" and "A Woman's Secret."

Mae Marsh in "Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing," a screen story that has found much favor in England and on the continent, will be released by Allied Producers and Distributors in the course of the next sixty days. It is now playing a season's run in the Scala Theatre, London. Mae Marsh is at present engaged by D. W. Griffith in the production of his forthcoming photoplay, "The White Rose."

Charles Wilcox, managing director of the British company, will return to England aboard the steamship "Majestic" on March 10. Graham Wilcox Productions have in the course of production the screen version of "Chu Chin Chow," upon which work will begin in the very near future. "Chu Chin Chow" will be released in this country this fall.

Our Films Popular in Far East—Vignola

Writing to Arthur M. Brilant, his personal representative, from Manila, P. I., Robert G. Vignola, director of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and other Cosmopolitan screen successes, who is now on the last lap of his around the world tour which will bring him back to New York about May first, says that American made motion pictures are in great favor in the Far East particularly comedies. He says in part: "the really good comedies just double them over with laughter. As for the features they sit through them very quietly and unresponsively which would be all right if it weren't for the incidental music they try to play to them. It's really very funny to see an emotional scene played to squeaky strings, cymbals and tom toms."

The Japanese theatre made a keen impression on Mr. Vignola for he says: "In Kioto the performance I saw was really very interesting and intelligent. The sets were almost as good as Urban's, the actors had poise and remarkable expression. A circular stage changes the sets before your eyes in a jiffy. One leading lady had a strong emotional scene and believe me she played it. Her tones rang so true that she about had us all going."

Mr. Vignola's fame preceded him for in every port where he touched he was wined and dined and feted by the officials. The local newspapers carried interviews with him and everything possible was done to make his short visit a memorable one, and to give him an insight into native life which an occidental could not get in the usual way. Mr. Vignola writes further: "In Yokohama Ellis Hotaling with the American Consul took charge of me during my entire stay. In Hongkong a police sergeant was assigned to to be with me constantly and he showed me the intimate side fo Chinese life. He took me to places I would never have dared to enter without the law on my side for he personally knew more hop heads than I ever dreamed existed in this day. The trip so far has proved a great success. I wouldn't have missed it for the world, and in spite of having only a short time in each port it has been long enough for me to gather plenty of good material, and my camera has been quite busy 'shooting" characters and scenes that will be of use to me in my future productions."

Christmas was spent at sea and Mr. Vignola arranged a special concert choosing his talent from among the passengers. He not only acted as chairman of the entertainment committee, rehearsed the entire program, and supervised the presentation but he took part himself in two numbers. Mr. Vignola left New York on November 19 and by the time he returns he will have been gone about five and half months.

Marjorie Daw to Play Lead.

Director James Young, now making a series of independent productions for First National release, has selected Marjorie Daw to be one of the feminine leads in his first production, "Wandering Daughters," to be made at the United Studios in Los Angeles. The other wandering daughter, as already announced, is Marquerite de la Motte.

Miss Daw and Miss de la Motte were selected after weeks of "looking them over" by Director Young and Sam E. Rork, who is presenting the Young productions. The story is based on a tale by Dana Burnett, and which appeared in a national magazine.

Others to be in the cast are William V. Mong, Noah Beery, Pat O'Malley, Allan Forrest, Mabel Van Buren and Alice Howell. George Benoit will be cameraman, and James Ewens, assistant director.

Griffith Finishing "The White Rose"

D. W. Griffith and his company of players are now at Miami, Fla., finishing his forthcoming photoplay feature, "The White Rose," in which will be featured such well-known players as Mae Marsh, Carol Dempster, Ivor Novello, Neal Hamilton, Lucille La Verne, Porter Strong, and many others. In "The White Rose" the noted producer and director has dipped into the old South for his background, and promises an offering which should prove of great popular appeal.

"The White Rose" will show Mr. Griffith in a mood in which he has no equal. He will be found reveling in the pastoral and painting camera scenes with a touch similar to Corot and Millet.

Quite simple in its fabrication is the story of "The White Rose." It will be lack the so-called big, spectacular punch. To introduce such into this picture would only mar the continuity of the romance and the sweetness of its fulfillment. The story deals with the true and pure love of a hapless waif and a scion of wealth, who turns to the ministry, only to forsake it and all honors of the world when he finds his position untenable with the wrong that he has done.

There is a triangle, but it extends into a quadrangle, involving a girl of wealth and position and a lowly tradesman's son, who makes a way and a name for himself. Intermingled will be the humor of the South in darkey characterization. The denouement proceeds with natural course to a happy conclusion, and a moral is worked out for all to take as they may see fit. It might be said that the foundation for the principle of the tale may best be found in the Biblical example, "Let he who thinketh he stand take heed lest he fall."

Mr. Griffith began work on this new screen offering at his studios at Mamaroneck, N. Y. Then he set forth in quest of genuine and untrammeled southern countryside. He found it in the old Teche country in southwestern Louisiana. Here he labored for some weeks and photographed the very idealistic background he sought. Giant live oaks, moss-strewn and nestling close to river and bayou banks; sweeps of cane-brake; cypress boughs overspreading mirror-like pools and current-choked beds of floating water hyacinths, afford an avenue for the Griffith art which hardly could be equalled.

The story of "The White Rose' is a modern one, but of a significance which stands out cameo-like against a background of the older régime. An impression abroad that this new story has to do with Longfellow's "Evangeline" is erroneous. True it is that Mr. Griffith wandered in the Bayou Teche country, where Longfellow placed the most pathetically tragic part of his exposition of the outrage of 1755, but he did so only for the "atmosphere."

Gasnier Starts on Next Preferred Film

Word comes from B. P. Schulberg that Gasnier has started work on his next Preferred picture, Edgar Saltus' famous novel, "Daughters of the Rich." Players who will have prominent roles are Gaston Glass, Ruth Clifford, Ethel Shannon, Stuart Holmes and Marjorie Daw.

It is somewhat of a coincidence that, just as Schulberg was negotiating for the screen rights to this successful book, his neighbor, Louis B. Mayer, was considering a title change for his forthcoming screen production of the stage play "Climbing." Almost simultaneous with Schulberg's announcement of the acquisition of the Saltus story came word from Mayer that he had decided on "Daughters of the Rich" as the new name of "Climbing." It is likely, however, that, in view of Schulberg's purchase of the novel known by this title, Mayer will rechristen his contemplated production once more.

This is the second time within a comparatively short while that these two neighbor producers were almost engaged in making pictures of the same title. Last fall Louis B. Mayer bought the rights to a magazine story by Albert Payson Terhune, "A Hero," while concurrently Schulberg was in the act of purchasing Gilbert Emery's play, "The Hero." The last picture has already been produced and circulated, while the Mayer "A Hero" has not yet reached the screen.

"Daughters of the Rich," it was learned from the Al Lichtman Corporation, will be released as one of their first eight Preferred pictures.

Order to Show Big Fox Picture

El Jebel Shrine of Denver, Colo., has leased the Isis Theatre of that city and will run the William Fox feature picture "The Town That Forgot God" for one week.

According to a statement made by the Illustrious Potentate of the Shrine: "Before this picture was selected by the committee, it was screened at a special showing, after which each and every member of the committee pronounced it to be the most remarkable motion picture made. A goal of 50,000 admissions is what El Jebel will strive to sell."

"Adam's Rib" Smashing Records in Many Cities

Following its premiere at Grauman's Rialto, in Los Angeles, where all previous house records have been broken over a period of five weeks. Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Adam's Rib," is now setting new figures for attendance and receipts in several of the large cities.

A wire received at the Paramount home office from Louis Marcus, district manager at Salt Lake City, says: "'Adam's Rib' opened at the Paramount-Empress March 1 and the first four days broke all records for attendance at that theatre, having shown to over eighteen thousand paid admissions. House seats fourteen hundred."

R. D. Thompson, branch manager at Omaha, wired Monday as follows: "'Adam's Rib' opened here at Strand yesterday to a gross business that was approximately twenty per cent better than 'Manslaughter.' Capacity business prevailed from three in the afternoon to the last show. Well received by public and newspaper critics."

In Los Angeles the picture during its first four weeks at the Rialto exceeded the previous record for the same period, held by "Manslaughter," by $751, while in New York at the Rivoli there has been practically no let-down of the business of the opening week.

Pep Club to Hold Ball at Commodore

A million dollars' worth of theatrical talent and the most marvelous array of feminine beauty ever gathered together under one roof is what the general committee in charge of the Paramount ball is promising those who attend this third annual event under the auspices of the Paramount Pep Club at the Hotel Commodore Friday evening, March 9.

Practically all the motion picture stars now working in the East will be there, including Thomas Meighan, Agnes Ayres, Nita Naldi, Alice Brady, Lila Lee, Laurette Taylor, Johnny Hines and others.

The entertainment, which will start at about midnight and will be staged under the direction of Ned Wayburn, is being arranged by Nils T. Granlund. Through his efforts the appearance of several entire musical comedy companies now playing in New York is assured. These include the Ziegfeld Follies, "Lady Butterfly," "The Gingham Girl" and "Sunshowers" companies, Lew Leslie's Midnight Frolic from the Boardwalk and the entire choruses from the Greenwich Village Follies and the Music Box Revue.

Among those who will appear in individual acts in the entertainment are Will Rogers, Johnny Dooley, Evan Burrows Fontaine, the Lorraine Sisters, Beth Beri, Charles King, the Fairbanks Twins, Johnny Hines, Bob Nelson, Harry Delf, Berta Donn, Cortez and Peggy, Alice Maison and Wes Totten, Evelyn Law, Will Morrissey, Savoy and Brennan, Muriel Stryker, Janet Stone, Peggy Hope, George Hale, Lovey Lee, Lou Lockett, Edythe Baker and Eddie Dowling.

John Emerson, president of the Actors' Equity Association, and Hon. Murray Hulbert, representing Mayor Hylan, will act as chairmen of the reception committee for the professional talent.

The dance music will be furnished by Jay Cox's orchestra of twenty-four pieces. Tickets, including refreshments, are on sale at all of the local theatrical ticket agencies.

Elaborate Publicity for Fox Production

Fox expects "If Winter Comes" will prove to be one of the most widely exploited pictures in the history of the industry, even without the campaign which, it is said, the Fox organization is planning.

The M. Witmark & Sons' song number commemorating the pictorial version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's famous novel, soon will appear in music stores throughout the country as one of the mediums of exploitation which exhibitors will have an opportunity to take advantage of.

There already is one record of another song number of the same title on sale in phonograph and music stores, and in all probability there will be another issued before the picture is released.

The book which even today, it is said, ranks among the "best sellers" despite the fact it has been on the market more than two years, is another medium which exhibitors will have an opportunity to take advantage of.

"Othello" Playing to Big Business

The question as to whether the public wants Shakespeare on the screen seems to have been definite settled by the two weeks' run of the much talked of "Othello" at the Criterion Theatre. So unusual has been the demand for seats and so glowing the reviews of the critics on the Continental production that Hugo Riesenfeld has booked it to go into the Rivoli Theatre immediately following the Criterion run. It will open at the Rivoli on Sunday, March 11th.

When Ben Blumenthal and David B. Howells placed "Othello" on Broadway the showing was primarily for the purpose of determining whether or not the public really wanted Shakespeare on the screen. Film men were skeptical as to the box-office qualities of such a production despite the fact that its excellence from the technical, dramatic and artistic angles was conceded. Blumenthal and Howells asserted that a fine motion picture production would draw patronage no matter what its theme or where it was produced. In addition, "Othello," being the first great picturization of a Shakespearian drama, they claimed, would draw a great army of lovers of the immortal bard's work to the theatre showing it.

The Criterion box-office, it seems, has proved their assertions correct. "Othello" has drawn unusual crowds to this theatre daily and the popularity of the film is said to be heightening greatly as the second week of its showing wears on.

When "Othello" opens at the Rivoli on March 11 there will, no doubt, be many patrons present who saw Emil Jannings at this same theatre when he scored his great success in "Deception." Jannings has earned a big following of American picture fans and as the critics have credited him with one of the greatest Shakespearian portrayals as "Othello," the reception of this new picture at Riesenfeld's theatre is expected to be very pleasing. Werner Kraus, favorably known for his unusual work as "Dr. Caligari," gives a remarkable performance as Iago, while the beautiful Ica Lenkeffy plays the part of Desdemona.

The distribution in this country will be handled by the Howells Sales Co.

Baseball Players in Role of Movie Stars

America's baseball idols are soon to be seen in the role of movie stars. What is reported to be one of the most unusual feature pictures of the year is a melodramatic baseball story filmed in the Orient by Harry Owens of the United Pictures Company during the recent tour of the All American Baseball team. Herb Hunter, who conducted the tour, co-operated with Owens in obtaining Judge Landis' sanction to make the film. Art Nehf, Leslie Bush, George Kelly and Emil Meusel are a few of the stars who play important parts.

The story is based on an international plot to corrupt baseball and opens with a scene at the Polo Grounds. From there the story jumps to Japan, China and Korea. Some of the thrilling scenes were filmed on the diamond of the Imperial Hotel at Tokio. George Kelly the Giants famous first sacker plays the leading male role. In addition to the ball players many of Nippon's noted Diamond stars are to be seen.

A large supporting cast of well known American film celebrities enhance the production. The picture will be titled upon its arrival here sometimes next week at which time distribution details will also be negotiated. The producers are planning a big exploitation campaign and a tie-up with the spring training camps of the teams represented by their stars in the film.

In addition to the sure fire melodramatic punches that come with baseball pictures the pictures have the Oriental background and its cast of popular ball players.

Her head said "No"; Her heart said "Yes." What happened?

Jesse Weil With Resolute

Jesse Weil has been engaged by Resolute Film Sales, Inc., as head of their publicity and exploitation department and is at present working on their new production, "The Greatest Menace."

Weil is laying out an extensive campaign on this feature that includes endorsements from Federal, State and city officials.

1st National to Film "Penrod and Sam"

Encouraged by the splendid reception of "Penrod," which was made by Marshall Neilan, Associated First National has decided to produce an even more lavish American boy story, "Penrod and Sam," from the pen of Booth Tarkington.

This announcement follows an agreement with Warner Brothers for the "loan" of the services of William Beaudine to direct the picture. The production will be presented by J. K. McDonald.

Working on New Play

Jess Robbins, whose production, "A Front Page Story," with Edward Horton, has proved to be one of the box office winners released under the Vitagraph banner, is at work upon another story with Horton as star. Director Robbins has turned author and the picture is one of his own writing.

Semon's New Picture in Exchanges

Prints on Larry Semon's new laugh-thriller, "The Barnyard," have been shipped to Vitagraph branches. This comedy is one of the best ever made by the comedy king. It includes not only thrills that end in laughs, but the Vitagraph comedian created some of the most laughable gags with barnyard inhabitants that have ever been screened. A new leading lady, Kathlyn Meyers, is seen with Semon in "The Barnyard."

Duncan Starts Next

William Duncan is working on his new feature for Vitagraph in which he and Edith Johnson are co-starring. The story has not been named finally but the cast is a strong one and the story a lively western drama with a generous sprinkling of comedy in it. Among those in the cast are Frank Beal, Francis Powers, Dick LaReno, Edmund Cobb and Bob Reis.

Work Started on Fox Picture

Charles Jones has begun work on a new picture at the Fox West Coast Studios, "Snowdrift," from the story by James B. Hendryx, and under the direction of Scott Dunlap. Irene Rich is the lead opposite Jones.

Carewe Starts Work on Big Belasco Story

Within the shadow of Mark Twain's picturesque cabin, at Sonora, Calif., Edwin Carewe, First National director, has started filming exterior scenes of the great California classic, "The Girl of the Golden West." Miners came and miners went, covered wagons passed in review, Mexicans, Indians, Chinese and gay cabelleros strolled about, while huge hauls were staked on a single bet at the faro tables, and the whole town of Sonora took a general '49 atmosphere. Even the medicine vendor with his high silk hat was there.

Gray-haired prospectors, men who slaved for "paydirt" in the mad rush of '49 came out to see the beginning of the revival of the famous David Belasco stage success.

At the very foot of one of the greatest paying gold mines in the section, and on the same spot where stood the original village of Sonora, Carewe has built a replica of the town, with everything from the Polka saloon to the school-ma'am's hut. Six wind machines are on hand and Carewe will make a terrific blizzard. Enough lighting equipment was brought from Hollywood to illuminate six city blocks.

Interior scenes for the picture will be filmed at the United Studios.

Crowds Jam Capitol to See "Mad Love"

Pola Negri's picture, "Mad Love," showed at the Capitol Theatre, New York, for a week and did an enormous business, Goldwyn reports. Sunday, the opening day, broke all records for the theatre—even those of "Passion" and "Robin Hood," it is stated.

The New York critics gave laudatory reviews. James O. Spearing in the Times wrote: "'Mad Love' is one of those Sappho stories. And the chances are you don't like that kind any more. But the odds are that you will like this one. Because whenever an actor or actress makes any character really come to life on the screen, you are bound to like his or her story.

Quinn L. Martin in the World: "Not since Rodolph Valentino's 'Blood and Sand' has a picture star effected so frenzied a first night as Miss Negri in 'Mad Love.' 'Mad Love' is a play far superior to 'Passion.' We approve of this picture."

The Telegram: "In 'Mad Love' there may be found warm-blooded action, vibrant beauty and throbbing reality of character, the like of which the silver-sheet has rarely seen. Pola Negri is unmatched in her field."

Beauvais Fox in the Tribune: "The perfect vehicle for Pola Negri. * * * The greatest non-stop vamping record ever filmed."

P. W. Gallico in the News: "We do not hesitate to commend the talents of Mme. Pola Negri to motion picture fans who like acting with their movies. She moves vividly."

Gordon Trent in the Morning Telegraph: "Miss Negri is a consumate artist and with her personality, her beauty and her manner of getting the most out of every scene, no picture with her in the leading role could fail to interest motion picture patrons."

The Mail: "Movie goers cannot afford to overlook 'Mad Love.'"

The Sun: "She (Pola Negri) indulged in some thrilling emotional acrobatics and did some striking ground and lofty vamping."

Globe: "Elemental, untamed, intrepid yet tender—such is the heroine of 'Mad Love.' Pola Negri looks her part to perfection."

More Players Added to Goldwyn Roster

So well satisfied has Goldwyn been with its stock company of screen players, after several years' successful trial, that it is adding new names to its roster.

Among these stock players are several stars of world-wide reputation and with big followings; character actors who have made a reputation for their mastery of that difficult phase of screen acting; juvenile players of both sexes and other all-round players who can be called upon for almost any sort of role in a new production.

Those who have signed contracts with Goldwyn are Ted Edwards, Aileen Pringle, Frank Mayo, Hobart Bosworth, Conrad Nagel, Raymond Griffith, Eleanor Boardman, Mae Busch, William Orlamond, and Jean Haskell.

Shirley's Next

George Scarborough is the author of "Balance Due," a new story for Shirley Mason which is being produced by William Fox, under the direction of Henry Otto. Albert Roscoe, who has been identified with several Fox successes, is the leading man in the Mason cast.

Songs for "If Winter Comes"

An excellent indication of the popularity of A. S. M. Hutchinson story "If Winter Comes" is the number of songs using that title now being put out by the different music publishers in New York. The screen version of the English novelist's work that Fox Film Corporation has completed with Percy Marmont and Ann Forrest as Mark Sabre and Lady Tybar will soon be released.

Al St. John's Next

"St. John and the Flagon" is the title of a moving picture travesty on "St. George and the Dragon" that Al St. John, the William Fox comedian, has received from a would-be humorist with an inclination to play on words. Al says he doesn't hanker after the costume drama, although he isn't afraid of the proposed theme being too dry.

Goldwyn Engages Claude King

Claude King, the English actor who came to this country several years ago to act opposite Ethel Barrymore in "Declasse," has been engaged by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to appear with Corinne Griffith in Eleanor Glyn's "Six Days" upon which Director Charles Brabin will soon begin work.

Scenes of Puritan Times on Screen

In order to give "The Scarecrow," by Percy MacKaye, the next Glenn Hunter production produced by the Film Guild, Inc., release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corp., a perfect ground and artistic dressing, the entire Film Guild company will spend a week in Deerfield, Mass., reproducing a town square of Puritan times, with a group of the oldest houses in America as a background for the picture.

Doris May Engaged by Fox

Doris May has been engaged to play opposite William Farnum in his new William Fox production, "The Gun Fighter," which has just been started at the Fox West Coast Studio under the direction of Lynn Reynolds.

News Reel Now Recognized as Important Part of Show

By EMANUEL COHEN
Editor of Pathe News

The news film has become a permanent institution in the motion picture field and is now a part of every program in every important theatre of the country. Whereas only a few years ago it was considered a filler thrown in to occupy 10 or 15 minutes, it is now a feature on its own merit and in many instances is presented as the most important part of a program.

One of the reasons for the development of the news film has been the enlargement of its scope and the extension of its activities, so that at the present time it is a world-wide institution comparable with the Associated Press, the United Press, etc.

In projecting a modern feature the cost of production is very apparent. On the other hand, the cost of production of the news reel is not apparent from the results. However, it must be clearly realized that behind the news reel stands a tremendous organization, untiring efforts, a tremendous investment, and enormous expenditures. We cannot tell when events are going to happen nor where, but if something does happen in any part of the world the public expect to see the pictorial record of it and it is our business to get it for them. Accordingly, we have to maintain a staff of hundreds of cameramen stationed throughout the world to wait and watch.

Time and tide and "news" wait for no man and it is therefore frequently necessary to engage special airplanes, trains, etc., to enable a cameraman to get to the scene of the events while the event is still in progress. Moreover, the interest and value of the news subject depend upon its timeliness, so that on very important stories special arrangements must be made to bring the film to the factory while it is still "hot." The recent exclusive pictures of the Burning of Smyrna is a concrete example of how news is covered and presented. A close study of reports indicated trouble brewing. Accordingly we kept three cameramen on the job in the event that something should suddenly break, and one of them was immediately rushed to the scene of the conflagration when it occurred. When the pictures were obtained they were shipped by special boat to Italy and then by airplane to Paris and Havre, where they were placed on the steamer for the shipment across the Atlantic. Fourteen days after the fire occurred 8,000 miles away the films were shown here at a cost of $7,000. The flight of the Sampeio-Correia from New York to Brazil is another instance of the unusual expenditures. On this occasion, although large expenses were incurred, very few pictures of news value were obtained, so that the expense was practically a total loss.

Still another example is the recent exclusive pictures of the earthquake in Chile. It occurred in a very remote section of northern Chile, about 400 miles from our nearest cameramen. It required the hiring of a special mountain pack train to reach the scene of the event in the quickest possible time. When I state that only five per cent of the stories which we try to cover are actually used in the Pathe News, you will realize the percentage of waste that necessarily enters into the production of a news reel.

Classical Jazz Is Hit at Fox Academy

"Classical Jazz" is now the slogan at the Academy of Music, the William Fox downtown theatre in New York City. In keeping with the policy that nothing is too good for his patrons, General Manager F. N. Schwab of the Academy inaugurated on Sunday, March 4, the policy of syncopating the brain children of the classical composers, and the results have shown that motion picture audiences are quick to respond to an innovation that adds zest to their entertainment.

In order that this latest form of musical melange might be served up to his patrons in the most effective way, Manager Schwab augmented his orchestra to thirty-five, making it in effect a combination of symphonic proportions capable of doing full justice to the most difficult and intricate musical composition.

Under the able leadership of Musical Director Joseph Klein, the orchestra offered up a delectable and snappy musical program Sunday in connection with the showing of William Farnum in "Brass Commandments," that elicited nothing but words of commendation from the packed house.

"Classical music is all right for those who understand it," said Manager Schwab in discussing this innovation at the Academy, "but the majority of motion picture fans like their classics 'pepped up' with syncopation. If variety is the spice of life, syncopation is the seasoning that makes classical music palatable, and the Academy patrons have taken to 'Classical Jazz' like a small boy to an ice cream cone.

"Those who used to think that Rachmaninoff and Liszt were musical crepe hangers, now acknowledge that these old boys had some real melody in them when we jazz up the Prelude in C Minor and the Hungarian Rhapsody. When Director Joseph Klein puts the tabasco of syncopation into the mellifluous creations of the old masters, you can see the reaction immediately in the faces of our audience, and they have a hard time making their feet behave.

"Our box office shows we have struck a responsive chord in the jazz-hearts of our patrons, and that chord is a syncopated one. They certainly like 'Classical Jazz,' and we are going to see that they don't go hungry."

Engage Schertzinger to Direct Special

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, upon his return to New York City last week from Hollywood, announced that he had engaged Victor L. Schertzinger to direct the forthcoming special, "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, the author of "The Covered Wagon."

The engagement of Director Schertzinger is another step forward in the determination of Mr. Smith to produce box office winners for exhibitor and public. Director Schertzinger is credited with being the man who made a star of Charles Ray under the old Ince banner and in his career he has directed such stars as Mabel Normand, Pauline Frederick, Dorothy Dalton, Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore.

Among the noted pictures in which these stars appeared are "Mr. Barnes of New York," "The Blooming Angel," "The Slim Princess," "Head Over Heels" and "The Peace of Roaring River."

"The Man Next Door" is one of the strongest human interest stories ever written and it is because it has these essentials of heart appeal mingled with big drama that Schertzinger has been placed in charge of production. He knows how to screen heart interest.

Like "Masters of Men," the special production which Vitagraph has just finished and which is now being edited, "The Man Next Door" will have an all-star cast, players who have assured box office drawing power behind them.

President Smith is elated over "Masters of Men." It is a strong "he-man" story of the sea, acceptably the best sea story written by Morgan Robertson, master of all writers of life before the mast. The principals, Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis and Wanda Hawley, never have been seen to better advantage, it is said.

"Vamped" Ready in Early April

The second Al Herman all-star Century comedy, "Vamped," will be ready for early April release.

While Jack Cooper takes the principal male part, honors go to Marjorie Meadows (formerly Marjorie Marcel) as the vamp. Miss Meadows has had considerable stage experience. Others in the cast are Billy Engle, Jack Earle, Jimmy Adams and Lois Boyd. The scenario is the joint work of Al Herman and Sig Neufeld, head of the Century scenario department.

"Shadows" a Winner

"Shadows," the Tom Forman production for Preferred Pictures, featuring Lon Chaney, has proved a sensation at the Coliseum in Seattle, where it recently completed a week's engagement, according to word received by the Al Lichtman Corporation. Not only did the picture play to record business during its entire run, but it received the same whole-hearted recommendations from the critics of Seattle that have been accorded it in every key center where it has opened.

Film Made to Fight Narcotic Evil

Production behind closed doors has begun on "The Living Dead," the dramatic screen lesson against narcotics being made by Mrs. Wallace Reid. Besides Mrs. Reid, the cast includes Bessie Love, George Hackathorne, Claire McDowell, Victory Bateman and Eric Mayne. The male lead has not yet been selected.

The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and the production itself is under the direction of John Griffith Wray.

Broadway Said to Be a 100 Per Cent. Universal Thoroughfare

That Broadway has gone Universal by a large majority, and now is on the books of the Big "U" Exchange, Universal's New York distributing office, as a 100 per cent. Universal street, is the claim made by Universal sales executives after a survey of the New York territory which showed, it is stated, that every motion picture theatre on Broadway from 34th street to 181st street, is a user of Universal product.

The last theatre to inaugurate the showing of Universal pictures was the Criterion Theatre, which recently presented "Driven," the Universal-Jewel produced by Charles J. Brabin. Shortly before that "The Flirt" was shown for a week at the Rialto, which also shows "The Leather Pushers" and has just signed up for the new Buddy Messinger Century comedies.

The Strand Theatre presents Universal-Jewel productions. "Under Two Flags" had an unusually successful run in that house, it is reported. The Capitol also presents Universal-Jewel productions, one of the most successful pictures ever shown in that house having been "The Storm," it is stated.

The Rivoli Theatre is a regular user of Baby Peggy Comedies. Of the other Times Square theatres, Loew's State and Moss's Broadway Theatres are constant users of Universal-Jewel product, and Loew's New plays Jewels and Universal attractions regularly. All the five-reel features in the Laemmle Nine, the Capitol Series and similar groups of pictures play the New York. All of the theatres use the International News reel.

Loew's Circle, the Lincoln and the Comedy Theatres also feature these pictures regularly.

The 77th Street Theatre, with a long list of Universal-Jewel attractions among its box office successes; Keith's 81st Street, with a similar list of Jewels, and the 83rd Street Theatre, with another such list of played or booked Universals, assures Universal fans in that section of Broadway of 100 per cent product.

The Schuyler and the Adelphi also have regular Universal showings, the latter theatre taking practically the entire Universal output. Among other Broadway houses which are regular exhibitors of Universal photoplays are the Standard, the Symphony, Fox's Jap Garden, the Keystone, the 103rd Street, the Olympia, Fox's Nemo, the Grange, the Gotham, Moss's Hamilton, the Bunny, the Costello, Loew's Reo, Fox's Audubon and Moss's Coliseum in Washington Heights.

Universal executives point to this record as one which clearly indicates the extent to which Universal pictures are improving. A year ago no such claim could have been made. The rapid strides in picture quality which have actuated every move at Universal City and throughout the entire Universal organization is getting results, officials of that company assert. The results show on the books of the Universal exchanges, it is asserted, and on the box-office reports of Universal's exhibitor patrons.

Bombing Squadrons at Fox's Disposal

So enthusiastic became Minister Ginesty of Beaux Arts of France during the private showing of "Over the Hill," which was tendered him and members of the French Government, that the services of the National Bombing Squadron were placed at the disposal of the Paris office of Fox Film Corporation for whatever publicity purposes it designed.

As a result of this courtesy, an unusual exploitation campaign was devised by J. Viguier, the Fox representative in charge. It is in his report that an accurate description of the stunts is given. In part, the report follows:

"The results of Minister Ginesty's enthusiasm made it possible for us to obtain the services of the army bombing flying machines from the military field of Villacoublay, and to secure, free of charge for the exploitation of our specials the services of such well-known aviators as Sadi Lecointe, lieutenant aviator, Knight of the Legion of Honor—war cross, 18 citations—wounded four times—record of speed; Haegelen—lieutenant aviator—Knight of the Legion of Honor—27 citations—wounded three times. With full squadrons, each in turn, flew over the city (Paris) dropping thousands of vari-colored circulars.

"The skies over Paris for a few hours looked as if they were strewn with myriads of birds. Great masses of people were congregated at the Concorde, on the Champs Elysses, and on the boulevards, watching these circulars come down, and picking them up as they landed. We merely mentioned the names of the various theatres that were running the picture, and coupled up with a campaign of publicity in the daily papers, partly paid by the exhibitors, we succeeded in filling every one of these theatres that were running 'Over the Hill' the first, second, third and fourth weeks."

Every theatre of importance in the French capital has been exhibiting the Fox specials, or are booked for future engagements, the report states further. Ever since its release, not a week has passed that "Over the Hill" has not played some second and third-run houses with Mary Carr.

Two weeks after the release of "Over the Hill," "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" was shown in eight theatres simultaneously. "Thunderclap" followed with a booking in ten theatres for the same week, and "Nero" followed this in the same number of houses.

"Baby Peggy" a Genius

Baby Peggy, four-year-old Century Comedy star, was given her second psychological test by the University of California. According to Professor Lapham, the Century Comedy starlet will receive a 150 per cent. average. This equals her last effort and places her in the category of geniuses. She passed perfectly the tests for four, five, six and seven-year children.

Elinor Fair Goes to Universal City

Elinor Fair, a star overnight by reason of her excellent work in "Driven," the current Universal-Jewel box office success, has been called to Universal City by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation. Miss Fair left New York for the Coast eearly this week, on short notice.

No definite information as to Universal's plans for her have been announced, but it is certain that Homer Boushey, production manager for Universal, must have an important role for her, or she would not have received telegraphic instructions to take the next train west. Those who have seen her in "Driven" say she has developed into an emotional actress of great ability and appeal.

Bookings on "The Hero"

"The Hero," Gasnier's production of Gilbert Emery's play, presented by B. P. Schulberg and distributed by the Al Lichtman Corporation, will be shown in the near future in first-run houses that include the Alamo, Louisville, Kentucky; the James, Columbus, O.; the Republic, Jacksonville, Fla.; the Eagle, Manchester, N. H.; the Olympic, Altoona, Pa., and the Arc, Lafayette, Ind.

New Comedy Gag

Clyde Cook's latest two-reel comedy, "The Artist," contains a novel "shell" game, according to Fox. It is played with snail shells, the snails themselves taking the parts of the agile and elusive peas. The comedian and his director are said to have worked out a lot of clever and amusing business from the incident.

130 Houses to Show Chaplin in "The Pilgrim" in One Week

Associated First National reports a record demand for Charlie Chaplin in "The Pilgrim." Already the bookings at the New York exchange of this company show that one hundred and thirty houses will show "The Pilgrim" during the week of March 12. The list up to date is as follows: Six Keith houses, six Moss houses, eight Fox houes, four Proctor houses, three Consolidated houses, four Sydney Cohen houses, one Yost house, five M. &. S. houses, twenty-one Loew houses, seventy-two independent houses.

During the week of March 19 ninety-nine Brooklyn houses will show the Chaplin picture.

During the first week of showing "The Pilgrim" at the Strand Theatre, New York, 88,273 persons saw the picture. The big crowds caused Manager Joseph Plunkett of the Strand to hold the picture for a second week.

Fox Picture to Be Released March 10

Fox Film Corporation announces a William Russell production, an Al St. John Comedy and a Sunshine fun-maker as its list of releases for the week of March 10.

"Good-By, Girls," from the story by George Foxall, will be the vehicle offered with William Russell in the starring role. It is directed by Jerome Storm and Carmel Myers has the feminine lead. March 11 is release day.

"The Salesman," the two-reel special comedy featuring Al St. John is, Fox says, far above the average short mirth-provoker. The comedy star, it is stated, again breaks his way into the heart of all who see him.

The Sunshine Comedy release is entitled "The Fourflusher," and is scheduled for March 18.

Fox News is issued bi-weekly, and offers a number of foreign and domestic sequences of great importance, it is reported.

Musical Score for Charles Ray Film

Charles Ray's second United Artists' release, "The Girl I Loved," in eight reels, is going out to exhibitors this month with an elaborate musical score, made to intensify its highly dramatic nature, it is reported.

For this work Mr. Ray chose Louis Gottschalk, who has assembled for "The Girl I Loved" a fine symphonic accompaniment.

Baker to Film Story

George D. Baker, author of the scenario, "What Shall It Profit?" which Goldwyn has arranged with Frank B. Mills to produce at its studios for Goldwyn release, has arrived at the studios. Mr. Baker will direct the filming of his story. Mr. Mills has been in Culver City for some time arranging for his first production on the Pacific Coast. Casting of the players will soon be started.

To Begin on "Greed"

Erich von Stroheim will leave the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Calif., for San Francisco in a few days to begin filming "Greed," based upon Frank Norris' realistic novel, "McTeague,' the continuity for which he has prepared himself. Gibson Gowland, the English actor engaged for the lead, arrived at the studios last week.

Campaign Book for "Tents of Allah"

Copies of a handsome campaign book on "The Tents of Allah," the melodrama of desert romance and adventure, which is the current Associated Exhibitors' release, are being sent to the branch sales offices of that organization throughout the country.

This publication is of twenty-four pages, and is the work of Miss Gertrude K. Smith, of Associated's publicity and exploitation department.

March a Busy Month at Paramount Studio

With five companies at work and three stories in preparation for early production, March will be the busiest month at the Paramount Long Island studio since it was reopened several months ago.

Thomas Meighan is completing scenes for "The Ne'er-Do-Well," under the direction of Alfred E. Green, and Dorothy Dalton will return soon from Florida to finish her latest picture, "Fog Bound," adapted by Paul Dickey and being directed by Irvin Willat.

Last Sunday Bebe Daniels and Antonio Moreno with a company of players left for Florida to make exterior scenes for "The Exciters," adapted for the screen by John Colton and Sonya Levien from Martin Brown's stage play of the same name. Richard Ordynski will direct this picture. Agnes Ayres also left for the South to be ready for the beginning of her new picture, "Arms and the Girl," which Wesley Ruggles will direct from a scenario by Jack Cunningham.

"Lawful Larceny," Allan Dwan's second production for Paramount under his new contract, will be started early this month, with Hope Hampton, Nita Naldi, Conrad Nagel and Lew Cody in the cast.

The stories in preparation for production, which will be begun as soon as the players are available after completion of their current pictures, include "Bluff," a story by Rita Weiman and Josephine Quirk, which Albert Shelby LeVino is adapting and in which Bebe Daniels will have the stellar role; "White Heat," a story of the steel mills written especially for Thomas Meighan by R. G. Kirk, and a story from a play by C. M. S. McLellan being adapted by J. Clarkson Miller for Dorothy Dalton.

Distinctive Starts "Backbone" Campaign

To inaugurate the first of its twelve big 1923 features the Distinctive Pictures Corporation on March 1 began a national advertising campaign of "Backbone," the photoplay which marks the screen debut of Alfred Lunt.

The campaign will comprise twenty-eight sheet stands in more than a score of the leading cities of the United States and Canada —some regular showing, some special illuminated signs and some more elaborate painted spaces. Posting of these began in New York City on March 1 and March 15 will see the commencement of posting in other first key cities.

These twenty-eight sheet stands comprise a twenty-four sheet lithograph, featuring the standardized nameplate for "Backbone" which will be used in all advertising matter from a one column teaser up, and a four sheet date.

"The Brass Bottle" Next Tourneur Film

Maurice Tourneur has selected "The Brass Bottle," by F. Anstey, for his second Associated First National release. Those familiar with this story declare it has marvelous possibilities for Tourneur's genius at securing stupendous effects. Anstey is an English author. A dramatic version of "The Brass Bottle" had a long run in one of London's leading theatres.

Tourneur's contract with Associated First National calls for four big features during the year. "The Isle of Lost Ships" is the first of these. This picture has just been finished, and the sea effects of the island of floating wreckage is said to be something novel in screen thrills and picturesque.

Tourneur's contract was arranged by M. C. Levee, of the United Studios, and Levee will present the Tourneur productions through First National release.

Noted Actor Formerly Miner on Small Pay

The Board of Trade of Forest City, Pa., has offered to get up a first class, rousing "Old Home Week" next summer if S. L. Rothafel and Pat O'Malley will return to the prosperous Pennsylvania coal town for a few days.

As is generally known, Rothafel of the Capitol Theatre began his career at Forest City, but it is not so generally known that Pat O'Malley, who is now playing one of the principal parts in Hugh Dierker's production for American Releasing Corporation, "The Other Side," was, not so long ago, employed as a miner of Forest City at a wage of a dollar and a half a day. Now that his income is said to equal that of a railroad president, he has assumed a new and important standing.

Sign Marshall for Supporting Role

Tully Marshall, one of the best known character men of the screen, who was signed recently by Universal executives for an important characterization in the spectacular production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," will also play in the next Hobart Henley production, "Up the Ladder," it has just been announced.

Play by Davis

"Up the Ladder" is the play by Owen Davis which William A. Brady produced with such success in New York City. Virginia Valli, the newest of the Universal stars, is starring in an elaborate filming of this dramatic vehicle. Willard Louis, veteran character man, and Bert Roach, who plays comedy or character roles with equal facility, also are in the cast.

Reginald Denny was to have co-starred with Miss Valli in this production, but has just been withdrawn from the cast to make a third series of "The Leather Pushers." His successor will be named in a day or two.

Henley Making "Up the Ladder"

Hobart Henley, the director who recently was promoted to a high featured rank by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, is making the picture. "Up the Ladder" follows Jack London's "The Abysmal Brute" and Booth Tarkington's "The Flirt" in his endeavor to naturalize his screen art and raise his pictures above sentimental and melodramatic standards.

Keatons for Brazil

First National has contracted with the Companhia Brazil Cinematographica, of Rio De Janeiro, for the following five Buster Keaton comedies: "Frozen North," "Electric House," "Day Dreams," "Balloonatic" and "The Love Nest."

Women will love him!
Men will envy him!

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

White Completing Third Year Making Mermaid-Educationals

Jack White is working on the final group of the 1922-23 series of Mermaid Comedies for Educational, and nearing the close of his third year in supervising Mermaids.

That White is fulfilling his promise to make every comedy a special is said to be shown by the latest pictures which have arrived in New York. White is alternating Louise Fazenda and Lige Conley in his productions. Fazenda is being featured in a series of burlesques, the first of which is "Pest of the Storm Country." Conley's work is snappy, action comedy.

"Cold Chills" will be Fazenda's next comedy. It is a burlesque on the mystery plays of the present day. The producer has stepped out of the usual comedy field with a big production in which magnificent sets are utilized. A ballroom, for instance, occupying an entire stage, was constructed for one scene and the reproduction of the trans-Atlantic liner represented the largest set of its kind ever constructed at the United studio.

White gave his entire time to the supervision of "Cold Chills," which was directed by Del Lord and Hobart Kerr. Supporting Miss Fazenda are Harry Gribbon, Otto Fries, Jack Lloyd and Sunshine Hart.

Lige Conley's recent comedies have been of the fast action type. "Casey Jones, Jr.," was a railroad comedy. "Hold Tight," his current comedy, is another action picture, in which is an automobile race between five cars through crowded streets.

Conley has just completed "Kick Out," a comedy built around a motion picture studio. More than fifteen lions were used in this picture.

Supporting Conley is Lillian Hackett, Otto Fries, Cliff Bowes and Spencer Bell, the humorous colored comedian. The production was directed by Del Lord.

Conley's next production is written around a motion picture theatre. Mack Swain will be seen in a prominent part in the cast.

Loew's Palace thought so much of its Metro two-reel comedy "Mud and Sand" that it was given the same amount of type space as the feature in this ad in the Washington Post.

Universal Starts Work on New Serial "The Eagle's Talons"

A new high-powered serial has just been put into production at Universal City. It is being directed by Duke Worne, and will be called "The Eagle's Talons." It is a drama of Wall Street manipulation of the world's wheat supply, which leads the characters into adventures and danger in various corners of the globe, including a series of aerial raids and stunts.

Fred Thomson, a champion athlete, and Ann Little, are co-starred. The chief supporting player is Al Wilson, who holds records for stunt aero flying, and it is said he will introduce some of the greatest thrills ever conceived for pictures.

Prominent among the other players will be Joseph Bonomo, who has won many prizes and established records for feats of prodigious strength. He also is an air stuntster, not only in aeroplanes but on steeples, skyscrapers and other heart quaking places; Edward Cecil, Herbert Fortier, Edith Blossom, Joseph Girard, Roy Tompkins, Al J. Smith and George Magrill.

Fred J. McConnell, serial manager for Universal, sends word that "The Eagle's Talons" will be the last word in screen thrillers. Miss Little's screen history includes achievements in every type of role, but for years she has been known primarily as one of the most courageous of outdoor women. She has appeared with Universal, American, Lasky, Arrow and others. Thomson has held the world's amateur athletic championship for some time and is rapidly gaining fame in pictures. He is of the clean-cut outdoor type.

"The Eagle's Talons" was written by Theodore Wharton, "the father of the serial," who has prepared some of the greatest chapter play successes which the screen has known.

"The Eagle's Talons" will be in fifteen chapters. The serial is scheduled for release beginning April 30th.

Lighthouses Filmed

"Sentinels of the Sea," a Fox Educational Entertainment for March is said to show lighthouses and light-ships never before filmed. Included in this reel is the valiant old Boston light which has stood for 206 years, and "Martin's Industry" a lightship built in 1853. Then there is the romantic "Waving Girl" warning on the Florida coast, the Eddystone Light in the English Channel and the Cordonan Light in France, and the Tillamock Rook Lighthouse on the Pacific Coast of this country.

Montana Working on "An Eskimo Spy"

Bull Montana and producer Hunt Stromberg are now in Truckee, where there is reported to be fifteen feet of snow, filming Montana's latest comedy for Metro, "An Eskimo Spy." They will remain three weeks. Appearing opposite the comedian is Florence Gilbert formerly with Christie and Monty Banks comedies.

The cast also includes Helen Walton, Chuck Reisner, May Foster, Richard Gordon, Ernest Woods and Roland Reed. Floyd Jackman is cameraman.

Our Gang and Leo Maloney on Pathe List for March 18

Pathe's program of nine releases for March 18 includes another two-reel comedy in the popular Our Gang series. It is called "A Pleasant Journey." Practically the entire action takes place aboard a train with the "Gang" substituting itself for a party of waifs and turning the trip into a nightmare for everybody else aboard.

"Partners Three" is the title of the two-reeler in The Range Rider Series, in which the hero saves a neighbor rancher from being victimized by the hero's partner in a land deal.

"Plunder," Pearl White reaches the villian manoeuvres a situation in a way to get the heroine into a quicksand peril.

The one-reel Hal Roach comedy release featuring Paul Parrott is called "For Safe Keeping." The timid hero, has $50,000 on his hands for the night. Panic stricken, he gets himself and the money locked up in jail—only to find his fate joined with that of a bunch of toughs.

The Aesop's Film Fable is called "The Sheik." Pathe Review No. 11 shows details of the making of a book from manuscript to binding. "Woods in Winter" shows a series of pictures interpreting Longfellow's poem. There is an American Indian section. The Pathe-color section deals with the beauties of Venice.

Exhibitors Using Unique Stunts for Coue Picture

Many unique explotation stunts are being employed by exhibitors in connection with Educational's two-reel special "The Message of Emile Coue." Manager Steffey of Jensen and Von Herberg's Liberty in Seattle Post-Intelligencer and Dr. Loope of the Sunshine Club who has been bed-ridden for ten years during which he organized the club, all of whom are bed-ridden. Dr. Loope was shown the picture and invitations issued to the other members who witnessed the showing, ambulances being provided by the theatre and the newspaper. In addition, Mayor Brown set aside an "Optimistic Week" advising the adoption of the slogan "Day by day etc."

Another stunt was put on in Marion, Ind., by the Luna-Lite theatre of which Billy Conners is manager. Connors made a tie-up with the Marion Daily Chronicle which carried a four-page section devoted to the program and advertising from local merchants hooking up with the Coue principle. The first page carried publicity cuts and illustrations, the second and third, a double truck with advertising, and the fourth the Luna-Lite program.

Einstein Film Gets Heavy Bookings

To the success of the presentation of Einstein's Theory of Relativity which Hugo Riesenfeld held over for a third week at the Rialto after one week at the Rivoli, Premier Productions distributing this film attribute the big bookings that are being received on this fascinating scientific subject.

Harold Rodner, handling the metropolitan district, reports bookings over the Loew circuit for over one hundred days, and reports from California tell of big bookings in Prominent Los Angeles and San Francisco houses. Many inquiries are being received for territory and an attractive line of accessories is being prepared.

Gets Big Space

As an instance of the attention the newspapers throughout the country are giving to the short subjects on the programs of the representative theatres the Seattle-Post Intelligencer devotes its entire review of the pragramme of the Strand Theatre, Seattle, to the review of the Educational-Cameo Comedy, "Tea N. Tea." This picture is cited by the newspaper as "one of the best of its kind that has been shown here this season."

Denny to Also Star in Third Series of "Leather Pushers"

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, announces that Reginald Denny will be the star in the third set of six reelers of "The Leather Pushers" series, and that he will be supported by Hayden Stevenson, and directed by Harry Pollard. This is the trio who were responsible for the success of the first and second.

"This has been arranged by Mr. Laemmle, by withdrawing Denny from the cast of "Up the Ladder" and remaking the scenes in which Denny has appeared.

With Denny ready to begin work early completion of the new "Leather Pushers" is assured. They will be released one every other week, beginning May 12th.

The third set is being adapted from six new "Leather Pusher" stories recently written by H. C. Witwer, and which will be published on Colliers beginning May 12th. This will mean that the picture and the stories will be released on the same date. Universal and Colliers are working on joint exploitation plans to take full advantage of this tie-up and the day and date release.

"I am going to supervise every detail of their production," announces Mr. Laemmle, "and will go the limit in making them top class. I will stake my reputation that the next series will fulfill every expectation, and far surpass the wonderful standard set by previous Rounds.

Denny has just completed work in the title role of "The Abysmal Brute," a strong screen adaptation of Jack London's famous prize ring romance. It is a Hobart Henley production, to be released as a Universal-Jewel.

Book Kaiser Film

Hodkinson reports the two-reel special "The Ex-Kaiser in Exile" is being widely booked by prominent houses throughout the country including Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre in Washington, Kunsky's Capitol in Detroit, the Liberty in Kansas City, Empress in Syracuse, Schade's in Sandusky and the Regent in Washington, Pa. Hodkinson officials feel that the character of these bookings place the stamp of exhibitor approval on this picture as a box-office attraction.

Century Offers Attractive Comedy Schedule for April

Julius and Abe Stern announce their April releases for Century Comedies as follows: April 4th, "Vamped" with cast composed of Jack Cooper, Jack Earle and Marjorie Meadows. Direction of Al Herman. The story of a millinery saleswoman who works havoc with the elite of the corner grocery store.

April 11—"Sunny Gym," starring Brownie with the support of Joe Bonner and Billy Engle. Adventures in the gymnasium of a training school.

April 18—"Dad's Boy" starring Buddy Messinger supported by "Tiny" Ward, Merta Sterling and Eddie Barry, in which Buddy foils attempts to give him a stepfather.

April 25—"Sweetie," starring Baby Peggy, supported by Louise Lorraine and Max Asher.

Schedule Changed

Stern Brothers announce changes in schedule of Buddy Messinger releases. The second Buddy picture will be "Dad's Boy" listed for April, to be followed in May by "All Over Twist" originally titled "The Bus Boy." The cast for this picture includes Eddie Barry, Merta Stirling, "Tiny" Ward and Dick Smith. Harry Edwards is directing this series.

"Pop Tuttle's Polecat Plot"

F. B. O. Comedy—2 Reels

Competition between two bus owners supplies the amusement in this latest of the Pop Tuttle comedies. The idea is good for many laughs and Dan Mason has an opportunity for the style of comedy in which he excels. Pop Tuttle and the rival bus line juggle the passengers back and forth, each one trying to outwit the other until Pop wins out by having a polecat thrown into the other's bus. Tillie of course comes onto the scene to supply the masterstroke.—M. K.

"Whiskers"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

A rather amusing burlesque on the miracles of a hair restorer gives this Lewis Sargent comedy an appeal to those who like obvious humor. Jimmy falls for a pretty manicurist in a barber shop where he gets his hair cut. Wanting an excuse to come back, he goes to a hair restorer and from then on his beard grows so fast he is practically forced to live in the shop. It is not a hilarious success, but runs along rather breezily. M. K.

"The Sheik"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Sheik methods in winning fair ladies prove more potent than any other in this Aesop Film Fable. Little Jack goes to the movies, after a rival has carried off his Jill. He sees a conquering sheik and determines to follow his example. All he gets out of his efforts, though, is the moral that "it is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." The number is not unusual but fairly amusing. M. K.

"One of Three"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

More thrills concerning the adventures of the secret agent, Yorke Norroy, are offered in this. It belongs to the series by George Bronson Howard, titled "The Further Exploits of Yorke Norroy." A good cast is used, including Roy Stewart in the featured role. Carmen Phillips plays an adventuress who traps Norroy into her apartment, then, with the aid of several men, gets the new secret code from him. He turns the laugh on all of them by staging their capture and proving that he had only a fake code with him. The picture is well done and successfully keeps up the suspense. M. K.

"For Safe Keeping"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

There is comedy, an unusual amount of action and good suspense in this Hal Roach product. The continuity is excellent and heaps one thrill on another. Paul Parrott plays a timid clerk who is entrusted with the banking of $50,000, which he fails to deposit before the bank closes. His frantic efforts to escape robberies have startling results. Finally he begs to be locked up in jail for safety. Even this, however, entails danger. M. K.

"Partners Three"

(Pathe—Western—Two Reels)

A good example of the Range Rider Series, this number features Leo Maloney in one of his much-admired heroic parts. The dramatic interest lies in the sale of the ranch belonging to his sweetheart's father. Shrewd neighbors attempt to buy it cheap, knowing that the government plans to build a railroad there. After a thrilling escape, a desperate ride and a hard fight, the hero saves the day for his friends. M. K.

Pathe Review No. 11

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Unusually interesting to book-lovers is a part of this review which shows the various stages of the book from manuscript to printed volume. Aside from this attraction there is a novel illustration of Longfellow's poem, "Woods in Winter." The winter scenes merge into summer with picturesque photographic effect. Indian masks and color scenes of Venice complete the collection. M. K.

"A Pleasant Journey"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is packed with first-rate amusement. "Our Gang," despite their many previous successes, have never offered anything more lively or entertaining than this. Under false pretenses they board a train and manage to provide excitement a-plenty for everyone in the Pullman. The first part shows a clever gag in connection with boosting the shoe shining trade. At many times the comedy is screamingly funny, and all of it is interesting. M. K.

"Hot Water"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Christie comedy featuring Neal Burns and Duana Thompson is filled with bright and amusing situations. It tells an amusing story of a young married man who loves children but has none of his own. A friend who is going away promises to let him take care of his kid. Neal's bosses play a trick on him by sending their four kids along also with instructions to the children to be as naughty as they like. The trouble they cause in Neal's household can easily be imagined. While the idea is not new, considerable ingenuity has been used in its development, and it should keep the average audience in smiles with occasional hearty laughter. The manner in which Neal turns the tables on his bosses furnishes a pleasing and snappy ending.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

New Theatre

B. F. Liddon, Owner Gem Theatre, incloses check for new handbook—the "Blue Book of Projection," and asks advice as follows:

Am going to build a new theatre this spring. Before having plans made I wish to know maximum distance projector may be placed from screen and get good results. At present am projecting 100 feet to a Minusa 12x16 screen. A Martin Five K. W. Rotary Converter supplies current to the arcs of two Simplex projectors.

The lot on which I will build is fifty by 200 feet. I desire to use entire width, and as much of the length as is possible with booth at top of balcony nad yet not too distant to get a brilliant picture with present converter. Do you know of any better location than top of balcony?

That Depends

That depends, friend Liddon. To answer you intelligently it would be necessary to know what angle the top-of-balcony location would give—angle of projection, I mean, and to know that I would have to know both height of top of balcony above center of screen and distance it would be from screen.

There are several distinct and very different problems involved in the top-of-balcony and distance propositions. The distance means little, viewed merely as distance. A ray of light travels some millions of miles from the sun, quite a few of them through air, and arrives O. K., so do you really think an added fifty or hundred feet is going to make much difference, unless the air in your theatre be very dirty or smoky?

Even then it won't make enough difference to be serious. Distance does make a BIG difference, however, but it is entirely due to loss of light in the projector optical train. I think if you STUDY the matter under "Practical Projection Optics," pages 160 to 212 of your new handbook, you will come to a pretty good understanding of what is involved in added distance beyond normal. It is wholly a matter of getting a sufficient distance between condenser and aperture to get the entire beam of light into a projection lens of not too great diameter, see figures 38 and 39 of your new book, keeping the spot of normal size (see the importance of this illustrated in figure 41 of handbook) and at the same time not being compelled to locate the crater too far from the condenser, see figure 36H.

Inevitable Loss

But with a very long distance and 16 foot picture, together with a minimum of sixty amperes D. C., all this is impossible. There will be inevitable loss somewhere, though it is possible it can be minimized by a new aperture lens I expect to come on the market soon, or you may minimize it by using a three-combination projection lens.

The other problem is distortion of picture, and on this account I would not advise any location which will produce an angle of projection sufficient to increase the height of the picture by more than five (5) per cent. You will find all this amply explained and illustrated on pages 253 to 258 of your new book, hence it will be unnecessary to consume valuable space, explaining further here.

And now to your last query. Yes, I know a better location for your projection room. It is shown in figure 81 of your new Blue Book. It is in the front of the balcony; also many Pacific coast exhibitors have the projection room at the rear of the main floor. Some of the very finest theatres out there use that location, and if you are to have stores at front of building it is THE place for the projection room. Either the front of balcony or rear of main floor location room may easily be thoroughly sound proofed and made entirely safe. True it costs a bit more in the first place, but forever after it is cheaper and better.

If you do decide to project 200 feet I would advise the use of high intensity arcs. You can get quite sufficient screen brilliancy with them, though the loss of light in the optical train will, of course, be considerable. In the end, however, it will, I believe, prove a good investment from the box office point of view.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave. New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

He Has Trouble

A projectionist out in the middle west arises from his seat to make the following remarks:

As projectionist, I am experiencing some trouble. Have the new handbook (Blue Book of Projection) as well as the Lens charts. Have been following your instructions as closely as possible, but perhaps I don't quite understand them, hence I send description of my optical train as it is. The trouble is that I am unable to get a clear spot at the aperture, regardless of where I place the lamp. Kindly give me the correct dope, by mail, and send bill for your trouble.

The Line Up

Instead of sending a bill I am suppressing name and location and sending the good brother a carbon copy of this article.

His line-up is as follows: Motiograph DeLuxe projectors. Fifty ampere Rotary Converter. Projection distance 83 feet. Projection angle 90 degrees. Width of picture 14 feet. Use 40 amperes at arc. Use 5/8 cored upper and 9-16 lower carbon. Projection lens 5¼ E. F., 1⅝ diameter and 3 11-16 working distance. Two 6½ plano convex are spaced 1-16 inch apart. 18½ inches center of condenser combination to film. 3¼ inches from crater to face of collector lens. Revolving shutter is placed 12 3-16 inches away from film. Auditorium is 55 feet wide. Use Gold Fibre screen. Use 2-wing shutters, with wings trimmed down to fit local condition.

The optical train seems to be O. K., but you must remember that the lens chart distance center of condenser to film is approximate only. It cannot be made accurate in a lens chart, because of the fact that plano convex condenser lenses are cheap lenses and vary considerably in focal length.

You may buy two 6½ inch lenses, but accurate measurements might show one to be 6¼ and the other perhaps 6¾, which would be equivalent to two 6½ and the net result would not be altered. Suppose, however, both are 6¼ or 6¾. The condition is then quite different and the distance necessary to get the right size spot, or the distance crater to lens would be quite different.

It is not essential that you have a "sharp" spot. In fact, with two such short focal length lenses the spherical aberration would be so heavy that I don't think you could get a very sharp spot. Maybe I am wrong in this, but I don't think so. How about it brother Griffith?

Try altering your distance condenser to film slightly, very carefully observing the result on the screen as you make the change. I am assuming that your condenser lenses are in good condition.

Clever Stuff

Recently the editor, at the request of J. E. Woodland, projectionist, of New York City, examined two devices which merit notice, and may merit a lot of it when they are ready for the market. They are the combined invention of Brother Woodland and George Sheridan, chief examininer, Moving Picture Projectionists' Examining Board, New York City.

One is a decidedly unique rewinder. It is of the enclosed type and is driven by the projector motor, thus economizing in first cost. It sets immediately to the left on the right hand projector, near the floor, and is not at all in the way. I told Brother Woodland that if he would reduce rewinder speed to not less than six minutes to the thousand foot of film, then I would look with favor on the device. Later: He has done this. The device merits very serious consideration. It is well made.

The other device is what amounts to lens which parallels the right beam beyond the aperture. Under some conditions the gain through its use would be great indeed, not only in light, but also in improved depth of perspective and definition of the picture.

It is a practical working out of exactly the idea which was discussed and re-discussed in this department years ago.

I will have more to say in this matter when the thing is finally in the practical manufacturing stage. They both look good, with the proviso that I would not approve the rewinder unless the speed be reduced as before set forth. Inspection would, of course, have to be done with a bench hand rewinder.

What He Needs

Thomas Heltne, DeKalb, Illinois, says:

Received my lens chart a few days ago, but am unable to follow it. The distance directed for the ampereage I use seems too great, and I cannot understand Chart No. 2 at all.

I use 50 amperes A. C. and have an 82 foot projection distance. Use a 6½ plano convex collector and a 7½ bi-convex converging lens, its surface located 14½ inches from the projector aperture. Projection lens is a 6 inch E. F. Use one 1920 and one 1921 Simplex projector.

The trouble with you, brother Heltne, is that you are placing what "seems" to you to be right ahead of concrete knowledge. You say the distance directed by the lens chart "seems" too great. May I ask why?

Do you really know anything at all about the principles involved? Have you a "Blue Book of Projection" and have you studied the things involved in distance condenser to aperture? If not I would advise you to get one and get busy. If you have one, then study all that matter under "Practical Projection Optics," pages 160 to 212 and I think your eyes will be opened very widely concerning many things; also you will see the reasons why guessing at things is NOT good practice.

Wrong Combination

Your condenser combination is wrong because it locates your light source too far from the collector lens—a very serious fault indeed. Your distance condenser to aperture is too short because it sets up a condition in which it is impossible for your projection lens to pick up the entire light beam.

You have not given me your lens diameter, so I am unable to tell exactly what the condenser to aperture distance ought to be, but certainly it must be more than 14 inches to insure the lens picking up the entire beam. As you have things now you are wasting half of your light.

Follow the Chart

The thing for you to do is follow the chart. You need two 6½ plano convex lenses, spaced with the tip of their curved surfaces not to exceed 1-16 inch apart, with about 18½ inches from a point midway of the condenser to the film. In practice you will put in the two lenses, as directed, and move the lamphouse until you get the best possible spot, which should be at about the point named, though that is not accurate, because condenser lens focal lengths are not accurate. Chart No. 2 is designed to show you where to place your revolving shutter. It shows that the shutter should be a trifle less than 13 inches from the aperture.

It really says 14, but there is an error of one inch which must be subtracted. I would, however, advise you to disregard chart No. 2 and proceed as follows: Get your condenser right, as per Chart No. 1, and then project the white light to the screen. Hold a bit of dark colored cardboard in the light beam in front of the projection lens and move it slowly out, away from the lens, until the face of the converging condensing lens appears in sharp focus.

If you cannot tell when it is in focus, write a word on the face of the converging lens with ordinary black ink, first cleaning the glass thoroughly so the ink will take. Then you can move the cardboard until the writing is in focus and that is the point your revolving shutter should be, if you can get it there. Sometimes you can reach it by reversing the shutter, as the blade can be gotten about an inch further out with the shutter on its shaft backwards.

Remove Blade

Having located your shutter you should remove its metal blade and cut an exact pattern of it from stiff cardboard, such as business cards are printed on. It need have no "rim" to bind the blades together. Place this paper blade in the hub. If you have not cracked the paper it will run for a month or two.

Now slowly trim down the master or cutting blade, taking exactly as much off each of the other blades as you do off the master. Trim a little at a time and keep it up until very faint travel ghost (white streamers up or down, or both, from white objects in the picture or white letters in titles) appears.

Now remove the paper shutter and lay it on the metal blade, marking its outlines thereon, but leaving the master blade just a trifle wider than the paper blade, because you have trimmed it so much that there is travel ghost. Now trim the metal blade down to the marks, install it, and the job is done.

I Cannot Agree

It will be remembered that I was recently consulted by the Department of Safety of the City of Denver as to what I consider a safe speed of projection. Other engineers were also consulted, from the reply of whom I quote the following paragraph:

A picture filmed at a speed of 75 feet per minute must be projected at the same speed in order to exactly duplicate the original action.

This is not done in practice, however, due to the fact that the audience having their attention concentrated upon what is taking place upon the screen are able to assimilate the action much more rapidly than would be possible if they were watching the same action off the screen.

Due to this fact an increase in projection speed over the speed at which the picture was taken is not noticed by the audience and is in fact in many cases desirable. This increase in projection speed should, however, not be more than twenty per cent in excess of the speed at which the picture was taken.

It would be interesting to know exactly upon what this engineer bases his idea that sceen action is more rapidly assimilated than would the real action be. He says it is because the audience has its attention concentrated upon the screen. Umph, well would not their attention also be concentrated upon the scene, if it were real and the audience were watching it?

What Increased Speed Means

I cannot at all agree, because of the fact that an increase in speed means that he who increases speed changes action and sets himself up as a better judge of what the particular scene needs than the actor and director who played and directed the making of the scene and rehearsed it many times to get the best possible effect.

Then, too, this engineer defeats his own argument when he limits the permissible increase to twenty per cent. Why twenty per cent? Upon what is it based? If his argument that some scenes are the better for an increase in speed, then is it not logically true that they should be speeded up until the best result is obtained; also is it not probable that different theatre managers or projectionists, who thus set themselves in judgment over the work of the artist and the director, which they propose to improve, will themselves have widely different ideas as to just what the increase ought to be for any given scene?

I have repeatedly said, and now repeat: There is but one correct projection speed, and that is the speed of taking, except in a few cases, such as boat or automobile races for instance, where the action itself was too slow for the best effect. I make the point blank statement that all acted scenes should be projected at the taking speed, and any other speed is incorrect and not good.

Spurious Parts

Once again, for the steenth time, let me warn you NOT to buy parts which you do not know are made by the manufacturer of your projector—that is, unless you like trouble so well that you are willing to go out of your way to shake hands with it.

I can imagine nothing more foolish than the buying of "cheap" (?????) projector parts. The projector manufacturer makes parts which will do justice to his projector, because he has a vital interest in having his projector give good results. He only charges a fair price for them.

The chap who has parts to sell "cheap" (?????) has them to sell cheap because they are neither well made or made of high class material. They are cheap IN FIRST COST, yes, BUT they are the most expensive thing you can possibly buy.

Should Not Be Necessary

Why? Heavens, man! It should not be necessary for you to ask that question. You have just one thing to sell, and that is the picture on your screen. You will, if you have good sense, agree that the more steady, sharp, evenly illuminated your picture is and the greater its depth of perspective, the better pleased your people will be with it, and therefore the greater will be the patronage of your theatre. That is just a "one and one makes two" proposition, so do not question it.

The commonest kind of common sense should tell you that anything which injures the performance of your projectors will inevitably injure what you have to sell—the picture upon your screen.

The commonest kind of common sense should tell you that imperfect projector parts, especially if they have to do with the heart of the projector—the intermittent—must and will injure its performance.

IT IS QUITE POSSIBLE FOR YOU, MR. EXHIBITOR, TO "SAVE" (?????) ONE DOLLAR BY BUYING A "CHEAP" PROJECTOR PART, AND TO LOSE FIFTY DOLLARS AT THE BOX OFFICE IN THE PROCESS.

MORAL: Don't buy any projector part not stamped with the imprint of the manufacturer of your projectors, or sealed in his original wrapping.

Here Is Where Over $30,000,000 Goes Into New Picture Theatres

THE prediction which we made in our issue of February 10, that 1923 would be a big year in picture theatre construction, has been more than justified.

In our February 10 issue, we showed where the erection of ninety-six new picture theatres was either contemplated or already under way, and that the amounts estimated necessary for the construction of less than fifty per cent. of them totalled $19,733,000.

In this issue, we list fifty-five additional new picture houses now being planned or built.

While those responsible for twenty-four of these houses have been reticent in regard to the contemplated cost of same, the estimates accompanying thirty-one of the reports total $11,180,000, which, added to the $19,733,000 already reported by us since the beginning of 1923, amounts to the comfortable figure of $30,913,000.

Five Millionaire Houses

Five of the houses reported in this issue are in the millionaire class, two costing $2,000,000 each, one to cost $1,500,000 and two at $1,000,000 each.

It will be noted that between $1,000,000 and $500,000 there is a hiatus. At $500,000 each two houses will be built.

One house will cost $350,000, another $300,000, while at $250,000 each two houses will be built.

Two houses will cost $200,000 each and one house will cost $150,000.

The most popular price appears to be $100,000, at this price five houses will be built.

One house will cost $60,000 and at $50,000 there will be four new theatres.

Two houses will cost $40,000 each, another pair will cost $35,000 each, while one house will be built at a cost of $30,000, $25,000 and $15,000, respectively.

The following table gives a graphic idea of the geographical distribution of these building operations:

Grand Theatre of Madison, Wis., Once More a Pretentious House

LESS than a half year ago, the Grand Theatre of Madison, Wis., having served for sixteen years, was made ready for its final showing. On March 8, the skeleton of the Grand Theatre, transformed through the expenditure of $78,000, made its bow to the public as The Madison Theatre—a dream palace in its gorgeous settings. Remodeled from roof to cellar, with little thought of expense, the rejuvenated 900-seat showhouse stands as a monument to the progress of the entire motion picture industry and a testimonial to the men who have made it possible.

With the opening of its doors, Madison was treated to magnificence and splendor in a motion picture house seldom seen in cities of its size. The Madison, in fact, has been proclaimed one of the most pretentious show palaces outside of the real cities.

Was the Showplace

Opened during the infancy of the motion picture industry, the Grand was for a long time a showplace of the city. But as the industry expanded, the theatre gradually was relegated more and more to the background until its owner realized that it had outlived its day.

Accordingly, the new plans were drawn up. With their materialization, the dreams of two men long identified with motion pictures in Madison have been realized. Frank Fischer, of the Fischer chain, owner of the showhouse and F. J. McWilliams, manager, have touched one of the heights of their ambitions. Mr. McWilliams, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, has been at the helm of the Grand since its opening.

The touch of the master decorator is evident throughout the remodeled structure. Harmonizing with a general color scheme of blue and ivory, are the drapes of blue and burnt orange in the lobby, an item which alone represents a small fortune. Even the seats blend with the color scheme, the genuine leather being done in blue. The velvety carpets, representing an expenditure of $4,800, are taupe.

As one enters the auditorium proper, the magnifient lighting fixtures strike the eye. They are of gold, bronze and polychrome. The fixtures on the walls are of Gothic pattern, especially designed by Lewis St. Pierre, art director for the chain of Fischer houses. They are in the form of lanterns and give off a soft, subdued light.

Bringing out to the fullest extent the quiet, refined tones of the general color scheme are the contrasting colors of the stage decorations, accentuated by spot and flood lights. The stage decorations likewise are the work of St. Pierre.

The transformation of the showhouse, however, is not limited to the inside. A new canopy has been erected which is decorated in gold leaf with 182 special diffusing lamps. Above this, flashing its name for miles around, rises the huge sign, "The Madison."

Ceremonies Brilliant

In keeping with the magnificent surroundings was the ceremony on the opening night. Leading state officials, figures high in Wisconsin's film world and prominent members of Madison's society were guests by special invitation.

The feature picture was "My American Wife," starring Antonio Moreno and Gloria Swanson. However, the photoplay was almost lost sight of in view of the other features which included a prologue with a cast of fifteen. Music was rendered by an orchestra of twelve pieces.

Mr. Fischer intended originally to spend only $50,000 in remodeling, but had to add $28,000 to the figure before the work was completed.

USHERETTES LOEW'S SAN FRANCISCO WARFIELD THEATRE
All dolled up in Colonial costumes for the Washington's Birthday Show.

Warfield Usherettes Re-Costumed Weekly

The function of a theatre, according to Lionel H. Keene, Western manager for Marcus Loew, in active charge of Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., is to present something in the line of entertainment just a little different and a little better than patrons expect. The same scenery and the same atmosphere week after week pall on patrons and they begin seeking amusement elsewhere.

Presentation has been made a great feature of the offerings at this house and in order that the proper atmosphere might be carried out the usherettes are given different costumes each week. These are not always the same, but the same general idea is always carried out. The illustration shows how the girls appeared during the week in which Washington's Birthday was celebrated. All were in Colonial costume, but all the costumes were different and the effect evoked much favorable comment. A Colonial act was also presented on the stage throughout the week.

A very high type of usherettes is employed at this house and all receive special training, there being a regular course of instruction. They meet once a week, very much like a class, and are taught the fine art of handling the public. Each month a prize of $10 is given the one making the best showing in actual service.

Little Stories of

SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITORS, No. 7

John H. Kunsky

Detroit will always be favored for two great distinctions: the home of the Flivver and the site of John H. Kunsky's beautiful theatres.

Born in Detroit of Bohemian parents, Mr. Kunsky is another example of the fact that the big Moguls among the exhibitors are those who plugged up the ladder from the humblest of surroundings.

The John H. Kunsky who was once a poor boy is now the John H. Kunsky who controls the Detroit Capitol, one of the five biggest theatres in the United States, the rest of the Kunsky chain including the Madison, Adams, Columbia, Liberty, De Luxe, Alhambra, Strand, Garden, Empress, Royal, and La Salle Theatres.

The managing director of this chain, Mr. George W. Trendle, has had a GOLD SEAL Automatic Ticket Register installed in every theatre in the circuit and he says: "When a new Kunsky theatre is opened, a GOLD SEAL machine will always be out in front. It saves time, it saves money, and our patrons appreciate its snappy service."

When GOLD SEAL equipment has the endorsement of every successful exhibitor, and by successful exhibitor we mean the man who makes money with a 400-seat theatre as well as the man who controls a 400-theatre circuit, you can bank on a GOLD SEAL machine to make money for you. A postcard brings full particulars.

The Editor's Views

IF this be advertising make the most of it. But, to us, the most important event of the week and of many weeks is one that will occur the day these words appear in type—the premiere of "The Covered Wagon."

We are waiting, and hoping, and "hunching" for "The Covered Wagon" to prove all on the screen that it has promised in anticipation.

Not alone because we like to see good pictures, nor alone because we would like everybody's productions to prove big ones—but because of what the conception of "The Covered Wagon" means to the industry in a broader sense.

The story of "The Covered Wagon" is not "just another story"; the picture should prove not "just another picture"; in conception, in type, and on the celluloid it is a human historical document—something not for the day, the month, or the year, but for the ages.

This is the screen's best field—and the task well done will redound to the credit of all within the industry.

This is the screen's most courageous phase, daring to tackle a big IDEA. A rest from the hokum, the trickery, the shallow sleight of hand.

We are waiting, and hoping.

SAM BULLOCK is complaining that the producers in New York seem to have forgotten that Ohio is on the map, and very much and very irritatingly on the censor map.

We don't like to hear this, especially from Sam Bullock, because we know that Sam is not given to idle windjamming, but generally has a basis for his views.

And, as Sam says, "Ohio, the birthplace of the dinged thing," is surely the spot to concentrate censor attentions.

Sam has been on the battleground in Columbus for five weeks and has evidently had his hands full. There has been a Theatre Inspection Bill—with fee for said inspection, of course—a Sunday Opening Bill, and what not.

Next Monday morning finds the censor repeal bill coming up for third reading. Let's see what happens.

ARTHUR BUGG, of the Model Theatre, Midland, Ontario, Canada, is the latest exhibitor to favor us with the exchange of arrows in a local battle with a national distributor who appealed direct to the people of the exhibitor's town to arouse interest in his product.

And it must be stated frankly and emphatically that in Midland, Ontario, the exchange resulted decidedly in favor of the exhibitor.

It is impossible to tell any national manufacturer, whether his product be crackers, automobiles or moving pictures, that he has not the right to send his appeal direct to the consumer where he finds other channels closed.

National magazine advertising has this intention; direct-by-mail work does not differ in principle.

But the distributor who uses this weapon must do so with the full knowledge that the odds are strongly on the side of the exhibitor. Especially so, as in the case of Exhibitor Bugg, where the local theatre is already showing a very strong selection of pictures.

The exhibitor is a local figure, a man in whom his neighbors have confidence. If Mrs. Jones receives a letter regarding motion pictures she is very, very apt to accept the explanation of it given by her authority on motion pictures—Exhibitor Smith. And always certain to side with the Home-town man against the New Yorker.

So the distributor calling this sales weapon into play must consider its possibilities as a bomerang. It is his trump card, and if it loses—he will find it difficult to call for a new deal and a new start to the game.

No sales method that ANTAGONIZES the dealer is sound.

The dealer is here today, tomorrow, and next year; the consumer's mind is yours for only the fleeting moment that your appeal is before him.

Bill Creating Censor Board in Texas Gets Unfavorable Report

A BILL to create a state board of motion picture censors in Texas under the supervision of the Railroad Commission was introduced in the Texas Legislature now in session at Austin, Texas, by Representatives Stender and Greer. Just exactly why the censorship should be under the supervision of men versed in railroad matters was not clear to exhibitors in the Southwest. The bill received a unanimously unfavorable report. It was almost identical with killing the measure.

The measure provided that before any film should be delivered to the consignee it should first be examined by employes of the Railroad Commission, and if additional examiners are needed the bill promises that they may be designated. For the examination fees were provided of $1 per $1,000 worth of film examined. Violations were also provided with a fine of from $25 to $500 and from one month to one year in the penitentiary or with both fine and imprisonment. The board would approve only films "of a moral, educational, amusing and harmless character."

Another bill presented at the present session of the Legislature sought to levy a gross receipts tax upon amusement parks, motion picture shows and soft drink stands. This bill was by Mr. Strader and had a very short life. It was introduced in the morning and referred unfavorably by committee in the afternoon.

Two other bills seeking to increase the taxes on amusements in Texas received favorable reports in the lower house and are on the final action as this is written, the next to the last week of the present session of the Legislature. These two bills propose further taxes upon managerial circuses, carnival shows and theatres both traveling and permanent. Strenuous opposition from exhibitors and legitimate showmen, as well as the carnival men, has been fought against these measures and battle will be fought before action one way or the other is taken on them.

Texas motion picture men had a representative at a recent hearing on the two bills in question and this representative told the Legislature that the number of picture theatres in Texas has decreased from 700 to 400 in 1922 and that many small towns now have no such places of amusement.

Saenger and Richards File Answers to Federal Complaint

ANSWERS to the amended complaint recently issued against Famous Players-Lasky, Realart, Stanley Company, Black, New England Theatres, Inc., Southern Enterprises and Saenger Amusement Company, and others, are beginning to come in to the Federal Trade Commission, the first to be received being those of the Saenger Amusement Company, Inc., and Ernest V. Richards its vice-president and general manager.

The answers are identical, having knowledge of the allegations of the first three paragraphs of the complaint and denying any connection with the things therein charged. It is denied that either respondent has ever entered into any combination with the other respondents or with any other person, firm or corporation to unduly hinder competition in the production, distribution and exhibition of films or to control monopolize or attempt to monopolize the motion picture industry.

The respondents also deny that they ever have any agreement with the other respondents or with any other person, firm or corporation for compelling or controlling the exhibition of motion pictures throughout the country or of compelling and causing exhibitors to buy and exhibit all the films produced or distributed by Famous Players-Lasky or of refusing or compelling such exhibitors to book a substantial number or block of their films before the exhibitors would also book a substantial number or block of their films, the exhibition of all of which would tend to affect the whole or a large portion of their exhibiting time, and close their theatres to the films of producers or distributors who are competitors of Famous Players-Lasky.

The answers ask dismissal of the complaint, the costs and for general and equitable relief.

Bars Use of Catalogues

Trade Commission Says They Can't Be Used to Pay Admissions

Mail order catalogues are not proper payment for admission to moving picture theatres, according to a ruling by the Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., in the case of the Chamber of Commerce of Missoula and the Northwest Theatres Company, of Missoula, Montana.

The commission held that the Northwest Theatres Company, in collusion with and control of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce, accepted from children mail order catalogues as payment for admittance to moving picture shows in a theatre controlled and operated by the theatre company. The catalogues in question were subsequently delivered to respondents and this act, the commission declares, removed from the hands of many of the residents in and around Missoula, Montana, mail order catalogues from which they had been in the habit of ordering goods that materially reduced the possibility of competition for local concerns with the concerns whose catalogues had been so destroyed.

Crandall Organization Works Up Children's Interest in Serials

SELLING a serial to the children, and in that way keeping their patronage for fifteen weeks at a time, is a problem that has just been solved, apparently, by the Crandall organization, Washington, D. C. To the Moving Picture World correspondent it was explained that the Crandall Amusement Company has considerable trouble in getting what is known as a children' matinee.

They realized that they were not getting their percentage of the children's business at their Saturday matinees, and accordingly took the matter up in their managers' conferences to figure out how this situation could be remedied. It was finally decided to try out a plan of adding features that would have a particular appeal to the juvenile trade. It was explained to the Moving Picture World correspondent by Nat Glasser, manager of Crandall's York Theatre, and superintendent of equipment for the Crandall circuit.

"As you know," said Mr. Glasser, "we were formerly opposed to serials. We thought that because our houses are in first-class localities they would not go. However, we decided to try them out with the idea of getting the children interested in them.

Did Extensive Advertising

"Our plan calls for the showing of the serials on Saturday afternoons only. We were very much surprised to note that not only were they followed throughout the time of their exhibition to completion, but greatly appreciated by a large number of adults who accompanied the children.

"In order to sell a serial for the fifteen episodes, and it is really necessary to sell the first one, we figured we must make it as attractive as possible, and we did that in this way. Prior to the first week of the serial we advertised with handbills distributed around the schools, and in addition with slides thrown on the screens of all of our theatres, stating that in addition to the serials we would give hem a feature picture, a good comedy, and some vaudeville entertainment.

"We first started out with a Punch and Judy show. This was a very good added attraction for the kiddies. As a matter of fact, it brought many of the parents, and we received compliments from them for trying to please the children. The result was that the parents were our boosters as well as were the children, and they knew that by sending the children to one of these shows they would be well taken care of, and would not see anything that was objectionable. The man who put on the Punch and Judy show could work two houses in one day, and we would start our serials simultaneously at two houses, following up at the other houses on succeeding Saturdays.

Filled to Capacity

"When we started the first episode we were filled beyond capacity. After that the business held up without the added attraction to continued capacity houses, mostly composed of children. We were very careful in the selection of the serials and the features that were shown on that day, so that they would in no way be objectionable, and that the people might have faith in us and permit the children to continue their patronage.

"On the occasion of the starting of the second serial we gave them a marionette show, and we advertised its coming the same way as we had taken the previous serial and Punch and Judy show. This time we had a much greater attendance than on the occasion of the first serial, which to us, showed that the parents and children were taking quite an interest in what we were trying to do for the neighborhood.

"The expense of putting on these added attractions does not at all compare with the amount of business we are able to do as a result thereof. The feature picture that is shown at the afternoon performance for the children is also shown at night for the adults. It is surprising how much business the children drum up for us. The manager of a house has to ingratiate himself with the children. If he is known as a good fellow in the neighborhood among the children, the latter can do a great deal of good for him. We are doing everything in our neighborhood houses to gain the good will of the children, and Crandall's Theatre is a household word with them."

A Compromise of Censorship Situation Rumored in Albany

DESPITE the fact that one member of the committee before which the censorship hearing was held at Albany, N. Y., last week, has openly stated that the bills will not be reported out of committee and go to a vote, others in a position to know and speak from an authoritative source, declare that the bills will be reported out the latter part of this month and go to a vote. The outcome of no bills thus far introduced is awaited with more general interest than those dealing with the censorship problem.

Along legislative corridors of the State Capitol, talk is heard of a possible compromise in the situation. While it is generally admitted that the bills can be passed in the Senate, there is grave doubt as to the Assembly. It was said a day or so ago that Governor Smith had talked over matters with certain ones from whom he frequently seeks advice. While Governor Smith openly advocates the abolishment of censorship and the wiping out of the Commission, he finds himself confronted with a Republican Assembly.

There is some talk that the present censorship commission may be abolished, and that while censorship must be endured for at least a year more by reason of the Republican Assembly, that the law will be handled or administered by the State Tax Commission. Owing to the fact that the Commission is really a revenue producing body, it could readily come under the direction of the Tax Commission.

Meanwhile, official Albany is awaiting some word from the committee as to whether or not it intends to report the bill out and let it go to a vote.

Censorship Bill Out of Committee

The Walker bill seeking to repeal the present motion picture censorship law in New York State has been reported out of committee on the Senate side, but thus far has been ignored by the Assembly Ways and Means Committee.

The recent hearing was held before a joint legislative committee. In reporting the bill out, the Senate Finance Committee stood 11 to 2, the vote being along strict party lines, Senators Lusk and Hewitt, the Republican members of the committee, voting to kill the repeal measure. The bill is being regarded from a political standpoint only.

The Assembly Ways and Means Committee is not expected to report the bill out. The Democrats have little hope of passing the bill in the Assembly, but in the Senate the Democratic majority will pass the bill. It is generally conceded, however, that the political complexion of the present commission, will undergo a change in the near future.

Sign With Paramount

Mary Astor and Glenn Hunter to Play in Paramount Pictures

Glenn Hunter, whose portrayal of the screen-struck boy in "Merton of the Movies" has been one of the biggest Broadway hits in years, has just signed a five-year contract to star in Paramount Pictures, according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Hunter will be probably the youngest male screen star. It is said that the type of stories, support and production resources put at his disposal by Famous Players determined him to be a Paramount star.

Mr. Hunter's first picture will be "This Side of Paradise," F. Scott Fitzgerald's story of American youth. The novel will be adapted to the screen by Mr. Fitzgerald himself.

Mary Astor will appear in support of Mr. Hunter in his first picture. Miss Astor, whose beauty, youth and unusual ability have caused film critics to predict a brilliant film future for her, has just signed a five-year contract to play in Paramount pictures.

"The engagement of Miss Astor," said Mr. Lasky, "follows a search of several months for just the type of girl we wanted to take leading feminine roles in some of our pictures."

Stuart-Rice Wedding

Miss Doris Carolyn Rice was married to Lawrence Finn Stuart in New York, February 24. Mrs. Stuart is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Bertrand Rice. Mr. Stuart is a member of the Goldwyn exploitation staff. He was formerly connected with the Hulsey circuit in Texas, and is a brother of Herschel Stuart, managing director of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.

Exhibitors Put Up Stiff Fight Against Daylight Saving Bill

HARRISBURG, PA.—(Special)—A delegation of exhibitors from all parts of Pennsylvania on Tuesday, March 13, journeyed to this city to attend a special hearing on a bill now before the Legislature having for its purpose the establishment of the daylight saving schedule. The bill which has caused more than mere passing interest, is now in the hands of the committee on judiciary, before which the hearing was held. The proponents of the bill were made up of bankers, sporting goods manufacturers and church authorities, while the opposition was made up of film men representative of all branches of the business, the theatrical business, farmers and labor leaders who spoke for the union forces of the State.

George Aarons, secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Charles Goodwin, Fred Harrington of Pittsburgh and many others attended the hearing, which developed into a spirited affair. While the opposition was the stiffest ever lined up against the daylight saving movement here, it is not believed that the bill will be killed. Daylight saving, according to those who opposed that schedule, brought a loss of many million dollars not only to show business, but to other industries as well. Daylight saving together with the coal strike last year had the tendency of putting many exhibitors out of business, it was said at the hearing.

READING, PA.—(Special)—Regardless of the status of the State-wide movement for a continuation of the daylight saving program, this city will not change its timepiece. This decision was returned as a result of the municipal elections last November when daylight saving was made a political issue and constituted one of the many local propositions on which local voters were called to vote.

T. Rogers Lyons Tells How to Keep from Paying Music Tax

TAX dogging when the tax is imposed by the supreme power of the State is criminal, but dodging a tax that is imposed by greed and by virtue of the fact that the greedy combine has the power to enforce that tax is the right of all who wish to assert their independence, and who desire to protect their own rights," says T. Rogers Lyons, editor of Musical Times, Lansing, Mich., in an arraignment of the music tax.

"The right to collect royalties by the owner of the copyright has been established by the Supreme Court of the United States, from all those who use copyrighted sheet music at places where an admission is charged, or pay for the entertainment is received," Mr. Lyons says. "Therefore the Music Society has the legal right to do what they are doing in associating for the purpose of making these collections. This society contains about twenty-five music publishing houses.

"Outside of this society there are four times as many music publishers who are not only willing but are anxious to have all the hotels, restaurants, theatres and moving picture houses use all of their music that the players in these places desire, without any royalty or payment whatever.

"The way to enable them to do this lies with the publishers of sheet music who are not members of the Society of Composers and Authors. It is suggested that each publisher who desires to have his productions publicly played to print on all new offerings and rubber stamp on all old ones these words:

COPYRIGHTED 1923
THE SMITH JONES BROWN COMPANY
Performing rights in all places where admission is charged are hereby specifically released.

"This done, it is patent that any orchestra, singer or instrumentalist may use music thus branded just as he has been in the habit of using music with no thought but of the pleasure the rendition of same will be to the hearers, and the certainty there can be no comebacks.

"If twenty publishers adopted the plan here suggested, that in itself would liberate enough 'tax-fee' music to smash the present strangle hold of the society to smithereens. They must hold the theatrical business to live."

Graham's Daughter to Wed

Announcements have been received at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of the forthcoming marriage of Dorothy Cecil Graham, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cecil Graham, of 40 Park Lane, London, to Bernard Morris Greenhill, also of London. The ceremony will be solemnized Wednesday, April 4, at 2:30 o'clock, at St. Margaret's Westminster, following which a reception will be held at Claridge's.

Miss Graham's father is the general foreign representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the managing director of the company's British organizations. Mr. Greenhill is well known in London social and business circles.

Speaks on Censorship

Brady Says Industry Must Work Hard to Kill It

At this week's luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers Peter J. Brady was the principal speaker. Mr. Brady, an influential labor union official and well known in the motion picture industry on account of his friendliness and hearty support in past years, spoke to a large audience. His talk ranged on many matters, the most interesting part to many being what he had to say about censorship.

Says Meeting Poorly Handled

Mr. Brady criticized the meeting at Albany this week before the Legislative Committee, saying it had been very amateurishly handled, but that the other side had been just as badly mismanaged. He said that there was a great deal of work to do if the motion picture industry expected to be successful in its hopes to have the censorship bill repealed; that work would have to be started immediately to carry information and appeals right through the state, particularly to the towns where the legislators make their homes. Unless this is done, he said, the chances are that the censorship bill will remain on the books.

Mr. Brady also described at some length the plans for the new Trade Union Bank, and, judging from the applause, the publicity and advertising men of the motion picture industry will be earnest supporters of the new venture.

No Distribution Change

Schenck Says West Will Be No More Than Producing Center

Joseph M. Schenck, producer of Norma and Constance Talmadge First National releases, who is building up a big producing organization in Hollywood, says frankly that he does not vision Los Angeles as the future centre of motion picture distribution.

The product distributed is not bulky, he points out, hence production has centered in Los Angeles and will always remain there, but distribution will remain centered in New York, he believes. For one thing, the existing machinery is deeply rooted in New York's business and financial life, and the nation's greatest population centers are in the East—the "centers of consumption." Then, too, he believes New York's approval of a screen play adds greatly to that play's value in every other city and town.

New York Success of Great Value

"If we have successful New York premiere, and a long New York run, a picture is a commercial success," he declares, "the mere fact of a New York success is of inestimable value in advertising. At least 500,000 strangers arrive in New York daily—some for business, some for pleasure and some for both. After long or short stays they return to their homes, and if they take word home that a certain film is a New York success, why, that word passes rapidly and assures a long line when the picture reaches the place in which it has had favorable word-of-mouth advertising."

Signs New Contract

Carey Wilson, who has been an associate editor in the Goldwyn scenario department for nearly two years, has signed a new contract by the terms of which he remains with the Goldwyn organization as associate editor for another year. He was made an associate editor at the time June Mathis was engaged as editorial director, and has prepared the continuity for a number of the Goldwyn pictures.

A New Talking-Movie

Lee De Forest Has Invention Which Photographs Sound

Photographing sound was demonstrated to be a practical accomplishment at the Hotel Astor Saturday night, March 14, when Lee De Forest exhibited his invention, the Phono-Film. By this process it is possible for all sound necessary to make motion pictures complete entertainment to be reproduced on the film itself. Human voices and musical accompaniments are recorded.

At a demonstration which Dr. De Forest gave in his studio Tuesday he showed a Spanish dance on the screen in which the orchestral accompaniment seemed to come with uncanny perfection from the screen itself. A piano recital followed in which the movements of the artist's fingers could be seen to correspond minutely with the music. The taking of these films requires an elaborate machine, but the reproducing needs only a small device attached to the ordinary projection machine.

A demonstration for the benefit of the trade press will be held at Dr. De Forest's headquarters, the old Talmadge studios at 318 East 48th street, Monday, at 3 p. m.

1923 Year Book Issued

Kinematograph Puts Advantageous Information in Industry's Hands

The Kinematograph Year Book for 1923 has just been issued, and contains a wealth of information helpful to all lines of the industry. This is the tenth yearly issue of the Year Book and particular pains have been taken to revise and bring up to date the theatre directory and lists of new films that were trade shown or released during the year.

The latter are of real value not only to members of the trade, but also to picture-goers, press contributors and others anxious to learn when any particular subject may be expected at the theatres, the actors appearing in it, the firm by which it is handled, etc. British films are especially indicated. The office of the Year Book is at 85 Long Acre, London, W. C. 2.

Police Chiefs Invited

Asked to Aid in Making Film to Fight Narcotics

Chief of Police Philip T. Smith, of New Haven, Conn., president of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, has dispatched letters and telegrams to the members of his organization inviting them to go to Hollywood and assist in the filming of "The Living Dead," Mrs. Wallace Reid's picture on the narcotic evil.

The action of Chief Smith, who has prepared monographs on the subject and is recognized as an authority, marks the adoption of the film as the official one of this world-wide association in the fight against drugs.

Signs Ethel Shannon

B. P. Schulberg has announced the first of a number of contracts he expects to close securing the exclusive services of actresses to be featured in Preferred Pictures released by the Al Lichtman Corporation. He has signed Ethel Shannon.

The long term agreement giving Preferred Pictures exclusive control of Miss Shannon's screen work is the third step in the formation of a permanent stock company. Kenneth Harlan and Gaston Glass were Schulberg's first acquisitions.

The Work of the Censors

OHIO exhibitors are finding much to cuss and discuss these days in connection with the State Board of Censors. This august body of picture potentates, sitting on the throne at Columbus, in addition to banning films in their entirety, likewise wields a wicked pruning knife on the few films that get by.

According to reports, many of the original films can scarcely be recognized after their operations at the hands of the cinema surgeons. F'rinstance, the changes and eliminations in Gloria Swanson's latest picture cover 16 inches of closely-typewritten, single-spaced typewriter paper.

Certainly "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew" must be a very respectable lady by the time the Ohio film mentors get through. Here is a sample of the changes: "Cut out subtitle, 'Horace Porter, an attorney, to whom victory is more important than the honor of his profession,' and substitute, 'Horace Porter, an attorney, to whom victory at any cost is a virtue.'" In passing "The Mysterious Eyes of the Ku Klux Klan," the censors say: "This film was rejected in its original form on account of its containing propaganda for the Ku Klux Klan. As reconstructed, and with the additional eliminations ordered, the film contains no propaganda either for or against the Klan."

So there you are.

Plans Started to Organize New England Theatre Owners

PRELIMINARY plans for the organization of the New England motion picture owners into a compact unit to combat the so-called machinations of the big producer and distributor interests of the country, were perfected Tuesday afternoon, March 13, at the Copley-Plaza Hotel, Boston. This unit, it is indicated, will become a part of the new organization known as the Motion Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation, the purpose of which was endorsed by the gathering and some of the regional directors were named.

Officers and members of the executive committees of the six New England state units of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, together with other theatre owners, in all representing one hundred and twenty New England motion picture theatres, attended the mass meeting. They greeted with enthusiasm National President Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. A., and William A. True of Hartford, Conn., president of the Connecticut unit of the latter organization, as well as president of the new theatre owners' distributing association, who were the principal speakers. Jacob Lourie of Boston, president of the Massachusetts' unit of the M. P. T. O. A., presided. A luncheon preceded the meeting.

The mass meeting had been called primarily to discuss the affairs in theatre-owner circles which have come into prominence since the Washington convention, particularly as they relate to business methods in vogue in different sections of the country which are believed to imperil the business safety of the independent theatre owner, especially in New England. The plan also was to point out how other independent forces in the industry are prepared for concerted action and to suggest this method as one to be safely followed by the New England theatre owner for his own protection.

President Cohen explained at some length the activities of the national organization since the Washington convention, and discussed minutely the conditions that obtain in the industry in different parts of the country. He charged that certain business methods of leading producing and distributing elements are placing in jeopardy the interests of the independent theatre owner.

President True explained minutely and explicitly the object of the new disturbing organization of theatre owners, and offered it as a ready-to-hand solution of some of the serious problems now facing the New England independent theatre man.

During the discussion on the producer-owned theatre, it was declared that statistics show that such interests represent only about 10 per cent. of the purchasing power of the New England theatres, but that they are so well organized as a minority that they function definitely because of the lack of organization among the individuals who form the remaining 90 per cent. of the theatre purchasing power of the territory.

Following the address a rapid-fire series of questions were answered by both Mr. Cohen and Mr. True, and a plan was outlined for the functioning of the independent interests of New England, whereby a definite organization, organized and operated by and for them, will work along definite lines and co-operate with the independent producers and independent distributors throughout the New England zone. Mr. True was invited to head such a new organization, and took the question under advisement.

Gets O'Reilly Gift

There is a handsome bronze desk set on the desk of Commissioner Gilchrist, head of New York State Tax Commission, occupying nearly one-half of the fourth floor of the State Capitol. The set was presented to Mr. Gilchrist last Tuesday by Charles L. O'Reilly, head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State. Mr. Gilchrist was formerly connected with the Department of Licenses in New York City.

Exhibitors Look for Big Year, Says Grainger Back from Trip

JAMES R. GRAINGER, of Goldwyn Pictures, is home from a ten weeks' trip to that firm's branch exchanges and to the studios in Culver City, Calif., brimming over with enthusiasm at the film outlook in general and as it applies to his firm in particular.

"The coming year is going to be one of the biggest years motion pictures have ever seen," said Mr. Grainger. "The exhibitors are making money and are eager to buy the biggest and best pictures the market affords. They are realizing as never before that the public is shopping for its amusement fare and that it is picking out the films which are unusual and big to patronize rather than the old-style five-reel program film.

"I base my prediction of one of the biggest years in the history of the industry on the following facts: (1) the big feature pictures which the exhibitors are demanding and for which they are willing to pay adequate prices; (2) the big demand for popular novels and plays to picturize; (3) the big demand for leading men and women by the various companies; (4) the increased physical equipment of various producing concerns; (5) in six days Goldwyn has signed 2,084 contracts for showings—with nearly one-sixth of film theatres of the country.

"Goldwyn, for instance, is building two new stages on its lot at Culver City, bringing the total up to nine. Eight pictures were in production when I left the studio with more in the preparatory stages. We will need these new stages for the program in view for the coming season. Eleven directors are now under contract and they will practically all be making pictures at the same time. Other studios have been adding to their facilities.

"The activities at the Goldwyn studios is marvelous. When I left on the return trip to New York the number of persons on the studio payroll was 1,200, an increase of 400 from a few weeks previous to that time."

Brockwell Finds Exhibitors Optimistic Over the Future

FLOYD BROCKELL, manager of distribution of Associated First National, who is on a long tour of inspection, declares he has found producers and exhibitors optimistic wherever he went. He spoke about his trip during his stay in Los Angeles.

"The thing that is making exhibitors feel good about the present and the future of the industry is the fact that they are getting consistently good pictures and the public being satisfied with the high class entertainment now being offered is going to the picture houses more than ever. The coming of the independent producers into the field has been a big boom to the industry because the independent product has been exceptionally good.

"In Los Angeles the studios are humming with activities and the independents form a big proportion of the big work. They are making pictures with stories as a general rule and not pictures with stars. This, of course, excepts producers like Joseph M. Schenck, who has and is producing some of the finest pictures exhibitors have seen and will get with Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge.

"Generally, however, the independent producer is keeping busy the best actors and actresses on the Coast. He is striving first to give the exhibitor a picture with a good story, and second, to back that story up with a cast of names that have merited great popularity with the motion picture-going public. It seems to me that the star system is getting out of date and that we will have in the future only those stars who have real ability.

"This doesn't mean, as I see it in this production center, that there will never be new stars, but it does mean that the new stars that come to the front will have to have real box office merit.

"An indication of the big future business some exhibitors are expecting is seen in the fact that many magnificent picture houses are being erected in many centers.. Certainly these men would not put hundreds of thousands of dollars into new enterprises if they were not assured that the new pictures to be made would give them a profit on their investment. Men who go into the business of building big picture houses learn the facts first and build afterwards.

"Naturally, I have heard most about First National future releases, and I have found exhibitors inquiring interestedly about such pictures as 'Within the law, 'Ashes of Vengeance,' 'Dulcy,' 'Isle of Lost Ships,' 'Trilby,' 'Toby Tyler,' 'Penrod and Sam,' and I found particular interest in the new Carewe picture, 'The Girl from the Golden West.' The stage play and the opera being known everywhere, exhibitors expect this one to have a wide appeal at the box office. Wherever Carewe's first picture, 'Mighty Lak a Rose,' has been shown, it has done well.

"I might say, too, while speaking of First National, that I was well pleased with the optimism and enthusiasm of the men in the field who were naturally as much interested in the future product as were exhibitors with whom I talked."

Mr. Brockell is expected to return to New York shortly.

Hoffman Off to Coast

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of the Truart Film Corporation, as well as directing head of the Tiffany Productions, Inc., producers of the Mae Murray pictures, left for Los Angeles at the beginning of the week.

Mr. Hoffman's journey to the Coast is in connection with several important matters of the Truart. Mr. Hoffman will be gone for two or three weeks.

Prettyman Appointed

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, announced this week the appointment of D. Prettyman as branch sales manager in Salt Lake City, succeeding L. J. Baratte, deceased. Mr. Prettyman is a veteran in the sales end of the industry.

No Action on Love Bills

Measures Affecting Miniature Picture Apparatus Still in Committee.

The bills introduced in the New York State legislature by Senator Love on February 5, relating to miniature picture apparatus and the requirements for such machines, are still in committee and show little signs of being reported out.

The bill introduced on February 27, by Senator Levy, relating to theatrical performances in first class cities on Sunday, is also in committee.

The same is true of Assemblyman Miller's bill, imposing an annual tax on the gross receipts of motion picture theatres and other forms of amusement.

A bill was introduced in the Senate on March 7, relative to a lien on film laboratories.

Re-Elected President

Fred Levy has been re-elected president of the Associated First National Pictures of Kentucky and Tennessee. Other officers elected were Lee Goldberg as secretary and treasurer; Paul Krieger, general manager; Leo F. Keiler of Paducah, vice-president. On the board of directors are John B. Stout of Danville, Mike Switow of Louisville, L. S. Martin of Ashland and I. Libson of Cincinnati. All of these are prominent exhibitors in the two states. Fred Levy, the president, is owner of over thirty theatres and president of Levy Brothers. He is in favor of Louisville as the ideal distribution point for the entire section, as almost all Kentucky and Tennessee theatres are served from Louisville.

Thomas Leaves for Coast

Clark W. Thomas, general manager of the Thomas H. Ince Studios, left for Los Angeles this week after a business trip to New York which lasted almost three months. Before departing Mr. Thomas gave out a statement in which he briefly outlined the plans of the Ince Studios and said:

"We believe that what the public wants right now is the big story for the screen. The so-called 'star system' is a condition of the past. There are only about five really big stars today. The public has shown what it thinks of the 'star system' and the 'live wire' producer, who always has his ear to the ground, is beginning to respond to public demand by turning out the big story, with capable actors in the cast."

Reorganization Complete

Last word information has been received from the executive offices of the Selznick enterprises to the effect that a complete reorganization has just been effected of both the Select and Selznick companies and their subsidiaries, and that a detailed statement will be made public next week which will include the plans of the new organization and its personnel.

Starts Work on Theatre

Construction has begun on a new Loew theatre, to be located at Burnside and Walton Avenues in the Bronx. The theatre, expected to be completed by September of this year, will be devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures. It will seat 3,000 and will cost more than $750,000.

Krock Joins Hays

Arthur Krock, of the Louisville Courier Journal, will join the staff of Will H. Hays on April 1.

American Films Best

Brazilians Prefer Them to All Others

The overwhelming superiority of American films in the Brazil market is strikingly demonstrated in the report of the Brazilian board of censorship for the year 1922, received by John L. Day, South American representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Of a total of 1,341 pictures imported by Brazil during the last year 1,058 were from the United States and the remaining 283 were divided among twelve countries.

Statistics collected by Dr. Roberto Etchebarne, head of the Brazilian police censorship, show that 79 per cent. of the films imported were from the United States. This was an increase of 8 per cent. over the previous year.

"From the viewpoint of morality," says Dr. Etchebarne in discussing the commission's work, "the American pictures hold first place in Brazil. This fact, together with their wonderful sets, directing, artists and photography, justifies their universal preference throughout the country.

Planning for Export

Germans Making Films With International Appeal

German producers have developed the educational branch of the industry to a considerable point, according to a report received at the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., from William E. Daugherty, assistant trade commissioner at Berlin, and they are hoping to find increasing popularity in export markets.

Natural sciences, technical subjects, as well as travel, play and sport, have been found especially fitting for filming. Mathematical subjects have also been filmed, and one of the interesting accomplishments in this direction, the report states, is a motion picture attempting to explain the very complicated and difficult Einstein theory of relativity. Another notable film of this type, now being shown in Berlin, pictures Steinach's process of rejuvenation.

Trowbridge Returns

Carroll S. Trowbridge, general manager of Allied Artists, Inc., Ltd., with headquarters in London, has just returned to New York City after nine months abroad. Mr. Trowbridge came to this country for business conferences with Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation. During Mr. Trowbridge's stay abroad he travelled extensively throughout the whole United Kingdom, in the chief cities of which Allied Artists has branch offices.

Pathe to Handle Ben Turpin and Mack Sennett Comedies

IN the signing of a contract between Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Mack Sennett, for the release of thirteen two-reel Mack Sennett comedies during the year, and the release of six or eight Ben Turpin two-reel comedies, exhibitors will see the uniting of powerful forces placing at their disposal on one program practically all of the market's best comedy.

As noted during the last few weeks in special announcements by Pathe, Hal Roach, the producer of the Harold Lloyd comedies, had also signed with Pathe to release thirteen two-reel "Our Gang" Comedies, thirteen two-reel Will Rogers' Comedies, and thirteen two-reel "Snub" Pollard comedies, per year.

In totalling up both the Sennett and Roach product, Pathe will release no less than 60 two-reel comedies for the year, or more than one a week. This line-up is in addition to the Harold Lloyd special comedies and the fifty-two Hal Roach one-reel comedies alnately featuring Paul Parrott and Stan Laurel, which Pathe also releases.

In conjunction with the signing of these contracts, Elmer Pearson, Pathe's general manager, stated, Pathe will not only have the greatest number and greatest variety of comedies calling for an investment of money and production facilities rivaling that of any feature distribution unit, but that with this array of laugh-provoking releases, a special day in every locality in the land, known as Pathecomedy Day, will become a reality and a fact. After weeks of conferences and negotiations, the Mack Sennet contract was finally closed through the offices of Ephriam Asher, Mack Sennett's personal New York representative.

The Sennett contract, like the Roach agreement, specifically calls for the investment of considerably greater production costs than Sennett ever before had at his disposal. It is the intention of both the distributor and the producer to invest these comedies with more lavish settings and to concentrate on more distinctive production values and novelty innovations.

The Hal Roach contracts were all delivered this week to the Pathe home office by C. H. Roach, father of Hal E. Roach, and were the culmination of negotiations and arrangements made during Hal Roach's recent visit to New York.

Commenting further on this line-up, Mr. Pearson said: "It has been our opinion and that of many exhibitors who have been consulted, that the comedy portion of the motion picture entertainment, as compared to development in dramatic fields, has been seriously neglected during the last two or three years by the entire industry. In practically every locality, the public is being surfeited by feature entertainment to the point of saturation, and that if real good comedies in sufficient quantity were available from a dependable source, exhibitors would establish a comedy and short subject program change at least once every week. This weekly change will not only attract record-breaking attendances, but will increase the box office receipts on the dramatic change nights because the public of any locality will go to the theatres only so many times per week for a strictly bill of fare.

"We believe with the tremendous strength of the Pathe comedies now on our program, headed by the Harold Lloyd specials, together with Pathe's avowed purpose of securing any other big comedy stars or producers that may develop in the future, that the box office receipts of the nation will be increased to a marked degree.

"All the comedies enumerated above, are being produced with the object in mind that each and everyone of them is to be the outstanding feature of each program upon which they appear. Upon this foundation it is Pathe's idea, and that of reputable showmen, of establishing a Pathecomedy day which is especially logical and feasible since the other eight or ten Pathe weekly releases fit in so admirably with this plan.

"All students of the industry will see that there was an actual market opening for just this sort of a plan and that it will increase national box office gross by many millions, benefiting all and injuring none."

The first Ben Turpin to be released by Pathe in two reels will be "Pitfalls of a Great City"; and the first Mack Sennet comedy will be called "Domestic Comedy."

First National Renews Contract with Ince for Series of Specials

JOINT announcement has been made by Thomas H. Ince and Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of the consummation of a contract for distribution of a new series of Thomas H. Ince productions by First National. The contract closes a series of negotiations covering a period of several weeks during which there have been many conflicting rumors about the future distribution of Thomas H. Ince pictures.

The contract means a continuation of the relations between Mr. Ince and First National, for First National is distributing the present season's productions made by Mr. Ince. Mr. Ince's affiliation with First National began in a contract which was closed in August of 1921 and was renewed in August of 1922.

Like the existing contract the newly negotiated arrangement is a series contract and covers a definite number of pictures, said to be either six or four. The first release will be in September of 1923. There are two more Ince productions on the present release schedule of First National, "A Man of Action" and "The Sunshine Trail," both to be released before June.

Ince's production schedule for the forthcoming year calls for production specials only, a policy which has been in force during the last two years. Work already has been started on "Her Reputation," in which May McAvoy has the leading role and another big special will be "Wives Who Fail." Talbot Mundy, the noted British writer, has been engaged by Mr. Ince and has just finished "The Devil's Own," in collaboration with Bradley King of the Ince scenario staff. He now is at work on a second novel which will be adapted for the screen.

The Ince specials now scheduled for First National release are "The Hottentot," "Bell Boy 13," "Skin Deep," "What a Wife Learned," "A Man of Action," "The Sunshine Trail," and "Scars of Jealousy."

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

More Kansas City Banditry; Legislative Victories Won

The Newman Theatre, a downtown house of Kansas City, was robbed by a lone bandit about 10:30 o'clock the night of March 4. The bandit entered the business office of the theatre and, holding Milton Feld, manager, and four other persons at bay, forced Gus S. Eyssell, treasurer, to carry $3,534 in cash from the theatre.

Eyssell was forced to walk a block through the busiest section of the downtown district until the young robber could find a taxi. The two then rode to a suburban business center, where the bandit treated the treasurer to a soda. The bandit then escaped in the cab, the driver having been ordered to wait. The next day the satchel in which Eyssell had carried the money was found near the Union Station, which led the police to believe that the hold-up man had left town.

The bill providing for a 6 per cent tax upon the box-office receipts of all theatres in Kansas has been successfully killed. The money collected in this way was to be applied to the school fund. The State affairs Committee succeeded in killing the Kansas Sunday closing bill and the bill which would have made it necessary for children less than 18 to produce a written permit from their parents or guardian to attend the theatres at night. Every effort was made to kill the new tax bill and with the efforts of several men of importance it was successfully shoved aside.

A committee of exhibitors received a hearing on the bill before the House Committee and also before the Joint House and Senate Committee. Tom Brown, Leavenworth, Kans., made a speech in rebuttal. This speech had a great deal of weight and was a fine talk, according to those present.

"Had such a bill been passed," said R. G. Liggett, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, "it would have meant that many exhibitors would be forced to go out of business. There was no justification whatsoever for such a tax upon the theatres."

Work will start soon on the new first-run suburban theatre at Fortieth and Main streets, Kansas City. The theatre will be ready for occupancy by October if plans of the Pratt-Thompson Construction Company are carried out. The new house will be known as the Rockhill Theatre and will seat more than 1,500 persons.

Frank Kemp is the president of the new company which will control the theatre, but the management will be given over to J. C. Hartman, a former Oklahoma exhibitor. Mr. Hartman has operated theatres in Newkirk, Oklahoma City and Blackwell and recently severed his connection with the Grand Theatre of Kansas City.

About $700,000 will be spent on the theatre and a six-story hotel to be built on the adjoining property. Plans of the theatre call for a balcony and a standard stage. The site of this theatre is one block from the Warwick Theatre, one of Kansas City's largest suburban houses at the present time.

Mrs. Gertrude Sawtell, new chairman of the Kansas State Board of Motion Picture Review, assumed her duties last week. Mrs. Sawtell arrived in Kansas City, Kans., Friday from Florida and went to Topeka to confer with Governor Davis, who appointed her. She replaces Dwight Thacher Harris, whose resignation as chairman took effect March 1.

The new $150,000 Westport Theatre, to be erected this spring at Archibald street and Broadway, Kansas City, will seat 1,800 persons. It will have wide upholstered chairs with plenty of room to allow ingress and egress to the seats in all the rows, without causing patrons to get up. The theatre will be in one of the residence sections of the city.

There will be a balcony seating 700 people and the stage will be exceptionally large. The exterior will be of ornamental terra cotta, with tapestry brick. Other features will be a large cooling and ventilating system, harmonious interior decorations, a unique lighting system for both inside and outside the building.

The theatre will be financed and built by the Capital Finance Corporation, Syracuse, N. Y., under the personal supervision of Frank P. McClure, a local theatre builder and promoter, who has had twenty-six years' experience as a builder. The owner of the theatre is the Amusement Holding Corporation, a Missouri corporation capitalized at $250,000 in paid-up stock.

Rodolph Valentino will make his first appearance in person in Kansas City at Convention Hall Tuesday night, March 20. Assisted by his wife, Winifred Hudnut, the screen star will be seen in several of his famous dances, for which the music will be provided by his own orchestra. The entertainment will consist of dancing. Holders of box seats and reserved seat tickets will be given the privilege of the dancing floor before and after the appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Valentino.

Chalk Beeson, manager of the Beeson Theatre, Dodge City, Kans., has changed the policy of his house and is booking twenty-two super-specials for March and April. The Beeson Theatre was erected as a monument to the memory of Mr. Beeson's father, who was a pioneer in Dodge City soon after its establishment.

W. H. Weber, who has the Echo Theatre, Great Bend, Kan., dropped into the city the other day and looked over some of the big pictures.

John Stacey, of the Leeton Theatre, Leeton, Mo., has booked fifty-two Universal attractions and fifty-two Century comedies.

B. C. Harrison, of Waldron, Kans., is making preparations to reopen the Opera House in that town. He will have two programs a week, using Universal service exclusively. The population of Waldron is 200, and the seating capacity of the theatre is 150.

After returning home from a business trip to Kansas City, S. H. Harvey, who has the Colonial Theatre at Pittsburg, Kans., found that the doorkeeper of his theatre was missing, also $650 of the theatre's money.

B. Mills, of the Auditorium Theatre at Smithville, Mo., was in town last week.

The Orpheum Theatre at Parsons, Kans., is closed for a brief period because of labor trouble.

S. F. Meade, of the Meade Theatre in Kingman, Kans., was going the round of the exchanges last week.

S. E. Wilhoit, manager of the Princess Theatre at Springfield, Mo., announced on his last visit to Kansas City that the Jefferson Theatre, recently leased by him, will be opened about June 1.

Horace M. Thomas, recently made directing manager of A. H. Blank Theatres in Iowa and Nebraska, was at one time manager of the Jefferson Theatre in Springfield, Mo. He was also advertising manager for A. D. Flinton, of the old Kansas City Feature Film Company, and more recently he was managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky theatres in Canada.

F. A. Robinson, who recently opened a new theatre at La Harpe, Kans., has named his house "The Jewel."

George Buckner, of the Emerald Theatre at Buckner, Mo., drove into the city last week.

E. M. Boylston, manager of the Victoria Theatre at Hiawatha, Kans., was around the city last week, booking some attractions for his theatre, which is controlled by the Hostettler interests. Mr. Boylston says that one of his best advertising stunts is a seven-foot banner tacked on four delivery wagons which are driven in all parts of the town during the day.

Fred Thompson, a realtor of Kansas City, has purchased the Strand Theatre, a suburban house here.

William P. Cuff, owner of the Strand Theatre at Chillicothe, Mo., has remodeled his theatre lobby and constructed a shop in the lobby. Candies, cigars and popcorn are on sale. The annual election is near and once again the question of Sunday closing will come up. It is to be voted on by the people, but it is thought they will be in favor of Sunday shows, for the attendance has been good on that day for considerable time.

C. R. Wilson, whose Lyric Theatre at Liberty, Mo., was completely destroyed by fire recently, is giving shows in a storeroom of the town until arrangements can be made for a new Lyric Theatre. It is hoped that construction will begin early this spring.

The Main Street Theatre, this city, has booked the six new Baby Peggy comedies and opened with "The Kid Reporter."

Texas

J. J. Hegman, owner of the Queen Theatre, Austin, Texas, was gloriously successful in fighting an old blue law recently. Mr. Hegman was arrested while operating his theatre on Sunday. He asked for a trial before a jury. The jury deliberated only ten minutes and returned a vote acquitting him. Previously, however, Mr. Hegman had filed complaint against several drug store owners alleging that they sold cigars in violation of the law.

This contention formed the basis of Mr. Hegman's defense in the trial. He declared that enforcement of the Sunday law against the theatre owner was discriminatory in that the law has for many years not been enforced against cigar stores and other establishments named in the law. It was contended that its non-enforcement had rendered it obsolete.

In reply, the county attorney cited the outcome of a provision clause against Mr. Hegman in which the Austin theatre owner was found guilty of violating the law by showing on Sunday. The clause in question was appealed and later affirmed in a majority of offenses of the Court of Criminal Appeals, with Chief Justice W. L. Davidson dissenting. Following the verdict the county's attorney announced that the complaints filed against the drug store owners would be withdrawn, but that the verdict of the jury in no way precluded future complaints against Mr. Hegman. The county's attorney stated, however, that such complaints hereafter would have to be filed in the County Court instead of a justice's court.

Recent incorporations in the Southwest include: R-T Amusement Company, of San Antonio, incorporators, M. Delgado, J. Farro and S. Guiterrez; Lawton Amusement Company, Lawton, Okla., by H. After twenty-three years of service the old Dallas Opera House in Dallas, Texas, is being razed to make way for a modern structure. The building was erected at a cost of $50,000 in 1900. It served as an opera house for years and later was used by the Majestic Theatre. Later still it was known as the Capitol Theatre, with stock attractions.

During the recent visit of Henry B. Walthall, who played the Majestic Theatre, it developed that Mr. Walthall was right among home folks. His brother, Wallace W. Walthall, was at one time owner of the Southwestern Film Corporation here, and now is in Oklahoma City as manager of a film exchange.

W. F. Sonneman has bought the two-story building at 405 Austin street, occupied by him for a number of years as a picture theatre. The property cost $40,000.

Only fourteen films were condemned out of 194 reviewed by Mrs. Ethel Boyce, amusement censor of Dallas, in 1922, and a total of 183 eliminations were made.

The Alhambra Theatres Company of Tulsa, Okla., with a capital stock of $50,000, has been incorporated by C. Kubatsky, E. J. Smith and J. B. McAnally, all of Tulsa.

Laurence T. Lester Leases Charlotte, S. C., Theatre

Laurence T. Lester, well known theatre owner of Columbia, S. C., surprised the industry of the state last week with the announcement that he had secured the Strand Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., and will open vaudeville and pictures there on April 2. The Strand was built for Universal four years ago and several attempts to operate it as a first run Universal house had little success financially. Finally it was closed and has remained closed for the past six months. Lester, it is understood, has secured a long time lease, with privilege of purchasing. The Academy, operated by Southern Enterprises here as a Keith vaudeville house, was burned last January.

M. F. Schnibben, of the Opera House, Florence, S. C., is showering condolences upon himself upon the loss of his publicity man, Jack Marcus, who has joined the Rockingham Theatre Company in a similar capacity. Marcus is a former legitimate performer, but for the past several years has been connected with Schnibben. He now becomes right hand man to M. H. French, owner of the Garden theatres in Bennettsville, S. C., and Rockingham, N. C., in the capacity of managing director.

H. G. Campbell, banker, of Belten, S. C., visited the exchanges the past week. He operates the Pastime Theatre in this town as a side line.

Aronson & Browne, Raleigh, N. C., announce that they will spend a nice wad of money on their Almo Theatre during the spring. A balcony will be added, greatly enlarging the seating capacity.

William C. McIntyre, one of the best known theatre owners in North Carolina, will close his Rose and Victory theatres at Burlington, N. C., within the near future for extensive alterations and improvements. The seating capacity of the Rose will be largely increased.

Greenville, N. C., is to have a new theatre, to be called the Trio. The new Carolina Theatre at Pinehurst, replacing the old one of the same name, opened on February 26.

The New Capitol, Asheboro, N. C., will be opened in the near future by J. W. Stone.

F. M. Schiller, of Wilmington, N. C., a brother to E. A. Schiller, has received postcards from Mr. Loew's personal representative bearing a Florida postmark and attesting to the fact that the fishin's fine down that way. It is Colonel Schiller's first vacation in a long time.

It is announced that either musical comedy stock or vaudeville will replace the picture program at the Howard-Wells Royal Theatre, Wilmington, N. C., this change to become effective April 2.

Saluda, N. C., one of the most popular summer resort places of the Blue Ridge, will have a new theatre, the Princess, ready for opening when next summer's tourists begin to come in.

The owners of the Rex Theatre were unable to go through with the deal made in January whereby Fred E. Johnson, for six years manager of the Court Theatre in Wheeling, W. Va., was to assume the management of the Rex. Matters were in some manner so complicated that it was impossible for Mr. Johnson to get possession of the theatre even after the arrangements had been completed. A law suit was threatened, but a settlement was made with Mr. Johnson that was entirely satisfactory.

George L. Zeppos continues as manager of the Rex and Mr. Johnson for the next six weeks will devote his time to staging a mammoth three-ring circus and industrial exposition in conjunction with Samuel McCracken on the State Fair Grounds under the auspices of the Kiwanis Club. The money made by this big affair will be turned over to charity.

Southeast Highly Optimistic Over Prospects for the Year

Many theatres in small towns throughout this territory which have been closed through the crucial conditions of the past twelve months give promise of again coming to life within the near future, denoting a spirit of optimism in the outlook for the future that is indeed flattering. Coupled with this, the fact that more new theatres have been opened within the past few months than in any similar period of recent years, and the industry of Atlanta looks with extreme optimism upon the future months of 1923.

R. J. Brack, it is announced, will reopen the Victory at Midville, Ga., after extensive alterations. Howard McWhorter has leased the Strand at Madison, Ga., and will keep open six days a week. Z. D. Clary has reopened the Amusu at Lincolnton and James Patterson will reopen the Palace, Augusta, which has been closed since early in the winter. P. G. Rossee has reopened the Adele at Eatonton, Ga., after completely remodeling the building, and has one of the best small-town theatres in the state.

The Lyric, Atlanta's Keith vaudeville house, will hereafter run first run feature pictures in connection with the stage attractions. Formerly only a couple of short subjects were used.

Willard Patterson's Metropolitan cornered the big business of Atlanta when he ran Chaplin's "The Pilgrim" in connection with Anita Stewart's "Rose o' the Sea." Hundreds were held behind the ropes all week and a very attractive special presentation was given the Chaplin film.

The Imperial, Augusta, Ga., has put in Keith vaudeville for half the week, dividing the time with pictures.

Col. R. J. Edenfield, of the Dreamland, Augusta, Ga., is confined to his bed with influenza.

Announcements are out for the forthcoming marriage of Fred Hersey, of the Grand Theatre, Waynesboro, Ga., to take place the latter part of March.

C. A. Crute has taken over the Lyric, Huntsville, Ala., from Southern Enterprises.

Paramount Sued in St. Louis; New Booking Combine Planned

Suit was filed in the St. Louis Circuit Court March 10 by William Goldman against Famous Players Missouri Corporation to obtain delivery of the Kings Theatre, Kingshighway, near Delmar boulevard, which Goldman contracted to purchase for $116,000. In his petition he states that the defendant corporation on March 5 notified him that it had cancelled the agreement entered into February 12 for the sale of the Kings.

Under the terms of the agreement Goldman was to pay $5,000 cash on consummation of deal, $15,000 in three annual payments and assume a mortgage for $96,000 He states when notified the agreement was off he offered to submit a new bond and made other overtures to defendant, all of which were rejected.

Goldman had planned to open Kings on Easter Sunday. He also has had plans drawn for a $1,000,000 picture palace at Grand boulevard and Morgan street. It will open about September 1.

The storm clouds are gathering in St. Louis and the weather prophets say the town is in for real fireworks in the very near future. Recently William Goldman announced plans for a new house at Grand and Morgan, just across an alley from the Grand Central owned by Skouras Brothers. Now it has become known that negotiations have proceeded almost to the point of consummation for a booking arrangement between the owners of about forty theatres situated in various sections of the city. This move is designed to checkmate the growing strength of the St. Louis Amusement Company, which is dominated by Skouras Brothers.

Effective March 1, the St. Louis Amusement Company took over the North Grand, owned by Ferd Warner, under a ten-year lease, the North Grand airdome and the Zelphia airdome, also owned by Warner, and is said to be angling for other neighborhood houses.

It is said that if the booking deal is put over each house would maintain its individual identity, merely getting films through the booking combination, paying a fixed fee for the service. Gossip also has it that Skouras Brothers plan to erect a much larger theatre on the Grand Central site, but nothing official on that subject can be obtained. The tipsters say that sandwiched in between the Missouri and Goldman's new house the limited seating capacity of the Grand Central would prove a serious handicap in an old-fashioned knock-down and drag-out first-run battle.

The Famous Players Missouri Corporation has settled the suit filed against it by Fred Wehrenberg by paying him $5,000. The litigation grew out of the deal entered into in 1919 for the Cherokee Theatre owned by Wehrenberg. When the Famous Players Missouri Corporation was formed it took over the picture theatres controlled by Harry Koplar and William Goldman and planned to include the Cherokee in the deal. For a brief period the receipts of the Cherokee were turned into the Famous Players' treasury and later Wehrenberg filed suit for the money, claiming he had not surrendered legal possession of his house.

Joseph Mogler, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis and Eastern Missouri, has announced his organization members have agreed to designate each Friday evening as "Family Night" and to hold special Saturday morning shows for school children. On those days only, pictures approved by the St. Louis Council on Motion Pictures, an organization of club women headed by Mr. Ira L. Bretsfelder, will be shown. A board of twelve women plans to review all current releases, approving those films they deem of high moral or artistic value. The national body has already approved 1,000 pictures.

Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis and Eastern Missouri will gather in St. Louis on March 27 to perfect a permanent organization and to elect delegates and alternates to the convention of the national body. Recently the national organization granted two separate franchises to Missouri exhibitors, one for the eastern half and the other for the western. Joseph Mogler, who was president of the St. Louis group, has been acting president of the new body. Permanent officers will be elected on March 27. The meeting will probably be held at the St. Louis Elks' Club.

A. C. Norwein has sold his Opera House, Bonne Terre, Mo., to the Grant Amusement Company.

When an automobile owned and driven by Fred A. Bengston, Davenport, Ia., druggist, plunged over an embankment near Moline, Ill., on March 9, Bengston received fatal injuries and Ben Cornwell, St. Louis contractor, was seriously injured. Cornwell recently constructed the Leclaire Theatre, Moline, Ill., for his brother, Fred L. Cornwell, who also owns the Delmonte Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.

Jimmy Clayton, owner of the Opera House, West Frankfort, Ill., while in St. Louis on March 8 was called home because of the sudden death of his brother.

F. S. Russell, manager of the Yale Theatre, Macon, Mo., and Wallace Akin, manageer of the Yale Theatre, Anna, Ill., attended a conference of Illmo Amusement Company officials in St. Louis on March 9. The company is said to plan taking over several other houses shortly.

And now the movies are blamed for truancy of school children. James K. Ewing, sergeant of the truant officers in East St. Louis, has instructed his men to keep a special watch on the picture houses, claiming that he has found that they are favorite haunts of kids playing "hookey" from school.

All house records were shattered by "The Flirt" at the Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis, the week of March 3. It was held over for another week. The official attendance was placed at 31,850 for the opening week.

George Beban and company opened their third run at the Delmonte Theatre for this season on March 10. This is said to set a record for St. Louis, no other attraction ever having repeated at the same house twice within a year.

The St. Louis Zoological Society, the Parent-Teachers' Association of St. Louis and the St. Louis Woman's Chamber of Commerce helped boost the showing of Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" at the William Fox Liberty Theatre the week of March 3. Harry Greenman, manager of the Theatre, and Harry Strickland, American Releasing manager, co-operated on the hookup.

Exhibitors seen along Picture Row during the week were: Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Lilly of Hannibal, Mo.; Mrs. Hurley Gould, Lawrenceville, Ill.; Jimmy Clayton of West Frankfort, Ill.; S. E. Pertle of Jerseyville, Ill.; George Newsum of Mount Vernon, Ill.; O. W. McCutcheon of Sikeston, Mo.; Tom Reed of Duquoin, Ill.; Elmer Brient of Centralia, Ill.; Mrs. A. R. Richard, Witt, Ill.; and Bob Cluster of Johnston City.

Kansas City Theatres Endangered

Enforced closing of some of Kansas City's large picture and continuous vaudeville theatres, and a raise in admission prices for those which might remain open, loomed large in the minds of theatre owners and managers when word came from Jefferson City that a legislative blow had been struck at the "interchanging seat" system that is used in all the large cities of the country. The house criminal jurisprudence committee reported favorably on the bill which provides a maximum fine of $500 for any theatre owner in Kansas City or St. Louis who sells more seats than the actual seating capacity of the house.

The bill was drawn and introduced by Representative O'Brien of St. Louis. Representative Sidney Rollings, chairman of the committee, said there was no opposition to the measure. Theatre men say they will turn their efforts toward trying to defeat passage of the measure, or, as a last resort, obtaining the Governor's veto.

The bill would, if it becomes law, affect almost every picture theatre in Kansas City. Only the few houses selling reserved seats, with one performance in the afternoon and one at night, or only one at night, would escape the measure's provisions.

Baltimore

Three men were each fined $6.45 in the Northwestern Police Court, Baltimore, Md., when brought before Magistrate Larkins on March 13 because they were alleged to have made noisy criticisms in Schanze's Theatre of the show.

A robbery took place at the Forest Park Theatre, Forest Park, Baltimore, on Friday night and $138.65, the receipts at the theatre for the night, was stolen, according to Edward Alexander, manager. A severed little finger was found on the steps in the rear of the playhouse and on the iron doors over the cellarway blood was found. The police are holding a man with a severed little finger who claims the accident occurred while he was handling lumber.

Preparations are now under way by Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Whitehurst Theatrical Enterprises, operating the Century Theatre, to hold a concert on Easter Sunday night at that playhouse, when a full symphony orchestra of fifty pieces will play selections under the direction of Frank Rehsen, musical director.

A large picture theatre is to be included in the large Community Building which will take in the whole block bounded by North avenue, Maryland avenue, Charles street and Twentieth street, according to the latest report. The sum of $3,000,000 is involved in the project, it is said, and bachelor apartments, a large, glass-enclosed market and stores will be included in the plans. It is intended to present stage plays or big pictures that are road shows.

Thirty-six Allen Theatres in Canada Offered for Sale

Thirty-six picture theatres, comprising the assets of the Allen Theatres, Ltd., Toronto, Ontario, are being offered for unreserved sale by G. T. Clarkson, liquidator of the Allen Theatre Company, according to an official announcement by the assignee. The liabilities to be met are approximately $1,250,000. It is mentioned by Mr. Clarkson that the common stock of the Allen Theatres is offered in the transaction and thus the controlling interest in the various houses will pass to new hands.

Announcement of the offer to sell the Allen houses, which are scattered over the Dominion from Montreal to Vancouver, occasioned some surprise because it had been felt that the Allen enterprise would be able to pull through its present predicament and that the chain of houses would be saved practically intact as an Allen organization. This belief was heightened by the decision of the majority creditors of the Allen company to give an extension of time for the settlement of claims. This was done last fall and since then there had been no report that subsequent developments had been disappointing.

Mr. Clarkson is of the opinion that the assets will be absorbed within six weeks' time, and the transaction, it is stated, will probably not affect or disturb the operation of the thirty-six theatres, whether they are bought en bloc or individually.

An offer was made for the asserts of the Allen Theatres last fall by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, through N. L. Nathanson, Toronto, managing director. In fact, Mr. Nathanson made three distinct offers and then withdrew them. There is no indication that the Famous Players Canadian Corporation will now make a fourth offer of purchase.

During the past few months members of the Allen family, apart from Jule and J. J. Allen, who had been the official heads of Allen Theatres, had acquired a number of picture theatres throughout Canada, but whether this move indicated a plan on the part of the Allens to build up another theatre circuit in Canada or not is a moot question.

Semi-official announcement is made in Canada that Goldwyn has taken over the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., an Allen enterprise with headquarters in Toronto and branch offices in five other cities of the Dominion. Famous Players Film Service is one of the oldest exchange organizations in the country. Goldwyn is one of the large creditors of the Allen Theatres, Ltd., it is understood, and the theatre chain with which the Famous Players Film Service is related, having made an assignment, the exchange was taken over by Goldwyn, it is said.

Another exchange that is directly concerned in the Allen Theatres assignment is Associated First National Exhibitors, from whom the Allens had secured franchises for practically all of the Allen houses.

For some little time the Allens were also associated with Educational in the distribution of Educational releases throughout Canada. Educational is now established independently in the Dominion as the Canadian Educational Films, Ltd., with head office in Toronto and other offices in Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

Since January 1 the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors has placed the ban on six German-made features and their presentation in any theatre in the Province of Ontario is forbidden forever. Two German productions were condemned in each of the three months of 1923 thus passed, the latest picture to be rejected being "Mad Love," starring Pola Negri. This feature was imported into Canada by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation and the company was ordered by the Ontario censors to make certain changes in the picture. While this was being done, the censors received information, it is said, that the picture was of German origin, whereupon the whole production was immediately condemned.

Some months ago the Ontario Board did pass "The Loves of Pharaoh," but, according to Major A. S. Hamilton, chairman of the Ontario Board of Censors, word was given that this feature had been financed by people in the United States and that performers had been sent from America to Germany for the making of the production. "We may have made a mistake in permitting that play," he said, "but so far as I am able to manage it, there will not be any German pictures shown in Ontario."

General regret has been expressed in picture circles of Canada at the departure of H. M. Thomas, general director of theatres for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto, to rejoin the A. H. Blank Theatrical Enterprises, Des Moines, Iowa. During the past four years, representing the period during which Mr. Thomas was identified with the Canadian company, he had travelled from coast to coast in order to inspect the theatres of the Famous Players' chain and also to serve as a theatre doctor for those requiring attention.

He devoted much of his attention to the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, where he officiated as the resident manager when not on the road. It was during his stay in Montreal that he married Miss Leila Auger, the opera singer, who had been appearing in many prologues, opera scenes and other musical specialties in Montreal and Toronto theatres of the F. P. organization. Early last fall Mr. and Mrs. Thomas went to Winnipeg, Manitoba, where he took charge of the Capitol Theatre temporarily. Mrs. Thomas also sang in that city and both she and her husband became immediately popular.

Mr. Thomas went to Toronto from Omaha, Neb., after Will C. Elliott, manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, had returned to Michigan. The organizing ability of Mr. Thomas was found to be extremely valuable during the several years in which the Famous Players Canadian Corporation was carrying out a very large theatre building campaign. Mr. Thomas himself opened a number of large theatres and made the appointments for others.

Unusual interest has been aroused in Canada by the taking over of the Temple Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, by the Associated First National. Announcement is made from the Canadian headquarters of First National of Toronto that the arrangement is only temporary and that the step was taken to put into practice a number of theatre presentation plans. The latter have been eminently successful, it is pointed out, and reference is made to a statement of box office receipts for several weeks. During the week previous to the establishment of the First National plans, the receipts were $325. "The Dangerous Age" was then shown for one week with special exploitation and the receipts jumped to $942.42. "Brawn of the North" followed for a week and the receipts grew to $1,195.56. Further pictures to be presented include "Sonny," "Minnie," "Omar the Tentmaker" and "Lorna Doone."

P. R. Vincent, of Montreal, auditor for Trans-Canada Theatre, Montreal, has been appointed manager of the Grand, Toronto, which was for years the leading theatre of the chain of houses operated in Ontario by A. J. Small, the missing theatrical magnate.

I. H. Allen, nephew of Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, prominent throughout picture circles in Canada, has acquired the Globe Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., one of the old substantial house of that city.

C. Walker is reopening the Bijou Dream Theatre at Digby, N. S., this house having been closed since last summer. Messrs. Jordan and Fisher have taken over the Monarch Theatre at McAdam, N. S. H. Garden was the former manager of ths house.

F. B. Armour, Middleton, N. S., owner of a famous fox farm, has built and opened the Armdale Theatre at Middleton as a public enterprise fro the town in which he resides. It was constructed at a cost of $20,000.

HOW ONE CLEVER SHOWMAN EXPLOITED FIRST NATIONAL'S "THE MASQUERADER"

John J. O'Neil Appointed House Manager of Eastman

John J. O'Neil, former manager of Fay's Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., has been appointed house manager of the Eastman Theatre, succeeding Arthur J. Amm, who has resigned to accept a position with Harold B. Franklin in the Paramount theatre department. Mr. O'Neil is well known in Kodak Town theatre circles, having been manager of several theatres, including the Gordon in Clinton avenue north and the old Avon.

Arthur J. Amm is to be connected with Southern Theatrical Enterprises, controlled by Paramount. He will have his headquarters in one of the large Southern cities.

Arthur P. Kelly, formerly secretary of the Rochester Ad Club, has been appointed publicity director of the Eastman Theatre, succeeding Fred Harris, who will devote all his time to the Community Chest publicity. It is understood that the Eastman publicity is to be broadened. Mr. Kelly has been with the ad club for three years and unusually active in the organization's work.

"Robin Hood" attracted capacity business to the Eastman Theatre all last week, where the picture was given a wonderful music setting by the combined forces of the Eastman musical organization.

Speculation concerning possible changes in the policy of the Temple Theatre as a result of its leasing by the Keith interests, which takes it out of the control of James H. Moore, has become more and more lively in theatrical circles as reports have come in of radical changes that the Keith officials have made in the conduct of houses in other cities. Whether "Micky" Finn will continue as the manager of the local house is one of the most fruitful sources of speculation, inasmuch as Mr. Finn has not definitely announced his plans. That he can stay in Rochester if he wishes is regarded as certain in view of his efficient management of the Temple since its beginning.

The change in control of the Temple marks the end of James H. Moore's theatrical interests in Rochester, an interest that goes back to the days of the old Wonderland, which was situated on the present site of the Sibley store at Clinton avenue north and main street east. Later Mr. Moore acquired the old Cook Opera House, now the Family Theatre, and later built the Temple Theatre, which was opened in December, 1909. Among Mr. Moore's notable achievements was the showing of the first motion pictures in Rochester in the Wonderland back in 1896. These were on the old Lumiere Cinematographe, a French novelty, and were so popular with the public that they were shown for two weeks to packed houses.

The report given out by Associated Theatres, Inc., which recently opened the State Theatre in Corning, N. Y., that the company had taken over the control of the Liberty, Princess and Regent theatres in the Southern Tier city, has been denied by C. V. Stowell and Fred Gerber, managers of the Liberty in Corning. They declare that the board of directors, after entering negotiations with Associated, rejected the plan as "an unequitable arrangement."

Manager William Fait, Jr., has booked "The Christian" for presentation in the Eastman Theatre, commencing Sunday, April 1.

Troy Theatre's Second Week Shows Attendance Increase

Although $2 is not much in itself, yet the amount represents a source of much satisfaction to the owners and management of the new Troy Theatre in Troy, N. Y., owned and operated by the Strand circuit, and the largest house in the city. Last Sunday's receipts were exactly $2 above the receipts of the previous Sunday, the first following the theatre's opening. The house is enjoying excellent business and is apparently filling a long-felt want.

William Smalley, of Oneonta, also owning houses in Cooperstown and Fort Plain, spent three days along Film Row last week.

The Majestic in Troy, closed for some months, will be known as the Astor when it opens under new management the fore part of April. The house will be run by J. Deiches, one-time owner of the Eden in Waterbury, Conn.

Meyer Schine is now said to be negotiating for the Mazey Theatre in Oneonta, one of the prettiest houses in the smaller places of Central New York. The house is owned by William Smalley.

Morris Silverman, owner of the Happy Hour in Schenectady and generally known as "The Perlmutter" in the business, observed his fifteenth wedding anniversary last Thursday and entertained his family and friends at a theatre party.

Because the driver of a truck making the pick-ups and collections between the film exchanges of Albany and the theatres of Schenectady failed to wake up before noon one day last week, many of the theatres in Schenectady started their shows late that afternoon. The truck left Albany after 1 o'clock, but encountered heavy going on account of the storm.

"The Hottentot" went over so well at Carthage, N. Y., last week that it was held over for a third day.

W. H. Linton, of the Hippodrome in Utica and the Hippodrome in Little Falls, in Albany the past week stated that he was feeling none of the effects of either Lent or weather conditions.

The Rev. George Smith, of the Baptist Church at Bolton Landing, N. Y., was in Albany last week buying film for coming entertainments. He claims that there is nothing quite the equal of the motion picture for gaining a congregation and holding it month in and month out by up-to-date methods.

There is a fight on between the Majestic, of Albany, running burlesque and pictures, and one of the newspaper dailies. It is claimed by the manager of the Majestic that the newspaper has been unduly harsh in its criticisms. The theatre has withdrawn its advertising.

New York City

Sam H. Roth, general manager of the Hamilton, Orpheum and Broadway theatres, Yonkers, of which Matthew N. Chyrstmos is president and I. A. Roth is secretary and treasurer, is a busy man and has very little time for himself, taking charge of the three houses. The Orpheum, where he makes his headquarters, is one of the oldest houses in the county and was known as the Doric, and that's a good many years ago. At that time it was run and controlled by Jesse Lasky, now of Famous Players. Sam's a real live wire when it comes to exploitation. A few weeks ago he had Old Harry, the stilt man, walking around Yonkers and it made him put up the S. R. O. sign. In talking over things in general Sam said that the greatest failures in the picture line around this part of the country are pictures made on the other side with stars that are not known here, and that they have failed every time they were shown. He said what the people want here are American stars they know.

One of Brooklyn's representative theatre owners is Samuel Rosenthal, owner of the Globe theatre and the Ronley. Both of his houses have been open for twelve years, although he only took them over for himself a year and a half ago, having previous to that time managed them. Sam knows the business and everything that goes with it and the writer believes that today there is not a man who is capable of buying reels to suit his patrons better than he can. He offers a box of cigars to the first salesman who puts one over on him. It can't be done. Somebody told us that someone stole six packages of his Virgin Leaf the other night and he didn't sleep a wink. Sam is a great pal, interesting, on the level, "But business always before pleasure."

It's a great thing to meet old friends that have been tried and true. Met our old friend, Tom Ryan, who is now manager of the Parthenon at Ossining, and there are few changes to be seen in him. He's the same today as he was forty years ago, everybody's friend. Tom was born and bred in Ossining and everybody knows him. He has been manager at that house for ten years, and started as doorkeeper. Previous to that he was made purchasing agent for the merchants of Ossining between there and New York. He is also acquainted with the theatrical line, as there was a time when there were no pictures in that town.

Keith's Lynn Theatre in White Plains, N. Y., is providing wonderful entertainment for amusement seekers in that vicinity and Manager Crow and his staff are to be congratulated on their smart showmanship. Among recent highly successful exploitations of theirs was a mammoth Fashion Show run in connection with "Nobody's Money." Manager Crow claims that his house has the best projection in Westchester County.

Iowa

West Union, Ia., will have Sunday shows as the result of an informal referendum. Ministers of the town represented one faction and Harry Simpson, manager of the Princess Theatre, the other. After a two weeks' campaign a vote was taken. It resulted in 657 votes for Sunday shows and 589 against Sunday opening.

The new Alhambra Theatre at Des Moines, Ia., will open in April, according to word reaching Minneapolis. S. G. Moore is head of the company which is back of the theatre project.

Buffalo Business Booming; Three New Records Set Up

Buffalo is enjoying a season of wonderful business at the picture houses, especially downtown. Last week the three big houses, Shea's Hippodrome, Lafayette Square and Loew's State, all tacked up new records. "Tess of the Storm Country" broke all records at the Hipp, Betty Blythe appeared at the Lafayette in person and also tacked up a new mark in attendance, while Loew's State did its usual S. R. O. business with its ever popular box office attraction, Tom Mix.

Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount theatre department, was a visitor in his old home town last week. While in the city he called on several exhibitor and exchange friends and dropped in at the new Palais Royal for dinner. He remarked that it was quite like New York. Mr. Franklin announced that Arthur J. Amm, former manager of Shea's North Park, who recently resigned as house manager at the Eastman, will become associated with Southern Enterprises, with headquarters, perhaps, in Atlanta.

School authorities in Holland, N. Y., are giving the children a treat every Wednesday, when educational films are shown for the students in the high school auditorium.

Harris Lumberg started his Paramount policy at the Lumberg Theatre in Niagara Falls this week and knocked all attendance records for a goal. Harris is the Cataract City's oldest exhibitor. He ran the old International for years and then built the Lumberg. Mr. Lumberg has installed an augmented orchestra under the direction of Ernest Whistler, and Dean Goodwin is organist. The first picture shown is "Adam's Rib." New projection machines have been installed.

A man entered the Lafayette Square, Buffalo, one evening last week. He encountered the usual packed lobby. He went up in the air. Hailing Bill Van Dyne, assistant manager, he bellowed forth that this was the seventh time he had entered the theatre, paying his hard earned shekels for the privilege, and all he ever saw was the rear walls. He said he liked to see the stage sometimes and asked if it could be so arranged. On the other hand, an elderly man leaving the house one evening called Bill to him and said that he was going to sue the house for making his ribs ache. He said he had never laughed so much in his life. He declared it wasn't healthy for a man his age. He saw "The Hottentot." Betty Blythe appeared in person at the Lafayette last week and sure did bring them in. It was a case of "Try and get out," instead of "Try and get in."

Binghamton, N. Y., religious circles are yielding to the call of the motion picture. Several churches have decided to make films a portion of their regular church activities. Prominent clergymen of the city believe it possible for their societies to conduct clean secular entertainment on conservative, non-antagonistic but positive religious lines, without creating a vexatious problem. Another picture entertainment has been booked for this week at the Centenary M. E. Church, where the Rev. James Benninger and congregation have definitely adopted the new program. This church in time plans to have its own machine and film service. The entertainment will be in charge of the Rev. Harry J. Rines, pastor of the Ogden M. E. Church at Hillcrest, who was first to adopt religious movies and who makes them a part of his weekly program at Hillcrest. A number of churches in the city are planning film programs.

At a meeting of the League of Women Voters last Monday in the Hotel Iroquois there was a discussion on motion picture censorship, with Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace and president of the local Cohen unit, speaking in favor of the repeal of the censorship and Mrs. Chauncey J. Hamlin telling of the hearing in Albany and arguing against the repeal.

The Criterion will open Monday evening, March 19, under the management of the Mark-Strand interests, former operators of the Strand for a decade or so, with pictures, musical comedy and vaudeville. Ben Holmes and Lionel Edel will manage the house. "Knighthood" will be the opening attraction. Louis Latz will conduct the orchestra. Prices will be 10 and 20 at matinees and 23, 30 and 40 at night. Mr. Edel is having his mustachio marcel waved for the opening and will hold a reception on the stage each Wednesday afternoon, when he will interview any young ladies who wish to become film stars.

After examining reports made by the police who viewed Sunday shows in theatres in Niagara Falls, Judge Piper held that there was no violation of the state law. Only straight singing and instrumental musical acts were presented. These, according to the judge's interpretation of the law, do not constitute violation of the statute. None of the theatre managers was summoned to court in view of the judge's decision. Following the appearance of policemen in the Falls street and Pine avenue districts last Sunday, managers were advised to appear in police court to answer charges of violation of the state law.

The Clinton Strand Theatre, Inc., has filed papers in the Erie County Clerk's office setting forth a capital of $25,000. Messrs. Constantine and Nicholas Vassiliadis and Harry Roussi are planning to build a picture theatre on Clinton street.

Franklyn Farnum is making a tour of personal appearances in Western New York. He was at Shea's Opera House in Jamestown, N. Y., last week in an act entitled "The World Loves a Winner."

Incorporation papers have been filed in the Erie County Clerk's office by the New Try-It Theatres, Inc., with a capital of $120,000 and with Walter C. Dayton, J. D. Parnelee and S. T. Lockwood as directors. The company will soon erect a new theatre in the Black Rock section of Buffalo on the site of the old Try-It.

The Penn Yan, N. Y., Business Girls' Club held a benefit in the Elmwood Theatre in that town on the evening of March 13, when the picture attraction was Wallace Reid in "Thirty Days." The girls also took part in the program.

Ira M. Mosher, former manager of the Palace Theatre; R. W. Elmes and Elmer C. Winegar, former manager of the Central Park, Premier and Elmwood theatres, have formed the E. M. W. Pictures Corporation in Buffalo to produce industrial films.

More than 100 members of the Binghamton fire department and other city employes and officials were the guests of Dave Cohen at the private screening of "The Third Alarm" in the Symphony Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., last Saturday morning.

O. T. Schroeppel, manager of the Strand and Andrews theatres in Salamanca, N. Y., visited Film Row last week and tells of "Hub" Taylor, Pathe plugger, visiting his town in hip boots and with a snow shovel in his auto, on the tires of which there were no chains. He declares that "Hub" is expecting to use his deep snow experience in a trip to the North Pole for another "Nanook" picture.

Sunday movies are in the limelight in Sidney, N. Y., and a proposition to permit their showing with an admission charge will be voted upon at the coming election March 20. Efforts in the past to secure Sunday baseball have been defeated. Norwich is the nearest city that permits Sunday showings, many from this city attending there in the summer.

William C. Smalley, of Cooperstown, owns the only theatre there, a modern playhouse completed in September and which has been showing high-grade pictures and road shows. The petition to have the proposition voted upon was circulated by the local manager, S. C. McGregor, many of the business men and industrial owners signing up. Opposition is expected on the part of the Methodist and Congregational churches.

Stunned

On Broadway, fifty-two cents these days doesn't go very far, but up in West Winfield, N. Y., fifty-two cents is still fifty-two cents, and what is more, it represents either a margin of profit or loss.

There is an exhibitor by the name of Mr. Edick who runs the motion picture theatre in West Winfield one night a week. But business, through an unusually severe winter, has not been particularly good. Mr. Edick admitted such while visiting some of the film exchanges in Albany last week.

"I lost 52 cents last Saturday," said Mr. Edick, "and what is more, I lost $1.17 two or three weeks ago."

Stunned, the exchange manager for once in his life was speechless and without reply.

S. D. Legislature Friendly to Films

Charles Lee Hyde, manager of the Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D., favors us with a bill killed last month in the Legislature of his State when it failed to be reported out of committee. Introduced by one Erskine, it certainly is an ideal example of the mental capacity of some Blue Law folk who, if they took a dislike to toothpicks, would want a law prohibiting their manufacture and use. Laws, instead of working toward an era of higher intelligence—that's the way these Puritans' minds operate.

The South Dakota bill in question was "an act making the selling, distributing or exhibiting of 'Fatty' Arbuckle moving pictures or films a misdemeanor, and providing a penalty therefor."

"The Legislature generally was friendly," writes Mr. Hyde, "and the talk of censorship did not get past first base. Nor was there any other law besides this one presented, that was restrictive or harmful to our industry, so far as I know."

Bold, Bad Bandit Nets $150 in San Francisco Theatre

A bold, bad bandit with a nasty temper made a raid upon the Golden Gate Avenue ticket office of the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, on the evening of March 1 and made away with about $150. The first intimation that Miss Emily Hoffman, the cashier, had that anything was wrong was when a well-dressed young man, in a sullen voice, demanded that she "shove out the cash and be quick about it." She complied and then screamed. Her cries atracted attention and the man hastened to a nearby automobile, in which a confederate was seated, making his escape.

The Strand Theatre, San Francisco, has gone back to the former policy of using Sunday as its opening day, instead of Saturday. The program is now made up of feature pictures and vaudeville, instead of straight pictures, and a new scale of admission prices has been adopted. The new prices are 20 cents for matinees, except Sundays and holidays; 30 cents for night performances, with children admitted to the matinees for 10 cents.

The San Francisco Bureau of the Internal Revenue Department has filed a report showing that the Northern California District paid $2,635,936.55 into the Federal Treasury during the fiscal year 1922 as taxes on admissions to places of amusement, or 3.6 per cent of the total amount collected in the United States.

Baby Peggy, in "Peg o' the Movies," is to play the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, at an early date, and afterwards the entire Turner & Dahnken Circuit. The short subjects day by day become more important.

Messrs. Balaban and Katz, well known exhibitors of Chicago, were recent visitors at San Francisco and made a careful inspection of some of the large local theatres and methods of presentation.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Ltd., Honolulu, T. H., who has been spending several weeks at San Francisco, will leave shortly for New York on a business trip.

Walter Cox, who conducts a picture house at Portola, Calif., a division point on the Western Pacific Railroad in Plumas County, was a recent visitor at San Francisco. The trip was made primarily for the purchase of an electric generating set.

If Eugene H. Roth is as busy at Universal City as he was at San Francisco during the last few weeks of his stay here, he must be a busy man, indeed. The whole city seems to have united in giving this popular showman a great send-off to his new work, and banquets followed one another in rapid succession. To say that he will be missed in local theatre circles is putting it lightly.

Recent visitors on Film Row have included Frank R. McCauley, of the Unique Theatre, Santa Cruz; Miss Maude McDaniel, of the Elite Theatre, Santa Rosa; W. F. Jacobs, of the Auburn Theatre, Auburn, and Enea Brothers, of the California Theatre, Pittsburg.

The Larkin Theatre, San Francisco, has been purchased by J. A. Miller and Frank Cotter from Werner & Razetto.

A picture theatre is to be erected at Willits, Calif., by the owners of the Willits Hotel.

Cheaper Street Car Fares to Aid Seattle Exhibitors

With the street car service returned, March 1, to 5-cent fares (with some modifications), downtown exhibitors took advantage of the advertising opportunity afforded to exhort patrons to "Bring the family downtown to the theatre," urging that the way to keep the 5-cent fare was to patronize the street cars. A special page in the evening paper grouped the ads of all the leading attractions around a straightforward "talk" in the center of the page. As a special inducement the Palace Hip, a vaudeville and picture house, admitted children free for ten days, at evening performances, when accompanied by parents, excepting Saturday and Sunday. It is the general opinion among exhibitors that the reduction in fares will bring increased business to the box office.

H. A. McDonald, of the Rex and Castle theatres, Eugene, Oregon, managed to keep out of jail in spite of the fact that he advertised widely that he was going to tell "the truth about the Mayor." The newspapers gave him much publicity on the exposure, which was followed by billboard announcements. When Mac had everybody with his ear to the ground ready to get an extra thrill, he tied the stunt to Vitagraph's "Front Page Story," which exposes the Mayor all right. Mac got a good kick out of it and the box office did a rushing business.

Fred Chenier has sold his First National Theatre in Darrington, Wash., to Mrs. E. B. Gerdon, who has rechristened it the Rex.

Mrs. Strong is reported to have taken over the Art Craft Theatre in Seattle's Meridian district from Louis Alsace. The percentage of women exhibitors seems to be growing in the Northwest.

Seattle mothers are sprucing up their fair young daughters to enter them as candidates in the Baby Peggy contest being conducted by the Columbia Theatre. According to Manager R. W. Case, the contest is growing in interest every day.

L. A. Drinkwine (who doesn't), manager of the Palace Theatre, Tacoma, has booked "The Oregon Trail" for his house. He anticipates big interest in this one, due to the fact that Tacoma is an old city and has many pioneers and loyal citizens among whom interest runs high over pioneering days. Tacoma also boasts a museum wherein are displayed many mementos of the bygone days.

"Knighthood" is playing a second time in Spokane, at the Liberty Theatre, and doing a big business. This is a quick repeat, as it showed in Spokane Christmas week for the first time. But the popular demand for a return engagement was heavy enough to justify the second showing.

Joe St. Peter recently reopened his Rose Theatre in Everett, after installing a larger stage and remodeling the entire front of the house. He increased seating capacity by adding loges in the back of the house. Modern rest rooms were also a feature.

The "Fighting Blood" series of twelve pictures, distributed through F. B. O., has been booked for day and date showings at the Seattle Coliseum, Tacoma Colonial and Portland Liberty. The first round was fought this week and all the ringside seats were taken, according to the management.

The Winter Garden Theatre, a downtown first run house catering to family trade, with a 10-cent admission price, has just added a five-piece orchestra to its program.

Los Angeles

A new theatre is to be built in the Hollywood district at Hillhurst and Hollywood boulevards. It will seat 1,000 and be of the Spanish renaissance type of architecture. The building will cost $100,000. The theatre was financed by the Community Building Corporation of Hollywood.

Michael Gore booked "The Voice from the Minaret" into the Kinema for an extended run. It got away to a big start, with the message of Emil Coue used as a filler.

Manager Breckendel of the Symphony is smiling broadly with the way Mack Sennett's "Shriek of Araby," with Ben Turpin, has caught on. He admits he is showing to the biggest houses since "Grandma's Boy."

T. L. Tally did a big fifth week at his Broadway Theatre with "The Dangerous Age" after it had had an extended run at the Kinema.

There are three advertised world's premieres running in Los Angeles this week, including Metro's "The Famous Mrs. Fair" at Loew's State, Mae Murray in "Jazzmania" at the California and Mack Sennett's "Shriek of Araby" at the Symphony.

Jack Root has just been appointed manager of the Mission Theatre, succeeding Harry David, who has been appointed personal road representative for Mack Sennett in charge of the important key city presentations of "Suzanna" and "The Shriek of Araby." Root was formerly owner of the Strand Theatre in Pasadena.

Rumor Says Loew Will Control Cincinnati's Lyric

There is a persistent but unconfirmed rumor going the rounds here in Cincy to the effect that Marcus Loew is negotiating for the Lyric Theatre and would convert it into a first-class picture house for the screening of his biggest pictures. The fact that Loew, who is now president of the Metro Pictures Corporation and also operates a big chain of theatres, got his start in the amusement field in Cincinnati has lent considerable color to the report.

Loew was in the clothing buiness in Cincy when the movies came into existence, and was one of the pioneer exhibitors, operating a penny arcade on Fountain Square. The Lyric is one of the biggest houses in the city, located in the heart of the Vine Street business district, and until very recently was the home of the Ralph Dunbar Company, in a season of musical repertoire. The house is now again showing pictures under the original management, MacMahon & Jackson.

The Stage and Screen Scribes of America, a recently formed organization of movie and dramatic critics and reviewers, also embracing theatre managers in all branches of the business, has filed articles of incorporation for the purpose of establishing similar organizations in the larger cities. The Cincinnati order is the only one in the country thus far. A get-together meeting and banquet is held once a month to promote closer relationship between exhibitors, managers and scribes, and for the purpose of exchanging ideas looking toward betterment of conditions generally.

Jules Frankel, who recently acquired Gifts Theatre, is wearing a smile that won't come off. Business at Gifts has been exceptionally good since Frankel became manager, but the real reason for the aforesaid facial illumination is that Frankel has just announced his engagement to Miss Ruth Russack, of St. Louis, whither the coming benedict has motored for a protracted stay.

Manager I. Lisbon, of the Grand Theatre, announces that "Robin Hood" has shattered all attendance records in its first week's run and is being held over for a second week. Libson has not made public the amount that the picture grossed for the initial week, but it is understood that the takings resemble the German war debt in point of figures. Manager Libson arranged for two special morning presentations on Saturday for the accommodation of the kiddies, and doubled his force of ushers and floor superintendents in order that the youthful patrons might be properly cared for.

Bernard Levy, owner of the "L Theatre Circuit," operating a number of houses close to Cincinnati, who has been sojourning with his family at Miami, Fla., since last December, recently met with an accident there which resulted in a broken leg. Mr. Levy's return will be delayed for some time beyond the anticipated date by reason of the fractured member.

The Cincinnati Council for Better Motion Pictures gave the second of its series of model pictures at Keith's Theatre, March 10, the film being "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." A morning matinee, like the initial presentation several weeks ago, was for children only, the Boy Scouts attending to the publicity by the distribution of advertising matter, while the female contingent of the Scout organization served as ushers. The Council arranged for 100 women to act as chaperons for the juvenile fans.

The Grand Theatre, which has been housing road attractions, will switch to silent drama for the week of March 18, Manager Milford Unger having booked "Down to the Sea in Ships."

A reminder of the days when the Capitol introduced its feature photoplays with elaborate and colorful atmosphere prologues was found at that house during the screening of "The White Flower." A parade of wooden soldiers in bright uniforms trudged across the small stage during the overture. "The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers." The number was greeted with enthusiastic applause at every performance, says Manager Libson.

Manager John Schwalm, of the Rialto, Hamilton, Ohio, featured Brown's Original Saxophone Six during the week of March 12, in addition to his regular run of pictures.

Ed Keen, of Oxford, Ohio, a college town, is planning the erection of a new house, which, he says, will be a humdinger in every way.

Common Pleas Judge Walter J. Wright, Bucyrus, Ohio, has declared to be permanent the temporary injunction granted four weeks ago restraining the city administration from interfering with Sunday operations of the Bucyrus Theatre Company, and the Mayor's Court has found G. R. Moore, of Bellevue, president of the company, guilty of having operated a picture show on the Sabbath Day, February 4. Sentence was deferred.

Herman Seckel, projectionist, also was found guilty of having violated the Sunday law. He was fined $25 and costs, but signified his intention of appealing the case to the higher courts.

The case against R. L. Hertzer, manager and part owner of the theatre, was thrown out because the date on the warrant had been altered after the arrest had been made.

Bucyrus and vicinity are in the center of the picture war zone and additional activities are expected in that section.

Plans Picture Theatre for Biggest, Wealthiest Town

Howard Gray of Brookline has petitioned the incoming board of selectmen of the biggest and wealthiest town in the United States, Brookline, for a license to build and operate a picture theatre on Beacon street, at Coolidge Corner. The building would cost about $300,000, be of brick and seat about 2,000 persons. The site proposed is on land owned by Charles H. Stearns and extends from Beacon street through to Sewell avenue. This is by no means the first time that an attempt has been made to erect a picture theatre in Brookline. Heretofore, however, the town fathers have been much averse to the idea and every time the project has been broached it has met with a flat refusal. It is admitted by everyone that a picture theatre in Brookline, and especially located at Coolidge Corner, would prove a veritable gold mine to the owners, as it would have a big territory to draw from and would be assured of large audiences.

Manager J. H. Brennan of Loew's State Theatre designated one day last week as Carnation Day and presented to each woman patron a beautiful white carnation. The flowers were utilized to symbolize the title of "The White Flower."

In connection with the showing of "The Hero," which Manager Sanford Wallin has booked for the Bijou Theatre at Springfield, Mass., Phil Kahn, exploitation director for the American Feature Film Company, has arranged for a "Hero Week" that is giving the picture some unusually excellent publicity. Each night has been designated as a "Hero Night," Monday for the city firemen, Tuesday for the policemen, Wednesday for the Springfield Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Thursday for the American Legion veterans of the city, etc.

Another of Phil Kahn's recent exploitation stunts was in connection with the showing of "Shadows," which Manager Fred Green recently ran very successfully for a week at his Park Theatre at Woonsocket, R. I. In this little Rhode Island city Kahn arranged for a series of shadowgraphs of the pretty girls of the section, arousing the curiosity of the populace by the newspaper query, "Who Has the Most Beautiful Shadow in Woonsocket?"

Dan Finn, manager of the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, Mass., had a great time during the personal engagement of Louise Lovely in showing the film star about the city. She was presented the keys of the city by Mayor McPhetres. She gave an address to the Lions Club on "Hollywood As It Is."

Motion pictures of school children were taken by a cameraman for the Rialto Theatre in Fall River, Mass. A prize of a five-dollar gold piece was offered to the pupils who recognized themselves in a white circle which was worked into several of the scenes.

Harry B. Kollock, special policeman and doorman at Gordon's Olympia Theatre in Lynn, Mass., has been appointed a member of the newly revived Lynn license commission.

F. James Carroll, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre in Lowell, Mass., is directing a stock company at the Academy of Music in Halifax, N. S. Mr. Carroll recently was in Lowell renewing acquaintances.

Fred Valva's augmented rhythmic orchestra is one of the principal reasons why Poli's Elm Street Theatre in Worcester, Mass., is so popular with theatregoers.

The moving picture machine operators have joined hands with the stage employes in Pittsfield, Mass., for a theatrical ball on April 11.

Mrs. Sylvester Z. Poli, wife of the theatre owner, is in charge of the Massachusetts collections for the war orphans of Italy.

Twenty former service men, patients in Worcester, Mass., State Hospital, recently were guests of Manager Eugene Shea at a performance in the Worcester Theatre.

The Dream Theatre in Cliftonvale, Mass., has been entirely renovated and two new projection machines have been installed. The American Legion post has resumed its shows in the Dream.

Three Bills Affecting Films in Connecticut Legislature

A great deal of interest was shown in the hearing on March 9 before the Connecticut State Committee on Public Health and Safety on bills relating to fire hazards in the operation of motion picture apparatus and which would remove certain restrictions now imposed on film exhibitions outside of theatres. The hearing took place in the Capitol at Hartford.

Three bills were brought before the committee. The first provided that no motion picture machine shall be operated with any other than cellulose acetate film or other slow-burning film. The second measure, which related to motion pictures for non-commercial showing, provided that persons exhibiting motion pictures printed upon cellulose acetate film under the provisions of section 2291 of the general statutes shall give a bond of $1,000. The third bill related to safety films and provided that standard size might be used.

The present state law provides that only the narrow safety film may be used in any exhibition other than in a theatre.

The relative hazards of nitrate cellulose and acetate cellulose film and the merits of 28 and 35 millimeter films were debated for nearly two hours. Following this, Robert T. Hurley, superintendent of the state police patrol, said he would recommend that every motion picture machine be enclosed in a booth and that every building used for a motion picture performance or any other kind of entertainment be inspected and approved by the state police before the entertainment was permitted. He said that many of the town halls and other buildings, outside of theatres, where motion picture entertainments are given, were not always safe and many of them should be remodeled.

The Rev. G. E. Richter, of Coventry, asserted that the motion picture is the child of the church. He referred to the usefulness of pictures in church entertainments. He said the country towns used the narrow film and could not get pictures of the modern drama. He said that if a motion picture featuring Mary Pickford was advertised, the only film that could be obtained for exhibit was one in which the star appeared ten years ago. He strongly objected to the use of booths for the projection machines.

J. W. Walsh, of the Theatre Owners Association of Connecticut, representing 135 theatres in the state, condemned the third bill as vicious and said it would force out of business those engaged in enterprises the object of which is to conduct picture theatres.

W. B. Cook, of New York City, a member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, made an impressive argument in favor of legislation to obtain safety in the operation of motion pictures. Referring to the danger to which school children are sometimes exposed during motion picture entertainments, Mr. Cook said it only was by the mercy of God that there has not been a holocaust. He said that two years from now a national effort will be made to obtain uniformity in the state regulation of motion pictures by the introduction of identical measures within the legislatures of all the states in the Union.

At the conclusion of the hearing the committee visited the offices of the State Department of Health where the members were shown the machines there and the two kinds of film.

A new building code in New Haven, Conn., to which exhibitors object, makes it necessary for the building inspector and the fire marshal to inspect every theatre or church or building used for any kind of public assemblage. If the officials find that these buildings do not come up to the requirements of the code, the owner will be obliged to make changes. If he is dissatisfied with the orders he may appeal to the board of examiners.

The code contains a provision that the fire marshal, if he finds that building conditions endanger life, may order changes. This is the clause to which theatre men object, they alleging that it allows the fire marshal to do as he pleases.

New Haven's new theatre ordinance has become a law, having been passed by the Aldermen on March 5 despite strong opposition, with only two amendments. One of these allows the burning of incense in churches and the other prohibits city officials from soliciting or accepting theatre passes. The New Haven Women's Club strenuously supported the ordinance.

Will D. Harris, manager for two months of the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, has beautified the house by the installation of a concealed lighting system in the rear of the theatre. Nathan H. Gordon, president of the Gordon circuit of Olympia theatres, has enthusiastically approved it. Now Mr. Harris is giving all his time to booking the best pictures obtainable, and promises patrons some delightful surprises in the near future.

When it comes to exploitation there are few exhibitors who make a stronger appeal to the public than Fred Valles, manager of Poli's Palace Theatre, Bridgeport. Fred has been with Poli for quite a few years and has been all along the line putting things in shape and making people sit up and take notice. The present lobby of the Palace is attracting a lot of attention, as Fred caused a local sensation by using a woman in Chinese costume for "Java Head."

Herbert C. Parsons, manager of Parsons' Theatre in Hartford, Conn., was victor in the suit brought by Victor J. Uberti, a portrait painter. The plaintiff sued for $300 for painting a portrait of Mr. Parsons' daughter, a deduction of $75 having been made for the frame, which was returned. The court found for Mr. Parsons to recover his costs and the judgment was so ordered.

"I want to give the public of Bristol what it wants," is the policy of Manager Sanson of the Princess Theatre in Bristol, Conn.

The Battle Rages

Ryan & Kundert, of the Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D., write that "We have again been arrested for operating our picture show on March 4 in violation of a city ordinance. Upon our arrest we arrested twelve others and charged them with Sabbath-breaking under the state laws. Hearings were held March 10 and trial dates for all, including ourselves, were set for April 10."

Evidently the fight is assuming major proportions. The last word we had from Beresford the whole town had gone "blue" when the exhibitors insisted on all businesses shutting down Sundays if they could not give Sunday shows.

H. S. Marion, of Moving Picture World, visiting Bridgeport the past week, met Martin W. Leighton, owner of the American Theatre, and writes us the following about him.

"Leighton saw the sunshine and the old swimming pool in Bridgeport many years ago. It's his home town and he says he's proud of it. He might also have added that he's proud of his own progress in the last seventeen years. That is the length of time Martin has been in the picture game and he has made a success of it. Today he owns the American, and it's one of the prettiest houses of its size for miles around.

"Martin began as an operator and was one of the first Bridgeport men in the picture business. For six years he ran a Mutual exchange here. He's made many visits to New York and is well known throughout this section of New England. It's a pleasure to meet him, for it's always 'Welcome, stranger' with him. His house is ably managed by Harry A. Cohen."

Marion also writes:

"When you walk into Dawes' Theatre on State street, Bridgeport, you enter a neat little theatre that plays to the elite of the town. 'Robin Hood' played there to the biggest receipts in the history of the house, notwithstanding a stiff rental, for Mr. Dawes knows what he wants and gets it. He says he got two weeks' business out of one week's rental with the picture. None of Barnum's philosophy for him."

One of the finest theatres in Connecticut for the size of the town is the Rialto at South Norwalk. This house was for many years known as Hoyt's and played some of the most famous attractions of byegone years. Now that everything seems to have turned to pictures, the house has gone under a great change. The stage has been torn away and it is now a strict picture house. The house is run under the management of A. Hamilton who is a real showman, having been for many years with Mr. Poli as publicity manager and was also assistant manager at the Hamilton Theatre, New York City. It is his home town and he is one of the youngest owners in the moving picture business in this part of the country, having just passed thirty-two.

The Community Theatre, Plainville, Conn., the only picture theatre in the town, will reopen March 19, under the supervision of its new manager, Andrew Hogan. The theatre was erected last summer by Charles B. Eastman, of Woodbury, Conn., and was leased to Louis H. Loeffler, of New York, who was the former manager of the theatre. Manager Hogan has taken it up with the New Haven Motion Picture Exchange for procuring the latest and best run pictures, and no doubt Plainville will pay for such amusements.

One of the finest theatres between Bridgeport and New Haven is the Capitol in Milford, Conn. The house was built at a cost of $150,000 and is the best equipped theatre in any town of its size in the state. It seats 800, has a Typhoon fan, big organ and fourteen loges, and the interior decorations are of blue, pink and gold. Although Milford is really a summer resort, people from nearby towns keep the Capitol packed throughout the winter. In the summer there are between 20,000 to 25,000 people in Milford. A big stage allows the house to play road attractions.

The theatre was built two years ago by the present owner, Charles Momejo, who has been fortunate in securing A. S. Skidmore as manager. Mr. Skidmore, formerly owner of the Elite in Bridgeport, is one of the brightest showmen in the business.

Balaban & Katz Deny Rumor of Intended Chicago House

Publicity Manager Hollander of Balaban & Katz says there is nothing to the report that Balaban & Katz are going to build another theatre here along the lines of the new Grauman house at Los Angeles and that both Mr. Balaban and Mr. Katz are on a pleasure trip to the West Coast studios.

The many friends of John Weigler, manager of the film end of the Sauvage Enterprises at Alton, are sorry to hear of the death of his son.

Peter Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is in Paris now, according to the latest word from him, enjoying the sights of gay Paree after a strenuous time in Berlin and the stirring events of the Ruhr Valley invasion by the French. He is not expected back before May and will bring back many ideas picked up in the European movie circles.

Charles A. Niggemeyer has charge of the presentations and special numbers at the New McVickers Theatre and has put over some elaborate productions during the past few weeks that have helped to pull capacity crowds to the house.

Barbee's Theatre advertised for five cross-eyed sheiks and the same number of shebas to sing during the engagement of Ben Turpin in the "Shriek of Araby." The ad said no experience necessary, as they would be trained. The result was a riot, and, of course, it helped to fill the house throughout the week. With a dandy lobby display, the crowds jammed in to see the picture.

The management of the Irvin Theatre at Bloomington has made a hit with the child fans of the city by putting on special Saturday morning shows for the juveniles, and they have responded by filling up the house in record time at each matinee show.

Ben Cornwell, of St. Louis, brother of F. L. Cornwell, builder of the Le Claire Theatre and hotel at Moline, was seriously injured in an automobile accident and may die from his injuries.

John J. Jacques has sold his theatre and four stores at 26th and Homan avenue to Ben Golden for a reported consideration of $87,500, subject to $29,000. The new owner may make some improvements in the house.

The Ben-Hur Amusement Company has leased the theatre at 306 Cicero avenue from Charles and A. B. Ryan and L. A. and Mary Ullrich for five years at a term rental of $18,000. They have an option of a renewal for another five years at a $600 a year increase in rental.

The many friends of Claud F. Brock, operator at the Orpheum Theatre at Rockford, will be sorry to hear of his death when the motorcycle he was riding collided with a farmer's team on the Grant highway near Freeport. He formerly was with John F. Dippman at the Strand Theatre in Freeport.

At the annual meeting of the American Theatrical Hospital Association, Judge Joseph Sabath was elected president, Harry J. Riddings, manager of the Cohan's Grand, first vice-president; U. J. Hermann, of the Cort Theatre, second vice-president; Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, treasurer, and Claud S. Humphrey, secretary. Nathan Ascher, of the Ascher chain, was made a director. The annual benefit performance will be held at the Colonial Theatre on Sunday afternoon, April 8.

The Boston Theatre Company, who formerly operated the Boston Theatre on North Clark street, which was torn down to make way for the new Temple Building, have surrendered their charter to the Secretary of State and quit business.

Walter E. Blaufauss, song writer and movie orchestra leader, is some real estate operator. His latest deal was the purchase of forty-four flats on Juneway Terrace from Stephen R. Swarthout for $201,000, subject to $161,000. He also made a second deal with Swarthout for two apartment buildings on North Ashland avenue for $85,000. There seems to be a lot of money in the music business.

Ray Watts, of the Orpheum Theatre at Rockford, is strong for music in his house and has installed a new organ that helps to bring in the music lovers. On Sunday he adds an orchestra to the bill, having twenty men on a recent Sunday. That stunt brought in capacity business for the day.

Harry D. Koffman, Claude R. Plough and Abram H. Hadfield have formed the Hadfield Amusement Company, with a capital of $10 000, to build and operate picture theatres and other places of amusement. The office of the company is at 6254 Stewart avenue.

The many friends of Marcus Heiman, who was recently elected president of the Orpheum circuit of vaudeville and combination houses, are extending their good wishes to him and wishing him the greatest success at the head of the great circuit of theatres. Heiman came to Chicago when he was twenty-one and the hard work that he put into theatrical enterprises soon put him at the head of the Finn & Heiman circuit, at that time the fourth largest chain in the country. His company was absorbed by the Orpheum soon after and Heiman gradually worked his way up, until at the last meeting of the board of directors, he was made the head of this country-wide chain of high-class theatres.

The management of the Rialto Theatre at Racine staged the annual fashion show from March 12 to 16, and by using professional models with co-operation of the business men of the city, put on a metropolitan show that jammed the house to capacity at every show.

Charles Fecher and Fred Nortman are the new owners of the Kimbark Theatre, taking the house over from Harry T. Loper.

Seeing Snakes

Forty-three persons flunked the Chicago civil service examination for motion picture censors, not one attaining the passing mark of 70. Evidently it's difficult for the multitudes to grasp what it's all about.

One of the questions was: "Would you sanction the showing of a writhing snake prominently shown in a motion picture scene?" The correct answer, we suppose, would be: "No! It would encourage our young to wiggle instead of walk."

The novel plan of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners of sending a dollar with every letter to the leading theatre owners in this territory to form an organization has brought fine results, according to the latest report from the organizers. Among the first to respond favorably were Jones, Linick & Schaefer, with four memberships.

H. W. Pitner, of the Rex Theatre at Fairfield, is ill at the hospital in Olney. His friends hope to see him back on the job real soon.

Plans are moving ahead rapidly for the convention and the show at the Coliseum and the outlook for some real doings is very bright at this writing.

A new theatre is being constructed at Lebanon by Manager Hinard and will be ready the latter part of next month. The cosy little house will be known as the Gem Theatre.

One of the finest shows ever put on by the Balaban & Katz organization was the Syncopation Week at the Chicago Theatre the week of March 5. With seven headline specialties and Douglas MacLean in "Bell Boy 13," the house played to capacity business throughout the week. A novel feature was the dancing forest, a work of art that pleased the crowds.

A new theatre will be erected at Flint by the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises of that city.

Manager Rouda, of Ascher's Lane Court Theatre, has put over the amateur night shows at his house with some clever advertising and the house is filled with the friends of the contestants each Thursday. Another feature is the song revue night each Wednesday and the rival music houses send out their best singers to help put over the latest songs they are plugging.

Perry Stein and Henry and Vincent Vinci have sold the 500-seat picture house at 4415 Montrose avenue to Harry M. Goldberg and Jacob S. Cohn. The buyers will remodel the building at a cost of $10,000.

The plans for the new theatre at Madison have been completed and F. W. Fischer, at 36 South State, will have charge of the construction that, it is estimated, will cost at least $300,000.

Louis and Clara Brecka are now in charge of the California Theatre at 3434 West 26th street and will make some improvements in the house.

Film Exchange Personalities

Albany

Harry Gans, who has been handling the Albany exchange for the American Releasing Corporation, has left for Buffalo, where he will be associated with the Hodkinson exchange. Mr. Gans, who was formerly with First National, will be succeeded by a Mr. Blancke, of Boston.

Vic Bendell, manager of the F. B. O. offices, is making his first trip this week to the theatres of Utica and Watertown. Interior improvements at Mr. Bendell's offices have been completed.

A. J. Herman, manager of the First National exchange, reports having sold Malone solid for the summer months, and also the Strand in Ogdensburg. Mr. Herman is spending a portion of this week in Plattsburg and other places in Northern New York catering to summer business.

C. R. Halligan will have been branch manager of the Universal exchange in Albany for five straight years on April 3, and, as such, enjoys the distinction of having served longer as manager of a film exchange in the Capital City than any other person.

The First National, through A. L. Burks, is doing much exploitation in this section of the State. Last week, Mr. Burks did some excellent work in connection with "The Hottentot" at the Glove in Gloversville, and "Smilin' Through" at the Strand in Dolgeville. This week Mr. Burks is putting over "The Hottentot" at the Gem in Little Falls, and "East Is West" at the Hippodrome in the same place.

Charles Walder, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, closed more business last week than during any one week since the exchange was opened. This includes a contract with Goldstein Brothers, owners of the Park Theatre in Utica, for the season's output.

C. R. Halligan, of the Universal, reports having sold "Flaming Fortune" and "The Oregon Trail" to the Crescent and the Happy Hour in Schenectady.

In the drive now on between the First National exchanges of Albany, Buffalo and New York, A. J. Herman, manager of the Albany exchange, is still in the lead.

S. E. Feld, salesman for First National out of here, confined at his home in New York for some time with grippe, is back at work.

Rochester

W. A. V. Mack, manager of the Buffalo Pathe exchange, was in town last week end, with his smile and his usual bunch of new stories.

Allan S. Moritz, manager of the Buffalo Paramount exchange, and Harry Buxbaum, general sales manager of the home office, were in Rochester this week arranging dates on the Paramount product under the recently readjusted arrangement of bookings.

No Wonder!

W. G. Gehring, who covers the Rochester, N. Y., territory for the Fox exchange in Buffalo, is about to take unto himself a bride. Th bride's name is Miss Frances Fell. The announcement in the papers was headed Gehring-Fell.

Pittsburgh

Manager "Bert" Moran, of the Pittsburgh Pathe branch, announces the following changes in the personnel of his office and sales force:

Fred Solomon, former booker and assistant manager at the Omaha Pathe branch, is now assistant to Manager Moran in the local office, succeeding C. A. Lynch, who has gone to Buffalo for Universal.

Jack Leary, former booker at the New Haven office, is now officiating in a similar capacity at the Steel City office, succeeding L. O. Mann.

George W. Collins, former assistant manager at the local Metro exchange, is now with Pathe as city salesman, succeeding "Doc" Smith, who has gone with the Universal.

Manager G. R. Ainsworth of the local Hodkinson office has returned to this city after several days in New York attending a convention of the managers of the Eastern Division Hodkinson branches, called by W. F. Seymour.

Leonard Goldstein, formerly on the road for the local branch of the Film Booking Offices, is now in Los Angeles working for the same organization.

Lou R. Cohen is the latest addition to the Pittsburgh Hodkinson sales force. Lou is well known here, but most recently was with Goldwyn at Cleveland.

S. A. George, former Pathe salesman, is now traveling the Northern territory for Metro, succeeding J. J. Maloney, who has been made assistant to Manager Atkinson, succeeding George Collins, resigned.

"Bob" Wagner, genial publicity purveyor of the Rowland & Clark Theatres, has recovered from a severe attack of tonsilitis.

Pity the Codfish

The appended piece of poetry was handed our correspondent by Office Manager C. L. Tietjeb, of the Pittsburgh Universal exchange, and it contains some real food for thought. It is dedicated to all men who have something to sell, including the exhibitor as well as everybody else:

The codfish lays a million eggs,
While the helpful hen lays one;
But the codfish does not cackle
To inform us what she's done.
And so we scorn the codfish coy,
While the helpful hen we prize;
Which indicates to thoughtful minds that
IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE!

Buffalo

Bob Harris has resigned as local manager for the American Releasing exchange. He has been appointed manager of the Al Lichtman Albany office.

"Popsy" Carrick, manager of the Hodkinson exchange, has engaged Harry Gans as a member of the sales staff. Mr. Gans was formerly manager of the Albany American Releasing office. Paul Shaver and H. E. Hughes have resigned from the Hodkinson staff. Mr. Gans will cover the Syracuse and Utica district.

Buffalo film men are mourning the death of Bobby Matson, veteran picture salesman, who is dead, following an extended illness. Mr. Matson was formerly associated with Associated Exhibitors and Select.

Harry Buxbaum came to town last week to accompany Allan S. Mortz, Paramount district manager, to Rochester to confer with George Eastman on dates for the Paramount product under the rearranged schedule. Burton Henning has been engaged to assist Bobby Williams in the Paramount accessories department and J. D. Hillery is the new assistant shipper. Both are college men.

Harry Bernstein, Universal manager, and his associates at the local exchange are planning for Anniversary Week, May 6 to 12. The exchange has been elaborately decorated and all the salesmen are pepped up to hit new sales records for the occasion.

Eddie McBride, Fox salesman, is now an Elk. He went through last week and received an ovation when it was announced that he was the son of "Hotspur" McBride, popular newspaper man of other days in Buffalo. Charles N. Johnston, branch manager, announces that all the big feature specials have been set in all the key cities. Bill Gehring is to be married soon. We're sorry, Bill.

Gene Markens, First National city salesman, is now leading the field in the New York, Albany and Buffalo "Record Smasher" sales drive. He's after that $200 prize, which, added to several others of recent dates, should provide him with a suitable gasoline buggy. H. L. Beecroft, exploitationist par excellence, is now working twenty-four hours a day on a campaign for "Oliver Twist" at Shea's Hippodrome.

J. H. Gecox, special representative from the Goldwyn home office, is now working in the Buffalo territory. Otto Siegel has signed up the works with Si Bunce, proprietor of the Savoy.

Washington, D. C.

Eugene Wilson, of the Vitagraph exchange, is "getting in on the big money," to use his own expression, for the Washington office is figuring in the bonus distributions the home office is making in offers to the various branches to exceed their quotas. C. L. Kendall, division manager, has been visiting this city, assisting in the drive that is being made on "Ninety and Nine," and giving the local staff pointers on putting the Vitagraph product across in a big way.

Young Mr. Coogan Asked More Again

If you remember only one thing about Oliver Twist, it is probable that the sole recollection is that Oliver was delegated to ask for more. The Strand Theatre, Milwaukee, hooked this to a Salvation Army drive, replacing the porridge bowl with a tin cup.

A First National Release

THE COOGAN SOLICITATION

An Army lassie was stationed at each of the stands to watch the contributions, but she let Jackie do all the begging, and his ability as a wealth acquirer has been widely advertised.

It would not be a bad idea to lay in a couple of these posters for future use in case you handle the Coogan releases. You might even start a drive, for that matter, if you have still to play Oliver Twist.

For that matter it might be a good excuse for a return booking.

Easy Windows

Some titles seem made for hook-ups and others have equally good points of contact. "Mighty Lak a Rose" seems to have been made for window work. Recently the Chicago Theatre landed upward of 250 windows for this First National release because the rose suggestion could be worked to the limit by florists and gave good window dressing for other wares

Phonograph shops, milliners and department stores seemed to like the idea almost as well as the florists, and they all formed in line with pretty displays. Of course the phonograph dealers and music roll people fall particularly hard on account of the hook-up with a really good song.

Two of a Kind

The pair of cards devised for "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" are still in use. Their latest report is from Sumter, S. C., where Oscar White used them for the Rex Theatre.

He put out a woman to hand out the first, a one by two-inch slip reading "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight? Please help me find him." She was such a pathetic, forlorn old figure that the advertising took hold. When the play came, a few days later, she was on the streets again, this time her face all smile and her cards announced she had found her boy at the Rex in a fine photoplay.

Gypped Employees Into Reading Card

One of the best features of the campaign of the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, on "The Christian" was the use of a card 8 by 18 inches, printed in bold type and looking much like an official notice. These were tacked near the time clocks in a large number of factories and were so official looking that practically everyone read the notice. The card is so useful and so well done that we reproduce it for the guidance of others. It can be worked on almost any big picture. Follow the style.

TO THE EMPLOYEES

You are hereby notified that Maurice Tourneur's mammoth production of "THE CHRISTIAN" adapted from the famous novel and play by Sir Hall Caine is to be presented in Toledo, starting SUN., FEB. 18, 1923.

It is a picture the world has been waiting for, crammed full of THRILLS, ADVENTURE and ROMANCE, with a wonderful cast that includes RICHARD DIX, MAE BUSCH, Gareth Hughes, Phyllis Haver and Mahlon Hamilton, and a picture every employee of this firm should see.

Signed,
Arthur C. Hoganson, Mgr. Dir.
PANTHEON THEATER

A Goldwyn Release

THE EMPLOYE'S CARD

In addition Mr. Hoganson used the "ten names" notification stunt, and had his house artist paint more than life-sized figures of Mae Busch and others in the banquet scene. These were sent around town on two Ford trucks. This kills "The Stranger's Banquet" float, but it helped to put over the Hall Caine play.

The sidewalk mat of patent linoleum was also used, even mats being employed and the lobby was dressed with the paintings and stills.

Good Investment

Arch Bamberger, of the Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky., spent about seven dollars for a front on "East Is West," and the second day's receipts beat the first by about $106, showing the value of getting the crowd in the first day to go out and talk.

The front was a top and side pieces painted in Chinese style for the attraction, and which is repainted for frequent use. The rest was a bunch of paper lanterns strung around the lobby and carried to the ends of the building.

Small's Big Stunt Used a Six Sheet

Max Small, of the Franklin Theatre, Chicago, used the six sheets on "The Hottentot" for sidewalk work when he got the First National. Apparently they face one way, but they can use them back to back if desired to get them going and coming.

A First National Release

THE SIDEWALK POSTERS

This was evidently used in front of the house, since there is no house advertisement, but it can be stripped with the house name and carried up and down the street with even greater effect. The only stripping done is for the playing days, which very evidently are Tuesday and Wednesday.

Crowd Too Large to Get in Camera

When you can get almost half your town in front of your theatre, you have sufficient reason for feeling good. S. A. Davidson, of the Princess Theatre, Neodesha, Kans., works in a 4,300 town, but they have a fire department and he has a quantity of large town jazz.

He got "The Third Alarm" about the time it opened in New York and before the campaign books were ready, so he planned his own campaign, and got away with it, including a stunt which brought fully 2,000 to the theatre the opening night. Not all of them came in, of course, but there they were, to pick a standout from.

The city had recently purchased a new truck and the argument was that this was a good time to tell the citizenry about it. The local paper was persuaded to sponsor a test run of sixteen blocks from a standing start, time to be taken from the start to the time a line was carried to the roof of the theatre with the hose properly coupled.

The run was made with the whistle wide open and as most persons call central when they hear an alarm, the central girls were hired with passes to tell all about it. And the fireman who climbed the ladder tripped a banner when he reached the top rung and the banner told all those who were not busy at the phone.

Before this a teaser stunt was worked with the fire prevention angle, persons being warned to be careful not to start a third alarm fire, and smaller cards were tacked to every stairway in town warning the public not to throw down lighted cigarette butts lest a third alarm fire be started. It all helped to make a big town run and they did not need the rain insurance they took out.

A Paramount Release

MADE A CHARACTERISTIC DISPLAY FOR "WORLD'S APPLAUSE"

H. B. Clark, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, made a curtain effect for the Bebe Daniels hit, getting real atmosphere and plenty of color. This was decorated with a comic mask and cutouts of the star, and backed up with a front banner.

Made a Big Flash With Very Little

Exploitation does not always mean killing the bankroll. C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., did very little for "The Stranger's Banquet" and got a lot for what he spent.

A strip of compo board was lettered in old English "Marshall Neilan invites you to 'The Stranger's Banquet.'" This was placed at the top of his narrow lobby, supported by two canes on either side, one in front of and the other back of the sign.

Half a dozen inflated balloons were attached to each pair of supporters, and a few yards of serpentine were also twined about. It could not have cost more than two or three dollars, yet it was amply sufficient to give a general air of jollity to the front.

The accessory door knobs were used for house distribution to supplement the front. Little money was spent, but it put business over the top.

Empty Seats Paid

R. C. Frost hooked eight merchants to a co-operative page on "Oliver Twist" and gave each 25 tickets for the opening matinee, explaining that he knew he would have the seats to spare and that each free ticket would send in two or more paid admissions later in the week. They turned them away on Sunday, doubled the usual Monday business and had a Tuesday better than that.

Since a local bakery offers a Jackie Coogan roll, he got them to give him 6,000, which were distributed at the theatre, each in a parafined bag printed up for the attraction. That helped the receipts—and the bakery.

At the Source

George J. Schade, of Sandusky, has used toy balloons on numerous occasions for exploitation purposes. Next to Jasper Emanuel he is the novelty dealer's best friend.

And in recognition of his work a toy balloon factory has been located in Sandusky.

We hold that the town should make some public recognition of Schade's contribution to local expansion, what!

Varied Paddock Idea for the Hottentot

Improving on the old idea of the race track front with "This way to the grandstand" for the entrance doors, the Arcade Theatre, Ann Arbor, Mich., used a paddock setting for "The Hottentot." Just a little profile gave the box office the suggestion of an official stand, with blackboards on either side, and the entrance and exit doors were masked by stall fronts with the usual half doors.

Streamers, pictures and the Hottentot placque were all used in the lobby display, but the stalls and stand were the large noise and they cost very little, counting the material it will not be possible to use again. The novelty of entering through the stable door probably helped the ticket sale and the general atmospheric effect was a strong seller. It will be noted that the display does not enclose the entire lobby, but simply extends across the rear.

For street work a ballyhoo of three led horses was used. This little parade was headed by a traveling judge's stand in which rode a bugler to summons the horses—and the patrons—to the race. This stand was chiefly constructed from second hand material and cost even less than the lobby display, but it was worth a lot of money in that it pointed up the idea of the horse parade.

The window display was a cutout of the hurdlers going over the jumps with a practical hurdle at right angles to the glass to which the cutout was affixed, so that the horses were mostly in the air, but it is possible to use very fine wire and suspend from the ceiling, so that the horses are actually in the air. This will also permit of a slight motion which will add to the realism.

A First National Release

THEY TOOK THE JUDGES' STAND ALONG WITH THEM IN THE ANN ARBOR "HOTTENTOT" PARADE

This was mounted on a light two-wheeled cart, provided with a bell and painted black and white. The driver was also a bugler. In the parade the most spirited horse was naturally labeled "The Hottentot." In the lobby there was a combination of paddock and stable effect. The entrance was to the right of the box office, through the stable doors, the usual half-door effect being used.

Masks in the Organ for Billboard Uses

Most managers do not make much use of the house interior for advertising, though this is the place to sell this week's patron next week's show.

W. S. Patterson, of the Opera House, Mayville, N. Y., latticed in his organ pipes and then covered with satin, against which he displayed the cutout portraits of the First National stars when he came to advertise his First National Week. Palms complete the decoration.

When the house lights are on, as during the organ solo, these posters show up as the most pronounced points of color and the patron cannot help looking at them. Care should be exercised that the display is not so light in coloring as to distract attention when the picture is on the screen, but the announcements should be plain enough to be visible to those in the rear seats.

The stunt was first used on the Week, and was largely helpful in getting bumper houses for the celebration.

YOU HAVE HEARD OF HOUSE ORGAN ADVERTISING BEFORE

But here is a picture of it. W. S. Patterson, of the Opera House, Mayville, N. Y., screens in his organ with a trellis and then decorates that for First National Week with cutouts of the stars and a line of classy chatter about the brand.

Lobby Fan Displays Help East is West

On this page are two fan designs which will assist the managers who have not yet played "East is West" or who may later wish to put over some other Japanese theme. One of these is a prologue setting, but can be adapted to lobby work. The other is a straight lobby display and is done without much painting.

This latter has sticks of thin wood, tapered and painted carmine, with decorations in gold. The fabric is a wall paper of appropriate design; a conventional pattern with a lot of gold. It is not Japanese, but it is not anything else in particular, so it works well. Above the fan is a lattice to suggest the Japanese style of building, with two large paper lanterns which may be omitted where they cannot be procured without expense. Medallions are made for either side and a cutout of Ming Toy is supposed to support the fan.

In the stage version the fabric is painted up with a Japanese design. For lobby work this can be done on translucent paper with transparent paints and lighted from behind, a cutout replacing the soloist. Wings of wall paper can be used to isolate the fan from the other lobby work.

The lobby is from the Hamilton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., and the stage set from the Broadway Theatre, Richmond, Va.

Chicago Has Ideas on Third Alarm Run

Most of the work done for the Third Alarm has been along the same lines and does not stand repetition, but J. J. Sampson, the Chicago F. B. O. exploiter, has devised some new kinks.

He made the usual deal to give the Chicago Fire Department fund a small cut of the profits, but in addition he helped the Fire Commissioner put over a prevention campaign which had nothing whatever to do with The Third Alarm, so far as mention was concerned.

This was a modification of the tin can matinee in that the commissioner appealed to the Boy Scouts to clean up back yards as their one good deed a day, and so lessen the fire hazard. There was not even an indirect tie-up to The Third Alarm, but it made for interest in fire matters, and so it applied to the later work.

The picture opened at Barbee's Loop Theatre, and the department not only loaned the last of the horse drawn apparatus, still held in reserve, but it parked that and an old "brake" machine in front of the theatre for two weeks, making the necessary arrangement with the Police Department.

Supplied Auto Equipment

It also supplied the last word in automobile equipment to parade the loop district, splitting the banners between the attraction and fire prevention, and on one day a fireman leaped from the roof into a safety net.

In connection with this Sampson advertised for a girl to do the jump. He did not advertise that one would jump, he just advertised. A lot of girls replied, but did not get the job.

Ice in the river prevented a display by a fire boat, but this will come later, for the commissioner has promised to extend the help of the department even to the neighborhood houses.

And as a last touch the contents of the lobby were insured.

First Easter, then Decoration Day. Pull some special stunts.

A First National Release

TWO OF THE FANS USED TO ADVERTISE CONSTANCE TALMADGE IN "EAST IS WEST"

One is a lobby display in a false proscenium and the other is the set for a stage prologue, but both can be used for lobby and foyer work, and will be better here than as a prologue, which does not help sell the picture. The lobby fan is made from crepe paper and wall paper of appropriate design and can be constructced with little trouble and at a cost within the reach of the small house.

A Selznick Release

THE FLASHER CALENDAR WHICH SHOWED WHICH WAS THE WEEK

William Beddell, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, had a pair of these calendars to hook in to the use of the same idea on various distributed novelties. It brought a substantial increase in receipts at a very small cost.

Tied Up the Front to Novel Idea

It is not what it costs but what it brings which counts in exploitation. But if you can bring in much at small cost, it is better than usual. Dollars for a dime are more profitable than those which cost half a dollar each.

William Beddell, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, recently put over "One Week of Love" to a one- third better than usual business with small cost through a combination advertisement.

Calendars Everywhere

He used blotters and heralds with a February calendar with the 18 to 24 given to a line for "One Week of Love." He also used the same idea in his other advertising.

Meanwhile he had two calendars painted for the two fronts of the house, with a translucent insert for the legend, backed by a flasher circuit. During the day it was a straight sign, but at night the light would blink off and on and get unusual attention. It hooked up to all of the earlier advertising with a positive connection, and it cost less than usual to make the display.

Big Foyer Display Told of Knighthood

A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, made a full foyer display for advance work on "When Knighthood Was in Flower." He used cutout figures of knights on either side of the main entrance doors and set another to guard the staircase display.

This corner showed a state barge masked in with draperies. A figure of the star in boy's dress stood alongside to keep the knight company. All around the walls were emblazoned shields and penons, and a mounted figure on a richly caparisoned horse was stood upon the ledge of the mezzanine balcony, apparently in imminent danger of falling off.

The entire display was tastefully planned and suggested the richness of the production itself.

Found Other Minnies

Teaser handbills asking all who sympathized with Minnie, the homely little heroine of Mickey Neilan's production, to communicate with her were shot out by the Murray Theatre, Richmond, Ind., of course without revealing the connection with the play.

Several hundred communications were received, most of which were probably written by would-be humorists, but there seemed to be a few who really bit and sympathized with Minnie because their own cases were so similar.

Of course there was no reference to the picture on the throwaway, but all who were so lonely and so hungry for the appearance of love that they wrote love letters to themselves were asked to write to Minnie. It was merely a joke teaser, but many took it seriously.

If you try this stunt don't give publicity to the genuine letters. They may get a laugh, but they will also cost you business if revealed. Use the purposely funny ones for press work.

Some Bottle

Building up on the bottle heralds and the small bottles of liquid used for "The Stranger's Banquet," Harry Crull and M. Reilly, of the Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., had built a bottle sixteen feet high and five feet in circumference. This was placed on a silvered tray and carted around the streets with cotton foam exuding from the neck. Cutouts from the 24-sheet of the 23 stars were placed around the float below the tray, and there was a heavy distribution of the bottle heralds to support the idea. There were also 2,000 chair heralds and 1,000 toast books given out, many of the latter in a dance hall conducted by the management of an opposition house.

Books and heralds were also given out at the various business lunch club affairs and at the soda stands bottles of grape juice in the one-drink size were relabeled.

And 15,000 paper napkins were landed on a chain of six lunch rooms. The business would have surprised George M. Cohan, who was born in Providence and has been knocking the town ever since.

Our Missing Words

Here is a simple little memory test for you to practice on.

The manager of the Temple Theatre, Hamilton, Ont., offered ———— for the local ———— most resembling S———— h———— in B—a—n of the N—r—h. Prizes were offered for the best trained dog, the one most nearly resembling S————h———— and the best groomed ————.

After the kids assembled at the theatre Mr. Morgan sprang a surprise and organized a p————e for the boys and their pets. No parade, no pass.

He darkened the lobby to let the flasher lamps in the dog's eyes show to better advantage, using blue illumination.

A Warner Brothers Release

MAKING A FRONT FROM A POSTER CUTOUT

H. B. Clarke, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, took the 24-sheet for "Heroes of the Street," and cut out the policeman and Wes Barry looking at each other, making them supporters for his cross banner, painting the telegraph poles to the banner.

Swanked the Peg to Sell a Horse

Showing what can be done with a straight campaign now and then, the Fox representative, G. De Grandcourt, sold "Just Tony" in Winnipeg lately with stress on a new angle.

Some time before the picture was due at the Province Theatre Mr. De Grandcourt wrote some special stories for the paper about the latest American slang phrase, Just Tony, which it was cleverly suggested, was a logical successor to "all jake." They knew that "tony" was a synonym for bang up, and words of similar import, and the stuff was accepted at its face value. It was promptly adopted and all things good were "just tony."

Then the merchants were hooked up to a double deck, advertising their goods in the curious phrase from the States, with a competition bringing in many replies as a snapper.

Societies Helped

Then the Province grabbed at the tail of the craze and announced that "Just Tony" would presently be shown an excited public. First of all a preview was given the Humane Society and the boy and girl scouts, and the kid organizations liked it so well that there was a special showing one morning for the boys and on another morning for the girls. The Humane Society sent out 2,000 special letters of endorsement.

A tableau frame seven feet tall was slid into a store window and a jeweler showed a plaster horse's head in a diamond horseshoe said to be valued at $100,000—which sounds like Golem figures.

They stood them out every night for a week, and the newspapers had no kick coming because they got all the extra advertising from the co-operative page.

It just goes to show once more that almost anything is good the first time, and generally more often than that.

ONCE MORE THE ORIGINAL NORMA TALMADGE GOWN IS SEEN

This time it is one of the elaborate costumes from "The Voice from the Minaret," and it was used in Syracuse by the Strand Theatre along with a hook-up to the Norma-Lorna Doone pearls, which can be seen on Norma's left arm.

Mostly Slides

The day he received word that he would get "When Knighthood Was in Flower," C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbus, S. C., started a slide campaign on the picture. These were largely along personal guarantee lines, but there was a frequent change of copy. The result was that when the picture came he saved money on general exploitation, but he took extra space for an open letter, and he tacked window cards, back to back, on stakes and planted these through the better residential districts.

Preview a Help

A real help was a preview to the Better Films Committee and the newspaper men which brought a strong endorsement from the committee which the newspapers ran along with a more carefully written notice than would have been possible had they been required to wait for the opening show.

Had Dancing Jockeys for the Hottentot

Fourteen jockeys were used on the second week of the run of "The Hottentot" at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, and they had to work for their money.

After riding the streets all day they rode one evening to a popular dance hall, where they left their blanketed nags outside while they went in to tread a few measures. Then they did expert judging on the "race dance" which was staged as a competitive number, prizes being awarded the couples who best suggested a horse race and a dance at the same time. The whole thing was a Hottentot Handicap Night, and gave the dance palace a chance to do some business bringing advertising while it sold the play idea. You can work it too.

Dealers in photographic supplies were sold on the photographs of the race and sports wear houses made displays of sport clothes with illustrations from the play in the form of stills.

LONDON LIKES THE CUTOUT LETTERS FOR TITLE USE

This shows the Broadway Cinema, Deptford, with a ballyhoo for Constance Talmadge in "East Is West." At the back is a Chinese mandarin who, with the girls, takes part in a prologue. Deptford is one of the suburbs of the City of London.

What's Your Record?

Someone out in Topeka made 2,772 words out of the letters contained in "Douglas MacLean in The Hottentot," and the Isis Theatre paid a small prize for the stunt. G. L. Hooper and his publicity man, Raymond B. Jones, evolved the stunt out of their memories of the past and landed it on the State Journal. The old ones are still good.

And utilizing another whiskered stunt they stenciled horseshoes on the sidewalks, all pointing in the direction of the Isis.

Anyhow it was a public benefit in that it got more persons in to see the nice little comedy.

Another on Jackie

The Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., found a good new one for Oliver Twist. It sold the daily paper on a "Mrs. Coogan Asks Advice" feature. Presumably Mrs. Coogan wanted to know how other mothers in America would bring up a nine-year-old boy who was perfectly normal except that he was the best known kid in America and had already earned more than a million dollars through his efforts.

It appealed to the inherent fondness for advice giving, and the mail stacked high. It's a darned good thing for Jackie that Mrs. Coogan will not see the letters. For a simple stunt this is a whizzer. Try it out.

Bill Robson Has the Bottle Idea

Bill Robson, the Pittsburgh Coldwynner, took up the bottle idea for the Stranger's Banquet in Richmond, Va., using a four-ounce bottle filled with some fluid and with a label starting off "Treat yourself" in large type with a small "see" followed by the title and details.

He got the Colonial Theatre a half column news write up by an imaginative reporter who told how one woman had tried to clean gloves with the compound and another had used it for a shampoo.

Perhaps it looked like Scotch when Bill put it out, but the bottle he sends in as a sample looks as though it had whiskers, for it has developed a heavy sediment and even the office boy declines to be used as a sampler in the interest of advertising science.

The bottles themselves gained interest, but the chief value of the stunt was the well written story it called forth. That was worth more than the bottles themselves, though of course there would have been no story without the bottles.

THIS WOULD LOOK MORE ATTRACTIVE IN COLORS

That was what gave the charm to this rather conventional display for "The Strangers' Banquet" in the lobby of the Strand Theatre, Seattle, Wash. The paper was brightly colored and it made a fine flash, with cutouts on all the doors.

Dolled the Castle

When Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., put on "When Knighthood Was in Flower," he made a castle front with jogs to fit the sides of the arch and with a centre gateway in advance of the building line of the castle. This is better than the straight across style. Stands of arms and shields were placed upon the wall. On the top was the 24-sheet cutout of Miss Davies and the smaller figures, set in a row.

It would have been a little better to have used only the head for the top of the wall, setting the cutouts in store windows or on the sidewalk, since the head is so large it dwarfs the rest of the display. Moreover it looks less important when shoved over to the side.

The jousting figures would have made a fine centre for some window display, and could have worked their way in almost anywhere.

Beat the Ordinance

You cannot do much street advertising in Savannah without getting up against a local ordinance, but the return of the Rhine troops was too much for J. G. Evins, of the Lucas Theatre. He could not let that get by him.

He bannered his automobile and rode up and down the line of the parade, past the files of spectators and then he went back to the theatre and chartered 25 newsboys to wear window cards on their backs.

It made double the usual business for three days on "Dr. Jack."

Kinda Wet

Sometimes it does not pay to go by titles. In a description of a prologue on "The Christian," planned by a house leader, it is told how the curtain rises on the courtyard of a Spanish mission at sunrise. Six altar boys escort a priest on the stage and after blessing them he sings The Rosary.

There is absolutely no Spanish atmosphere in "The Christian," and we think that many devout Catholics will find the idea of a priest singing a passionate love song more than merely offensive. In our opinion this is one of the rottenest pieces of prologue production on record and positively hurtful.

You Can, Too

Over in New Jersey the First National Exchange got out a neat rose bouquet for "Mighty Lak a Rose," laying these off to the managers. The first fifty got others asking where the possessors obtained them and that, of course, involved the use of the house name and play title. If you wish, you can have a leaf printed up with the title, but the anonymous rose seems to work better.

You don't have to wait for your exchange to get busy. You can get them yourself from any jobber in milliners' supplies, and you can get the jobbers address from your local hat store. Query the exchange first, however.

WHO SAID THE SALOON HAD BEEN LEGISLATED AWAY?

After the more or less authentic barrooms for "Ten Nights in a Barroom" comes "The Face on the Barroom Floor," with this capital display from the Fox Theatre, Springfield, Mass. All the display seems to lack is the license and the w. k. kick.

Hung Lloyd High

Most of the large cutouts of Harold Lloyd are planned to stand upon the lobby floor, but Ray Beall, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., used the cutout trimmed at the collar instead of at the shoulders and suspended it from the ceiling. This was flanked by two paintings supplied by the exchange, and a cutout from the six sheet.

The stock teaser stuff was used, along with window cards printed up "Dr. Jack, Fun Specialist." Later regular window cards were put in the same windows, and a street worker was sent around town in a frock coat and carrying a black bag with the same text.

Small Town Stuff

So far the exploiters seem to have overlooked one stunt for "The Hottentot." Most small towns take a certain sort of pride in the local "bad" horse, which cannot be completely broken. Borrow the nag and lead him through the streets with "Maybe you think I'm a bad actor, but see "The Hottentot" at the Dream Theatre and you'll know what a bad horse really is

You can follow this up with a challenge to Sam Harrington to come down and ride your local terror.

MAKING GOOD ON FIFTH AVENUE FOR "POOR MEN'S WIVES"

Poor men's wives have no business over on Fifth avenue. It's tough enough on rich men's wives, but the recent run at the Criterion carried this central display in the Malinson window through a hook-up with Barbara La Marr and the silks.

Asked for Ads

Because he had "When Knighthood Was in Flower" to open on February 14, Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., used valentines in two styles for his advertising.

Four-page sentimental valentines were put out with the play message on the third page and were handled in place of heralds. And the same number of post card valentines were printed up "This is the Knight—the World loves a lover." The few who did not get a valentine came down to the theatre to ask for them, which is a more than 100 per cent distribution.

You can adapt the idea to any holiday and postcards cost little when you get them by the thousand, and you can do that if you work far enough ahead.

Just imagine George and the cherry tree and the line: If George Washington were alive today he would say that Our Feature was the best play he had ever seen, and you know George was no liar."

Sought Better Class

Feeling that the lobby display and lithographs would sell "When Knighthood Was in Flower" to the usual patron, L. R. Towns, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, bent his energies toward getting in the better class of people, who affect to regard the pictures as entertainment not worthy their notice.

He spent a lot of care in the preparation of a form letter to drag them in and sent this to a select list. It was not a straight form letter, for that would not have appealed to the class of persons he was after.

He also went after the women's clubs and got them talking about the play several weeks in advance of its coming.

Teasing Minnie

For the run of "Minnie" at the Capitol Theatre, Bessie Mack, the press agent, devised a set of one-sheet teasers for the elevated platforms and other good locations. They were teasers only in the sense that they teased interest in the play, for the Capitol Theatre was prominently displayed in all six of the sheets.

The essential copy for these posters was: Girls, listen! The secret's out. Beauty is yours. Minnie was a fright but now, Oh Boy!

Hey Minnie! How'd you like to ride to Riverborough? We'll start from the Capitol Theatre.

Hey, Minnie! What's this scandal we've been hearing about you? Please explain.

Boxing. Capitol Theatre. Minnie vs. a Bunch of Cats.

Boys don't write mash notes to Minnie. She writes her own.

She wrote letters to herself, poor Min.

All of these were displayed in strong block type, black on white, and they helped to get interest for the First National production.

Old But Handy

Keith's National Theatre, Louisville, put over "Money, Money, Money" with a treasure hunt and the "What would you do with a million dollars?" symposium. Both are old, but they made money for the National because they had not been done in Louisville lately.

Racing Stuff Will Speed Up Hottentot

Even though "The Hottentot" may not appear to need the advantages of special exploitation, it lends itself so well to some forms that it is almost criminal to overlook the gifts the gods provide. The Albany Theatre, Schenectady, used the whole layout and got all the turf followers in to see the speedy comedy.

One of the best angles is the "Daily One Best Bet" on the lines of the dope sold on the news stands. This can either be enclosed in an envelope or folded so the contents do not show and stapled through. In any event it should be printed up: "Sam Harrington's Guaranteed Daily Winner. Try today's service FREE." Inside Sam should briefly assure the reader that he can bet his socks on "The Hottentot" winning the chase at the specified theatre. Make a real effort to suggest on the cover that this is a new brand of racing information given free the first to introduce it. Get plenty on the stands and slip the newsdealer a couple of tickets to give you a big display.

Get an added line on the sporting page's racing information if you can. After the probable winners at the winter tracks have "The Hottentot" tipped as a certain winner at the theatre. You may have to use a lot of argument to get the sporting editor to put this "joke" over, but sell him on the racing stuff in the picture, slip him some passes and if possible give him an advance showing.

The usual blanketed racer, the chart and all the rest is available, but the sure fire is the racing dope. And if there is a state or local ordinance against the dissemination of racing news, so much the better. Get the District Attorney to investigate the apparent violation of the law, and see that the reporters know all about it—through him.

Set to Music

The words and music of the chorus of the plugger song was the exploitation stunt of A. B. Morrison, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, on "'Til We Meet Again." This was flanked by a portrait of the star and a full length figure, but the chief attraction was the musical score. That was different.

MAKING A BOOK WINDOW SELL FOR MORE THAN USUAL

This scene model is more labor than a straight still, but it will pull a hundred spectators for every one the still gets. This is part of the exploitation on "Oliver Twist" at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles. Fifty stunts were used.

Real Book Heralds

Jack Hellman, Paramounteer, has invented a real "book herald." He was in Valley City, Minn., helping John Piller, of the Grand Theatre, to put over The Pride of Palomar.

They wanted to get the book in the store window and to carry the point they purchased six copies. Five of them were laid off to the newspaper as prizes in an essay contest. The sixth was vivisected and to each sheet was attached a card telling that this was one page of 312 of mighty interesting reading. Get the book and read the rest and see the play, etc.

Autographed Copies

The book yielded only 156 heralds at a cost of 75 cents, plus printing, but four or five books, overprinted in red, would make more than their cost in any town for a just once.

Marjorie Daw autographed the prize copies and Hellman did not even add "per J. H." No one could prove it was not Marjorie.

Hooking to Church Sold Feature Seats

Because If You Believe It, It's So is a good "church" picture, G. M. Wallis, of the Iroquois Theatre, Petrolia, sold off the idea to a local church, and the sale went so well that the church wants to repeat after Lent, and Mr. Wallis is more than willing.

Meantime, he is going to let the Hospital Guild in on The Young Rajah, figuring that if his split is more than he stands to take on a straight sale and still gives money to local organizations, he takes a profit in both cash and prestige.

If You Believe It was put over with the usual teaser stuff; impossible statements with the title qualifying the apparent lies.

The church hook-up on the right sort of story is about the best local card a house can play, and Mr. Wallis played it straight, place and show.

Don't just say "It's a good picture." Prove it.

Naming the Baby

Apparently there are great possibilities in the naming the baby stunt, which was first worked on Omar the Tentmaker, in Omaha, and which has more recently been worked by L. R. Towns, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, and the Birmingham News.

The News, in connection with Back Home and Broke, offered $25 to the first boy baby born within specified dates to carry the name of Thomas Meighan, the money presumably coming from Meighan himself. The money was awarded Thomas Meighan Scales, of Coaling, Ala.

The rules provided that the child must be born within the specified period and be named after the star, a copy of the birth certificate attesting these facts to be accepted as evidence. This money was deposited in a savings bank until the child becomes twenty-one. This to carry out the idea of the title.

Generally the savings bank can be persuaded to make the award.

In Birmingham the stunt brought results at regular prices that were close to When Knighthood was in Flower at an advanced scale; which tells its own story.

Rode the Band

Generally when you put out a street car ballyhoo you have to get your noise maker elsewhere, but in Charlotte, N. C., they will rent you the car and an eleven piece band made up of street car employes.

Claud Lee, of the Imperial Theatre, chartered both for six hours the opening day of Gloria Swanson in My American Wife and with some other stunts, including a 24-sheet on a remodeled building in the business section he got a 60 per cent boost.

DRUMBAR LIBELS THE KENTUCKY THOROUGHBRED, BUT HE GOT A BUCKETFUL OF COIN

He and W. F. Brock, resident manager of the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, framed this paddock idea for "The Kentucky Derby," and achieved the effect at a surprisingly low cost where the area covered is considered. Just the paling fence, the judges' stand and the banner, but it looked like a full setting and was as good as a fully enclosed lobby display costing much more.

Stranger's Banquet on Many Menu Cards

They picked on the restaurants of Milwaukee to put over The Strangers Banquet, hooking 47 to a set of menu sheets, of which 30,000 were distributed. All carried the same type matter, exclusive of the name of the restaurant, and there was a blank space eight inches deep for the mimeographed menu. They were all run off at the same time, effecting a decided saving in the cost of make-ready, the only change being the insertion of the new name.

THE MENU TOP

These were confined to the cheaper sort of restaurants where the daily dishes are run off by means of some duplicatng device.

A special card was run off for the Wisconsin Hotel for the Sunday dinner, and the five rooms of a lunch chain were supplied with 25,000 paper napkins in addition to the 30,000 which went with the menu forms to the 47 other places. It all helped to make Ascher's Merrill Theatre the best advertised house in town with 95,000 pieces of advertising, the additional 5,000 being blotters split between the attraction and the club breakfasts at the Hotel Charlotte.

In addition there was a co-operative page, in which the contest was the correct naming of the 23 stars, one in each advertisement, and Gimbel Brothers made a heavy tie-up with the Grosset & Dunlap edition of the book.

In addition to all this there were used 10,000 paper heralds, 5,000 chair heralds and 2,500 toast books.

TEN BANNERS AND FIVE BOOKS WERE "THE CHRISTIAN" DISPLAY
The cut does not show it, but each of the books carried a different sales message, as did the ten banners above when the Tourneur production reached the Plaza Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla. The display is all inside the building line.

One Cent Tickets Gave an Overflow

Maj. I. C. Holloway gave a one-cent matinee to put over Heroes of the Street, and the kids liked the idea so well that he had an overflow. As the one-cent tickets were not good later, and the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga., was packed by three o'clock, he sent the rest over to the sister house to see The Kentucky Derby.

The idea was to sell Barry to the adults through the children, and though the business was a flop the second day, because of continuous rain, he did well enough the third day to chalk up a 20-cent increase on the three-day run.

Managers who are not using the one-cent ticket scheme are losing one of the most profitable exploitation stunts. The idea works on both children and adults and gives the most desirable verbal advertising.

Put Over Christian for Five Day Run

San Bernardino, Calif., is not a long run town and five days for one title is reckless gambling, but J. G. Knapp, who owns three houses in town, decided that he could make the grade with The Christian.

He started early with a banner made from the title on the 24-sheet for the lobby display while the cutouts from the same paper were utilized as stands. He also put out five 24-sheets on the boards and 150 window cards, at the same time arranging for a store display of the Grosset & Dunlap edition of the book.

Made Good Profits

Next he arranged a pre-showing for the local editor, who was so well pleased that he put over a deal for an essay contest on "The Christian Spirit in Modern Life" which netted about eight columns of copy; three of the stories making the front page of the second section of the newspaper.

Then he laid out a nine-day advertising campaign with a change of copy daily, making his big point that New York, Los Angeles and San Bernardino were to see the picture first run. Later he ran the Los Angeles criticisms and finally came down to "only two days more" and the "last chance."

He kept business up for five days and not only made his immediate profit, but gave the picture idea greater distinction.

Lent will soon be over and you won't have that excuse. Get busy and hustle now.

ANOTHER CASTLE PERAMBULATOR FOR "PRISONER OF ZENDA"

Easy for Irwin

An entire business block in Brainerd, Minn., burned down just before George D. Irwin was due to play The Third Alarm at the Park Theatre. As soon as he could get a bill poster into the lot without burning his shoes off, Mr. Irwin had some 24-sheets up and then he sold the city officials on a fire prevention drive.

This made it easy to borrow the fire department for a ballyhoo, and the school board advised the students to come and see the dangers of fire-carelessnes. It resulted in packed houses at a small outlay.

The opening night railroad fuses were fastened to the marquise and touched off just before the doors opened, an alarm being turned in which brought most of the apparatus and a large proportion of the population right up to the theatre doors.

Combination Display Uses Stock Design

This 100 line by 4 from the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, shows how a plan book cut can be worked into a general design. It might have been drawn especially for this use, but it was not. It is merely that the home artist saw how he could extend the idea to give him what he wanted in the way of a figure without having to draw one, and he simply elaborated his own border around the pasted design. When managers come to a better appreciation of the many uses to which the plan book material may be put, we think that we shall hear less about inefficient books. The books are all right, particularly those gotten out by the older companies. The greater trouble lies with the artist and manager who complains that the cut offered is not precisely what he wants. If any press department could satisfy the
